PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-FIFTH CONGRESS SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 29, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee upon this day set apart and remembered by the whole Christian world as the day of supreme sacrifice, a day which touches the foundation of our civilization, a day that invites us into the immediate presence of God through an atonement acceptable in Thy sight. We pray that the spirit of the day may enter upon us, and that we may go forward in our work under its inspiration, bearing in mind that the success of our work must come through our sacrifice, and that service to mankind at the cost of suffering is the highest service that Thou dost permit Thy children to render to their kind. Hear us in this our prayer to-day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. THOMAS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Baird	Gerry	Nelson	Smoot
Bankhead	Gronna	New	Sterling
Beckham	Henderson	Norris	Stone
Borah	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overman	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Thomas
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Poindexter	Thompson
Culberson	Kellogg	Reed	Tillman
Cummins	Kendrick	Saulsbury	Trammell
Curtis	Kenyon	Shafroth	Vardaman
Dillingham	Kirby	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Fall	Knox	Sherman	Warren
Fletcher	McKellar	Shields	Watson
France	McLean	Smith, Ga.	Wolcott
Frelinghuysen	McNary	Smith, Md.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is necessarily absent due to illness in his family.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My colleague [Mr. GOFF] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] are detained on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) authorizing the granting of insurance under the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended by the act approved October 6, 1917, on application by a person other than the person to be insured.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 3401. An act to authorize the President to reduce temporarily the course of instruction at the United States Naval Academy; and

S. 3404. An act to authorize the President to drop from the rolls any naval or Marine Corps officer absent without leave for three months, or who has been convicted of any offense punishable by confinement in the penitentiary by the civil authorities, and prohibiting such officer's reappointment.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President I send to the desk a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of South Dakota touching the question of equal suffrage, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas the House of Representatives of the United States has passed a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending equal suffrage to the women of our Nation; and

Whereas the proposed amendment is now before the Senate of the United States for consideration; and

Whereas the Legislature of South Dakota at its last regular session passed a full suffrage amendment submitting the same to a vote of the people at the next regular election: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of South Dakota (the Senate concurring therein), That we urge upon the Senate of the United States to pass at once the Federal amendment establishing at home that democracy for which the men of this country have been called to fight for abroad; be it also

Resolved, That our Senators in Congress be requested to vote for the equal-suffrage amendment.

Resolved, That the resolution be sent to the President, the Vice President, and to our Senators.

[SEAL.] FRANK M. ROOD,
Secretary of State.

Mr. STERLING. I simply want to say with reference to the resolution that I shall not occupy the time of the Senate now, but a little later I hope to have the opportunity of addressing the Senate briefly on the subject matter of the resolution.

Mr. KENYON presented the petition of Rev. F. B. Nixon, pastor of the Whitfield Methodist Episcopal Church of Sioux City, Iowa, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of the Congregation of the Stone Presbyterian Church, of Brown City, Mich., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Local Grange No. 1566, Patrons of Husbandry, of Ann Arbor, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation fixing the prices on all commodities during the war, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. SHAFROTH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 1760) to authorize the sale and disposal of an island in the Coosa River, in the State of Alabama, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 337) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1889) revoking authority to lease Sibley Island, in the Missouri River, to the city of Bismarck, N. Dak. (Rept. No. 338); and

A bill (S. 3392) for furnishing water supply for miscellaneous purposes in connection with reclamation projects (Rept. No. 339).

LAND IN PORT ANGELES, WASH.

Mr. SHAFROTH. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 5351) providing for the disposal of certain lands in block 32 in the city of Port Angeles, State of Washington, and I submit a report (No. 336) thereon. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] to the bill, so that he can take such action as he desires in calling it up.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say that this is a bill of only about half a dozen lines. It is purely local and has been indorsed by all the departments. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all lots in block 32 in the city of Port Angeles, State of Washington, now reserved for Government purposes under an act entitled "An act providing for the reappraisement and sale of certain lands in the town site of Port Angeles, Wash., and for other purposes," approved March 16, 1912, except lots 1, 8, 9, 10, 16, and 17, shall be disposed of under and pursuant to the provisions of said act of March 16, 1912, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to proceed at once to carry out the provisions of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. FALL:

A bill (S. 4213) to correct the record of John W. Braden, alias Harry Milford (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 4214) granting a pension to Albert Grimes; and

A bill (S. 4215) granting a pension to Louis H. Roberts; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KELLOGG:

A bill (S. 4216) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the validity of the expenditures of the appropriations from the principal trust fund of the Chippewa Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH of Maryland:

A bill (S. 4217) to provide for the redistribution of general taxes and special assessments due and payable on real estate in the District of Columbia, in cases of subdivision or sales of land therein; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 4218) for the relief of purchasers from the State of Utah of lands in sections 2, 16, 32, and 36 in said State; to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 4219) prescribing the manner in which laborers or mechanics to be engaged in work upon public contracts may be procured, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 4220) to provide identification tickets and to compel their issuance to street railway passengers within the District of Columbia under certain conditions; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

LIST OF NONCOMBATANT OFFICERS.

Mr. NELSON. I submit a resolution and ask that it be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 220), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to furnish to the Senate, as soon as practicable, a list of the men to whom commissions in the Army have been issued and who are not now and who have not heretofore been placed in command or had charge of any troops in the service of the United States either here or abroad; the branch of the service in which such men have been commissioned.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

STANDARDIZATION OF WAGES.

Mr. KING. I ask that Senate resolution 174, directing the Committee on Education and Labor to inquire into the subject of labor having to do, directly or indirectly, with Government work, and report upon the advisability of establishing standards of wages for laborers employed in such work, be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

PROSECUTION OF THE WAR.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on next Tuesday, April 2, at the close of the morning business, if it meets with the approval of the Senate, I shall submit certain observations upon the imperative necessity of a better organization of the Nation for the successful prosecution of the war.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia submitted the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) authorizing the granting of insurance under the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended by the act approved October 6, 1917, on application by a person other than the person to be insured, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House, and agree to the same.

JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
HOKE SMITH,
REED SMOOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

T. W. SIMS,
SAM RAYBURN,
A. E. WINSLOW,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator from Georgia if this report is a substitute for the resolution which the Senator submitted several days ago.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is a substitute for the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well.

The report was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on March 29, 1918, approved and signed the following acts:

S. 3129. An act to provide for the disposition of the effects of deceased persons in the naval service;

S. 3130. An act to amend section 1570 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

S. 3445. An act to authorize the payment of gun pointers and gun captains while temporarily absent from their regular stations, and for other purposes;

S. 1546. An act to permit the use of certain refined products of petroleum as stores on steam vessels carrying passengers; and

S. 3689. An act authorizing the Postmaster General to cancel or readjust the screen-wagon contract of H. H. Hogan, at Kansas City, Mo.

AIRCRAFT PHOTOGRAPHS—OFFICIAL BULLETIN.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, a certain matter deserves being brought to the attention of the Senate, and by way of introducing it I send to the desk a copy of the Official Bulletin issued under date of Thursday, March 28, which reached the public this morning. I ask the Secretary to read the article marked upon the last page of the Bulletin.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read. The Chair hears no objection.

The SECRETARY. From the Official Bulletin, Thursday, March 28, 1918, reading the last article in the Bulletin, on page 8:

WAR PHOTOGRAPHS FOR RELEASE.

A partial list of photographs, released March 30, by the division of pictures, Committee on Public Information, herewith is presented.

A complete list of all photographs may be had upon application.

Copies of these pictures may be obtained for private-collection purposes, at 10 cents each, by application to Division of Pictures, Committee on Public Information, 10 Jackson Place, Washington, D. C. In writing, order by number and inclose coin well wrapped.

Stereopticon slides of photographs listed below may be obtained at 15 cents each.

6858. Aeroplane Bodies Ready for Shipment "Over There": These aeroplane bodies, the acme of engineering art, are ready for shipment to France. Though hundreds have already been shipped, our factories have reached quantity production, and thousands upon thousands will soon follow.

6859. The Result of Long Experiment: Scientists and engineers have worked long in our aeroplane factories before perfection was attained, and now that success has crowned their efforts, the factories have been put on a quantity-production basis, and many thousands of these efficient machines will be sent to France.

6860. Speeding up Aeroplane Production: These cylinders for our perfect aeroplane engine are the product of the best engineers and scientists in this country, and now that perfection finally has been attained, the engine factories have been placed on a quantity-production basis. Huge amounts will be turned out to supply our ever-increasing air fleet in France with motive power until victory is ours.

6861. Building Airplane Bodies: These carriages are models of efficiency and are built along the models furnished by the best engineers of this country. They are now being manufactured by the thousands and rushed to France to become a part of our ever-increasing air fleet.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, it must be apparent to every Senator, as he listened to that article being read, that those captions which were attached to photographs fairly bristle with misinformation. Furthermore, the Committee on Public Information has been completely informed that those captions are utterly inaccurate, and still persists in publishing them to the American people under the seal of the Government.

On Wednesday morning last there came into my possession a copy of this release containing the four captions just read by the Secretary, each caption descriptive of a photograph to be sent to the press for publication and to be placed upon sale to private individuals or for collections.

I immediately called up the Committee on Public Information and discussed the matter with the director of the division of pictures, under whose charge this matter falls. I called his attention to the grossly misleading statements, particularly that hundreds of airplanes have already been shipped to France when we know that only one has gone. He admitted the information was misleading. He said his understanding was that these particular captions applied only to training planes. The Committee on Military Affairs looked that matter up and further corroborated the well-known fact that no training planes have been sent to France.

We then sent for the director of the division of pictures and had him before the Military Committee. We called his attention to this grossly inaccurate statement. He admitted before the committee in open session that it was misleading and flamboyant. This was on Wednesday afternoon. He laid a part of the blame upon one of his subordinates, a gentleman by the name of Maurice Strunsky, who he said wrote those captions. We had him, Strunsky, brought before us to find out where he got any such information as is contained in those captions, and he could give us no satisfactory explanation whatever.

The chief of the division of pictures informed the Military Affairs Committee that he would stop the publication of those captions. It was to be done at our request, and yet, Mr. President, here we are two days later witnessing the publication of these falsehoods in the Official Bulletin, upon which the people of the United States rely for correct information.

I do not know what the Senate can do about such things. We have no direct jurisdiction over the Committee on Public Information. That organization knew that those statements were misleading, to use the most charitable term, and yet they persist in giving this misinformation to the American public at a time like this.

I think it is well worthy of the attention of the Senate, and, as I have said on a former occasion, it is time that the Committee on Public Information was censored.

Mr. KNOX. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. Is it not a fact that the justification for the existence of the Official Bulletin is that the public is apt to be misinformed if it relies upon the secular press, and that they are entitled to the absolute facts, and hence the Official Bulletin?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course that is the theory upon which the Committee on Public Information was formed. I doubt if it is conducted in that spirit.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I was as much surprised this morning as was the Senator from New York when I saw on the last page of the Official Bulletin of March 28 this article. The Committee on Military Affairs had good reason to congratulate itself that by the merest accident one of its members secured a copy of these so-called bulletins in time to investigate their origin and to stop their general publication. Immediately upon his receipt of it, or very soon afterwards, the Committee on Military Affairs assembled and considered it, with the result as stated by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. The two men who seem to have been responsible for it are a Mr. Rubel, the head of the division of pictures, and Mr. Maurice Strunsky, whose business is to write bulletins. These bulletins, generally speaking, after they have been composed by Mr. Strunsky, are submitted to Mr. Rubel for his inspection before they are sent upon their mission to the various newspapers of the country. In this instance Mr. Strunsky acted evidently upon his own responsibility, and prepared and mailed the bulletins without consulting his superior. Why, I do not know, unless it be that they were of such tremendous importance that it was necessary to get them into the mail and on their way upon the instant.

Mr. President, the characterization which the Senator from New York made of these bulletins was extremely mild. With the exception of some matters of detail which relate to the efforts of men to perfect the airplane engines and perhaps some parts of ships, they are absolute and unmitigated falsehoods. I might go further and use what was once known as "the shorter and uglier term." The only justification for them was the furnishing to Mr. Rubel by Col. Deeds, of the aviation section, four pictures, which were evidently taken in the factory rooms where machines are being manufactured and which disclose the assemblage of a large number of uncompleted and some completed training machines, engines, and parts of engines. The pictures make a very attractive showing and justify the assertion of the aviation section that it has an abundance of training planes. The rest is largely the work of the imagination.

Mr. Strunsky, 31 years of age, says that when these pictures were received by him—and I do not pretend to give his exact words—he drew partly from his imagination and partly from his construction of an announcement of the Secretary of War upon the 21st day of February the conclusions which he places here as facts. It is all imagination, showing that Mr. Strunsky has a very highly imaginative mentality, partly Oriental and partly American [laughter] the combination of which results in bulletins of this character.

My condemnation of this incident I want to concentrate upon its appearance in the Official Bulletin after the positive assurance of these gentlemen that it would not appear at all. If an "official bulletin" is good for anything, it should be because of its name and what the name implies. That which is official is generally considered to be reliable; it ought to be reliable under all circumstances. Those receiving this bulletin will very properly regard the statements made here as true, and very naturally their disappointment will be extremely great when they learn that they are not only untrue, but that the untruth is stated in an official document which they are taxed to support.

Mr. President, there can be no justification whatever for this. The Bulletin spreads, in this instance at least, among the people four statements upon an extraordinarily important subject which are not true. I think Congress should have something to say about publications of this character at this time. We are confronted at present with a crisis of extraordinary magnitude.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia and Mr. NEW addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. THOMAS. Just a moment. The subject of the statements is so interwoven with success or defeat, one upon which the sentiment and expectation of the people are so keen, that the communication of false information is bound to react upon the morale.

Now, I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Did the Senator from Colorado bring out clearly the fact—I was diverted for a moment—that the man at the head of that bureau in the Signal Service went before the Committee on Military Affairs and admitted that this statement was untrue?

Mr. THOMAS. He is not in the Signal Service.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In what service is he?

Mr. THOMAS. He is in the Public Information Service.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But he was the agent of the Public Information Service over at the Signal Service Bureau, was he not?

Mr. THOMAS. No.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Well, who was it that had charge of this publication, who admitted that the description contained in this paper was untrue; apologized for it; and said he had never seen it, or else steps would have been taken to prevent it being sent out?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, this gentleman, Mr. Rubel, admitted that the accounts were flamboyant. I think perhaps he could have gone further——

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. Just a moment. But he disowned direct responsibility for their production. When we called his attention to the facts he admitted their untruth; gave us his word that the Bulletin should not be published; and that he would instruct every newspaper in the country to which they had been mailed not to publish them.

Now, I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, the Senator has just, in effect, answered the question I rose to ask. I merely rose to ask him if he did not think that this was primarily a direct fraud upon the press of the country?

Mr. THOMAS. Primarily, secondarily, directly, and indirectly. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, we asked Mr. Strunsky where he was born and what his business was. He was born and raised in the city of New York; he is 31 years of age; and his chief recommendation for the place was that he was connected with a magazine at one time. I can not state the name of it accurately, but I think it is the Universal Animated Weekly. [Laughter.] He also gave the names of a few of those who had recommended him, and stated that his application for employment was to Mr. Rubel. I asked him if he had any connection with Mr. Creel in the matter of his employment, and it seems that he has never met Mr. Creel, the head of the bureau, which discloses the fact that subordinates in the Bureau of Information are hiring other subordinates in the Bureau of Information and endowing them with authority of the most extraordinary character, without even so much as consulting the head of the bureau.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. REED. I want to ask the Senator if he does not think in this instance that that is an advantage rather than a disadvantage? [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS. Well, I will not contend with the Senator very strenuously upon that subject; but the serious side of it is this: This man says that his business is to write bulletins, and that recently he has been writing hundreds of them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Twenty a day.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; some 20 a day; so that his output of bulletins may have had something to do with the processes of his imagination concerning the output of airplanes; in any event, if we could only have one airplane for every bulletin that this man grinds out on his own responsibility there would be no question about the result on the French front in this crisis.

Mr. President, he writes bulletins upon all subjects; and when written by this inexperienced young man they pass the supervision of one scarcely older than himself before finally going to the press, give to these two obscure and irresponsible individuals a power of disseminating information, both true and false, that seems to have no limitation whatever, in consequence of which, through the machinery of the Bureau of Information, it is difficult to place an estimate upon the extent to which the people can be deceived and deluded, whatever the motive inspiring the statements.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia and Mr. POINDEXTER addressed the Chair.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield, first, to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator criticizes the unknown or irresponsible men lower down for this work. What better could be expected from them when the Official Bulletin prints this story after it has been developed and admitted that it is utterly false?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator merely anticipated me. I was about to say that the indictment after all must be laid against those who are at the head of the bureau and who develop such almost unprecedented lack of organization and such a general loose system of operation of the affairs of the bureau.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Did the committee when this Mr. Maurice Strunsky was before it inquire of him whether or not it is German propaganda that he is getting out?

Mr. THOMAS. No; the committee did not ask him that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It seems to me, Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, that it would have been an entirely relevant inquiry. The country is more or less familiar with the tremendous efforts that the Germans have made in spreading German propaganda among the people of their enemy countries. I can not myself for the moment imagine any German propaganda that would be of more benefit to Germany than to misinform and deceive the American people as to the extent and nature of their preparations for carrying on this conflict. If the American people are led to believe that we have airplanes when we have not any airplanes at all, it is manifestly crippling the power of this country, for the country is not going to make any effort where no effort seems to be necessary.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if I may so term it, we tried to take Mr. Strunsky's pedigree; we inquired of him the names of those who had recommended him to the bureau, their place of residence, and their business, having in view the probability of going further in that direction. It is a very grave thing, Mr. President, to charge anybody at this time with inciting German propaganda. That there is a multitude of it every one knows; that it should be suppressed goes without saying; but to fasten, especially in an incomplete official investigation, the charge upon any citizen, however humble, would, in my judgment, be a mistake. We do not want to do injustice to anyone. We have the material for further investigation. I will say very frankly to the Senator that when I first read this bulletin—and I read it again and a third time—I suspected it was the work of German propaganda. I will say that very frankly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. THOMAS. I am through, as a matter of fact; but I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I merely want to disclaim any purpose of making any charges against this young man. I do not know anything of him at all.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the disclaimer is entirely unnecessary.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But I do want to state, in order to make clear the point that the information which he is publishing, lulling the people into false security, is in the interest of Germany, and is the very kind of thing that Germany is trying to do and paying out a great deal of money to accomplish.

Mr. THOMAS. I did not misunderstand the Senator. I know that he had no such intention; but I quite agree with him that, whether designed for that purpose or not, it will have that effect, and hence the greater reason that something should be done to prevent its repetition.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order. I hope to get up Senate joint resolution 124 as soon as the morning business is over.

EXPENDITURE OF PUBLIC MONEYS FOR PROPAGANDA.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in connection with the criticism this morning of the expenditure of public moneys for the purpose of giving out information and conducting bureaus, I desire to call attention to the fact that we have another bureau that is engaged in carrying on propaganda at the expense of the Government, and doing it without the slightest authority of law.

I hold in my hand two bulletins that were sent to the press. I read the headlines:

Excerpts from the speech of the Hon. ANDRIEUS A. JONES, of New Mexico, in the United States Senate. Released for publication when delivered, probably on Friday afternoon, March 22.

It will be remembered that on Friday the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] delivered a very interesting address in which he defended the Fuel Administration. That he had a perfect right to do, and for the making of that speech I would be the very last to raise a single word of criticism; but I want to ask by what authority the Fuel Administration takes the money of the people of the United States to prepare bulletins to send to the newspapers advance copies of the speeches of Senators because those speeches happen to be pleasing to the Fuel Administration?

There is a CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that records what is said here; and if any individual, at his own expense, wants to furnish the newspapers with advance copies of what he desires to say here I make no complaint. I want to know, however, when it has happened in this Government that administrators and departments have been given authority to expend the people's money to conduct a newspaper propaganda in their defense, and to give out those things which they want given out?

If there are to be such bureaus, they ought to be run in the interest of all the Members of the Senate. In the interest of fairness they ought to state what is said upon both sides; and so the Government has provided such an instrumentality in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. But Mr. Garfield's bureau, when something is said that suits them, take the public moneys and send out the speech or send out the information. It is utterly abominable, and it ought not to be tolerated.

The other publication or statement given to the press is:

Excerpts from the speech of the Hon. ANDRIEUS A. JONES, of New Mexico, in the United States Senate. Released for publication when delivered.

The opening line I read:

In discussing Senator LODGE'S views of economics in his speech on the coal and sugar shortage investigation, Senator JONES said:

"Given that there was a shortage of sugar, the economic problem naturally arises, Is the distribution of sugar to be placed upon the basis of the highest bidder?"—

And so forth. Then follow excerpts from this very interesting speech.

I do not know whether the Food Administration prepared this and sent it out at the expense of the public, or whether it was done by the Fuel Administration, or whether it was done by the Creel bureau; but I have grown so familiar with this newspaper "dope" that is sent out that I can tell the typewriting at the end of a city block. There are literally tons of information and misinformation being sent out in this way, but this is the first time that it has come to my attention that these bureaus are engaged in disseminating the speeches of Congressmen and Senators that happen to be on the side that suits them, and I suppose, of course, carefully refraining from disseminating any speech that might be upon the other side. Of that I make no complaint, although it does seem to me that if they were going to give out the speech of the Senator from New Mexico answering the Senator from Massachusetts they ought to have given to the public the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts. But the real point of the matter is that we have a lot of gentlemen down here who never were elected to an office in their lives, who were picked up and appointed to office, who are undertaking to conduct bureaus to control the public opinion of the United States. Some of these gentlemen came out of the night of obscurity, and will enter it again as soon as they are separated from the positions which at present they disfigure. Some of them, of course, are men of a different type and class, but I insist that the time has come in this body when, in making appropriations, we ought to specify the purposes for which the money is to be used, and that the millions and hundreds of millions and thousands of millions of dollars that are being wrung from the American people ought not to be indiscriminately thrown around by a lot of men who are responsible, apparently, to nobody.

It is high time this sort of thing was stopped. It is high time that the people knew the uses to which their money is put. I had occasion to call attention recently to some of the expenditures in the Food Administration. I shall not at this time go further into that question. I am calling attention to this speech in no spirit of criticism of the Senator who delivered it. I apprehend he was in no way responsible for the method of its giving out. He had a right to make the speech, and he had a right to give it out, but no bureau of the Government down here had the right to spend our money in preparing it for the press and in sending it out in this way.

REGISTRATION FOR MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I had hoped that we might be able to take up this morning the Military Affairs Committee joint resolution providing for the registration of the young men coming of age since the last draft, and that we might go on and complete the organization of our Army. Instead of that, we have spent five or six days here in the sort of discussion that we have had this morning.

What difference does it make, when we need men on the western front, whether this representation here in the Official Bulletin about the air service is a trifle flamboyant and misleading or not? What difference does it make whether the speech of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] has been published by an official bureau or not? The thing we need is men yonder on the western front in France.

The War Department has insisted day after day for a month and a half that this registration be proceeded with. The Military Affairs Committee reported this joint resolution more than a month ago, and we have stood insistently upon the floor of this body demanding attention, and it has not yet been accorded.

This Military Affairs Committee of ours has seemed to develop into a hypercritical body and association. They have insisted here this morning that we have no air service, and that we have nothing done, in effect, toward completing or perfecting one. I do not know what the fact may be exactly, but I do know what the report yesterday in executive session was, and I do know there is substantial basis for some of the publications and headlines which have been sent out; and if they are not absolutely true they do reflect a condition that is reasonably in prospect and has to some extent been developed.

What difference does it make about the actual fact whether we have 97 planes this month and 397 next month and 29 squadrons in July, and things of that kind? These things are all in prospect, reasonably so, in esse, almost in fact. Now, let us get down to this joint resolution, and let us have it passed here this morning. Let us get this Army completed—the organization of it, at least—and get it where we can use it effectively. The war is going to be over some of these days, and unless America shall bestir herself more than she has in the past, and unless the Senate gets down to business, the war will be over before we have gotten into it properly. Let us get up this joint resolution.

I ask unanimous consent now that Senate joint resolution 124 be taken up and either passed or defeated to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution 124. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask for the regular order. We will be through with morning business in just a minute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

OPENING OF STREETS AND ALLEYS IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I offer a Senate resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 219) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, directed to advise the Senate what proceedings have been instituted for the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of alleys and minor streets in the city of Washington since the approval of the District appropriation act, March 3, 1917, in which additional authority was given in the matter of the condemnation and assessment of damages, and if no proceedings have been taken thereunder, why not; and if any proceedings are contemplated, what they are and when they are to be taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. KIRBY. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the resolution will lie over under the rule. If there be no further morning business, the morning business is closed.

REGISTRATION FOR MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution 124.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 124) providing for the registration for military service of all male persons citizens of the United States or residing in the United States who have, since the 5th day of June, 1917, and on or before the day set for the registration by proclamation by the President, attained the age of 21 years, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe under the terms of the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment is that offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW].

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee two or three questions, for information.

I want to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy has recommended or urged the passage of the proposition embodied in the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] as a war measure?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, there has not come down from the Commander in Chief to the committee any request or information whatsoever upon the subject.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not the Secretary of War has urged this proposition as a necessary war measure, or whether he has indicated to the committee any different opinion from that expressed in his report?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator now refers to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There has been no advice from the Secretary of War. If his last report can be applied to this joint resolution, I should infer that he is opposed to it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to ask the Senator, who is the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, whether or not the proposition embodied in this amendment was considered by the Military Affairs Committee in connection with the joint resolution that is now pending; and if so, what decision did the committee take with reference to the necessity, as a war measure, of embodying it in this joint resolution?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The question was not argued at great length in the committee. I do not think the merits of universal military training or other training were generally discussed or discussed in detail. Practically the only question considered by the committee in connection with this amendment which was offered before the committee was as to whether it was good policy at this time to attach it to the joint resolution in question. I think the majority of the committee, and even some of those who favor military training, were rather of opinion that it might retard the passage of the joint resolution, so that it left the individual members of the committee to do as they pleased.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But the committee apparently did not believe it was wise to attach it to this particular measure?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think the majority of the committee felt that way. I have advocated military training so seriously and so ardently since I introduced the bill on the subject in 1915 that as an individual I could not vote against this amendment as it is to-day, not that it is universal military training but it is a step in that direction. For that reason I have felt disposed to support the amendment. It may make some difficulties in the War Department in the way of training these young men, but, Mr. President, we are having difficult times, and I do not think it will encumber the machinery of the War Department very much more than it has been encumbered.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to ask the Senator another question. I ask the Senator if the Chief of Staff of the Army has recommended the incorporation of this amendment into the joint resolution as a war measure at this time?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not think anyone connected with the Military Establishment has recommended it or urged it except possibly Gen. S. B. M. Young, who is a retired Army officer, but is a very capable officer. I believe he favors it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does he favor it as an immediate essential war measure for the present war?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not know about that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is what I am trying to get at.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will yield for a question.

Mr. NEW. I should like to say, in further answer to the question the Senator from Washington addressed to the chairman of the committee, that there was no formal action of any character taken in the committee upon this amendment. The matter was generally discussed and authority was given me by the committee to present the matter on the floor of the Senate as it has been presented.

Further, as far as a recommendation from the Commander in Chief of the Army or the Secretary of War or the Chief of Staff is concerned, there have been no communications either for or against the amendment, so far as I know or have heard. In further answer, however, as to the opinion held by members of the Staff——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not ask for their opinion.

Mr. NEW. Will the Senator permit me to add, then, of my own motion, that I have talked to many of them and I have not found a single military man in the city of Washington who is not in favor of the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee if it is not extremely urgent and important that the joint resolution which is pending shall be passed without delay?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Judge Advocate General or Provost Marshal General is urging with a good deal of persistence that it ought to be acted on as speedily as possible in order that he may get the machinery of the War Department necessary to apply it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will ask the Senator, Is it not a fact that the proposition embodied in the amendment is not involved in any of the terms of the joint resolution that is pending?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; the amendment has nothing to do with the resolution itself. It could be attached with as much propriety to almost any other measure.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then, Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Just a moment. Let me say to the Senator I think probably the Senator from Indiana stated what the committee did with greater accuracy than I. I was laboring under the impression that we had acted on it and possibly so stated. I do not remember now positively since the statement made by the Senator from Indiana whether we voted on it or not. I think probably the Senator is right. He announced then that he would introduce his amendment to the joint resolution in the Senate and the committee assented.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But he offers it not as a committee amendment but as an individual amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Not as a committee amendment.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield for a question.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I simply want to make a statement. Mr. President, I think this amendment is both timely and appropriate in connection with this joint resolution. The joint resolution provides——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not want to yield for a discussion of the matter.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will make it very brief if the Senator will bear with me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The joint resolution provides that men who have become 21 years of age since the draft was imposed shall be included in the draft. The amendment of the Senator from Indiana provides that the men between 19 and 21, previous to their becoming subject to the draft, shall have a moderate military training. The importance of this is seen in the fact that the men who have come to the camps from private pursuits are more subject to illness by reason of the great amount of pneumonia that is found in the camps. Therefore, in connection with the joint resolution I consider it very timely and proper that the Senate at this time should consider and act upon the subject.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, regardless of what my views may be with reference to universal military training in time of peace, I want to say that I agree with many Senators who are in favor of universal military training; that it is very unwise to present this proposition at this time; that every effort that this country can bend toward the prosecution of the immediate war that we have on our hands should be exerted, and every measure that those in charge of the conduct of the war deem necessary ought to have, and I have no doubt will have, our earnest and hearty support. Every measure they deem essential will have my support, anyway.

This proposition ought to come up on its merits. It ought not to be forced through upon a measure to which there is absolutely no objection and which can be passed within one minute by the Senate, and if the amendment were out of the way it would be passed within one minute. All that may be said in behalf of military training may be admitted, and yet the injection of this amendment would not be justified. This is not a universal military training measure. It simply places all responsibility on the President to do this or not, without making any provision to carry it out. If we are for universal military training, let us do it. Let us make provision to carry it out in the proper way and let the President execute it. As a general rule, I am opposed to motions to lay on the table, but I think the conditions fully warrant such a motion. I shall be glad to consider a real measure providing for universal military training, but it ought to be considered on its own merits. It has no place here, even in this very imperfect form, and so, Mr. President, I move that the amendment be laid on the table, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Baird	Gerry	Knox	Sherman
Beckham	Harding	McKellar	Shields
Borah	Henderson	McLean	Smith, Ariz.
Calder	Hitchcock	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Chamberlain	James	New	Sterling
Cummins	Johnson, Cal.	Norris	Sutherland
Curtis	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Thomas
Dillingham	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Townsend
Fall	Kellogg	Page	Trammell
Fletcher	Kendrick	Poindexter	Vardaman
France	Kenyon	Saulsbury	Wadsworth
Frelinghuysen	King	Shafroth	Warren
Gallinger	Kirby	Sheppard	Wolcott

Mr. GALLINGER. I will take the liberty of stating that the Committee on Finance is having an important hearing and certain members of that committee are detained in the committee room.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington to lay the pending amendment on the table.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, having been detained in the room of the Committee on Finance, I am ignorant of what the amendment is, and I should like to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the so-called New amendment, proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW].

Mr. GALLINGER. That is satisfactory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to lay the amendment of the Senator from Indiana on the table.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). Has the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. WARREN. I withhold my vote, having a pair with him.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BANKHEAD (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr.

BRANDEGEE]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and let my vote stand.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "yea."

Mr. JAMES. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. WOLCOTT (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not voted.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I transfer my general pair with that Senator to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and let my vote stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and vote "nay."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. By an arrangement with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. REED. Under the arrangement just announced I vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING. I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. LODGE. My colleague [Mr. WEEKS], if present, would vote "nay." He is paired with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES].

Mr. WARREN. I wish to announce my general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. I have been unable to secure a transfer and so withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 35, as follows:

YEAS—32.

Bankhead	James	Shafroth	Thomas
Beckham	Jones, N. Mex.	Sheppard	Thompson
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Shields	Tillman
Fletcher	Kirby	Simmons	Trammell
Gore	McKellar	Smith, Ariz.	Underwood
Gronna	Norris	Smith, Md.	Vardaman
Henderson	Nugent	Stone	Williams
Hitchcock	Reed	Swanson	Wolcott

NAYS—35.

Baird	Frelinghuysen	Knox	Saulsbury
Borah	Gallinger	Lodge	Sherman
Calder	Gerry	McCumber	Smith, Ga.
Chamberlain	Harding	McLean	Smoot
Cummins	Johnson, Cal.	Myers	Sterling
Curtis	Kellogg	Nelson	Sutherland
Dillingham	Kendrick	New	Townsend
Fall	Kenyon	Page	Wadsworth

NOT VOTING—28.

Ashurst	Hardwick	Overman	Robinson
Brandegee	Hollis	Owen	Smith, Mich.
Broussard	Johnson, S. Dak.	Penrose	Smith, S. C.
Colt	La Follette	Phelan	Walsh
Fernald	Lewis	Pittman	Warren
Goff	McNary	Pomerene	Watson
Hale	Martin	Ransdell	Weeks

So the Senate refused to lay Mr. NEW's amendment on the table.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] the following:

Provided further, That attendance by those subject to the provisions of this section of not less than six months upon military schools, under regulations made by the Secretary of War, shall be deemed a compliance with the provisions of this section.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I listened with the most intense interest to the fervid appeal made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] during the morning hour for unanimous consent to take up this measure and for its passage. I agree with him, as I think the entire Senate does, that this measure should receive immediate consideration, and I congratulate him that within perhaps five minutes from the time that he pressed for unanimous consent, which was objected to only, as I understand, because we wanted the routine business of the Senate completed, the Senate is now considering that measure. But I do not wish to have it appear only as a matter that may be deducted from the reading of the RECORD that the Senate immediately took up the measure, but I wish that it shall affirmatively appear that within that short period, after it was apparently turned down by the refusal of unanimous consent, the measure came up upon the motion of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], which motion preceded the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

There is one thing, Mr. President, however, that I should like to say in addition, and that is in respect to one of the reasons assigned by the Senator from Arkansas as to why this measure should be taken up, or rather as to why we should not be indulging in any discussions which seem to temporarily impede the consideration of this measure. I shall only refer to one thing, and that is the reference made by the Senator from Arkansas to a matter brought to the attention of the Senate by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and elaborated to a much greater extent by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. I understood the Senator from Arkansas to ask, "What difference does it make in respect to those things," or, in referring to the article read from the Official Bulletin by the Senator from New York as being flamboyant, what difference does it make in respect to that matter in this great crisis?

Mr. President, the charge made by the Senator from New York, and which was repeated by the Senator from Colorado and sustained by the record that was read, makes this not a matter of flamboyancy—it makes it a matter of direct misrepresentation; and it seems to me that the question of what difference does it make whether the truth is told or not depends altogether upon the source from which it comes. Had it come from a publication for which certain gentlemen are individually responsible, I would say that it practically made no difference whatever; but coming, as it does, from the Official Bulletin of the Committee upon Public Information, I say, Mr. President, that it makes a very great and a very serious difference.

Mr. President, what is this Bureau of Information and what relation to the bureau does the Official Bulletin sustain? I hold in my hand a communication addressed to the President of the United States under date of January 7, 1918, and signed by George Creel, chairman, which purports to answer both those questions. It purports to lay before the President officially the nature of the activities of the Bureau of Information and the relation of the Official Bulletin to those activities. The first sentence in this letter is, Mr. President—

As will be seen by the accompanying report, the Committee on Public Information has grown to be a world organization.

"A world organization" for what purpose, Mr. President? Let us inquire into this official communication:

Not only does it touch every part of the great machinery that coordinates the forces of America for victory, but it carries the meanings and purposes of America to all peoples, making the fight for public opinion in every country.

"A world organization" for the purpose of creating world-wide public opinion; does it make no difference whether its statements are false or true?

Besides the daily war news—

He goes on to say—

which it issues for the whole press of the country, it supplies some 30,000 newspapers with feature articles, a weekly news service, and governmental publicity material of all sorts.

Does it make no difference whether the information that is furnished 30,000 newspapers and reaches every family in the land is true or untrue? In addition to this—

It sends to foreign countries motion-picture exhibits showing America's social, industrial, and war progress.

Does it make no difference as to whether foreign countries receive the truth as to these material matters, or whether it receives misrepresentation?

It issues an official daily newspaper—

And here the director states specifically the relation of the Official Bulletin to the Bureau of Public Information—

It issues an official daily newspaper for the Government with a circulation of 90,000 copies a day.

It prepares and distributes, advises upon, and censors photographs and moving pictures to the number of more than 700 a day.

And finally, Mr. President, he says:

From a thousand sources we hear of the wonders of German propaganda, but my original determination has never altered. Always do I try to find out what the Germans are doing, and then I don't do it. Even if the very loftiness of our war aims did not command honesty at every point, I have the conviction that corrupt methods work their own destruction.

Now, Mr. President, if I understand the statement made by the Senator from New York and affirmed by the Senator from Colorado, it amounts to this: That not only was there a timely pointing out of the errors and misrepresentations contained in these statements to those who are officially connected with the Bulletin, but these officials were brought before the committee, and the committee advised them of the inaccuracy of these proposed statements; they admitted the inaccuracy of these proposed statements, and said that they would not appear, and yet, notwithstanding the committee's conception of the necessity for truth in the columns of the Official Bulletin, and notwithstanding the precautions taken by the committee to keep falsehoods out of its columns, they have appeared and appeared in all of their naked untruthfulness.

Mr. KIRBY and Mr. STERLING addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I do not wish to be understood as saying—and I do not think my language is susceptible of any such construction—that it made no difference whether the American public was furnished true or false information. I asked, "What difference does it make about getting our men on the battle line in France that some of these statements about aeroplane service may possibly be flamboyant, optimistic, or a trifle exaggerated?" I repeat that question here and now, and I ask any Senator who has made complaint to stand up and say wherein this statement is not substantially true? Let the members of the committee stand up and say whether we have not all the aeroplanes that we can use in training; whether we have not 126,000 men in the Aeroplane Service—more than we can ever get the schools for. Let members of the committee stand up and say if we have not so many fighting planes already in France. Let some Senator on the other side get up and say that we have not three squadrons yonder on the American front of the best battle planes in the world.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not a member of the committee, but if the Senator will allow me to answer his question I will stand up and say that we have not thousands of fighting planes in France; we have not one fighting plane manufactured by the Aeroplane Construction Board, either in France or anywhere else, and the plans of the Aeroplane Construction Board are not to manufacture any fighting planes.

Mr. KIRBY. There is not a single word said in this statement about fighting planes being manufactured here. Read the statement as it stands. I do not appear as an apologist for Creel; I do not know him; and I do not think he is authorized, under any consideration, to deceive or to send out untrue information to the public.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KIRBY. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not know whether the Senator from Arkansas was present all the time when the committee investigated this matter, but the witness was compelled to admit that this statement was absolutely false. It says:

> Though hundreds have already been shipped, our factories have reached quantity production, and thousands upon thousands will soon follow.

He was compelled to admit that only one airplane had been shipped to France.

Mr. KIRBY. How many engines did he say had been shipped?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am talking about airplanes; that is what this statement refers to.

Mr. KIRBY. The whole four statements are published together, and it is stated that the planes are being shipped separately and that the engines are being shipped separately.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; the Senator——

Mr. KIRBY. And we have three squadrons yonder.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is entirely mistaken. Let me read the language, and I am sure the Senator will then recognize his mistake.

Mr. KIRBY. I do not care about quibbling over it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; there is no quibbling; it is an absolute plain fact.

That was the number of the caption—

> Airplane bodies ready for shipment "over there." These airplane bodies, the acme of engineering art, are ready for shipment to France.

Mr. KIRBY. Is not that true?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They are not ready for shipment to France; and they are not going to ship them to France. They are the training planes.

Mr. KIRBY. Well, does the statement say they are not training planes?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The statement, furthermore, says:

> Though hundreds have already been shipped—

Yet only one has been shipped. The witness admitted that this was an absolutely false statement calculated to deceive the American public. I am amazed that the Senator now raises any question here regarding it.

Mr. KIRBY. I say that it makes no difference about putting an army on the French front whether or not a hundred of those things have been shipped.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am talking about——

Mr. KIRBY. Here is what I am talking about myself. These engines have been manufactured in the quantity they say they have been manufactured, and no member of the committee denies it. I say that yonder in France we have bought so many planes, and others are to be constructed; the raw material has been furnished by us, and they are being constructed. I say that three squadrons are upon the American front now—battle planes—do you deny that?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is no statement to that effect here.

Mr. KIRBY. No; but the whole matter has been that the American people have been misled about the airplane service.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I rose in response to the Senator's invitation to any member of the committee to question his statement. Now, I say that the statements here made were admitted to be false by the witness before the committee. The statement did not relate to the airplanes that had been bought in France; it related to airplanes made in the United States, and falsely stated to have been shipped to France. The Senator will remember, if he was present, that when the committee demanded of this witness that he give his authority, he produced a statement, a prophecy, made by Secretary Baker last February as his authority for saying that the airplanes had been shipped, whereas it was only a prophecy that they would be shipped.

Mr. KIRBY. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. KIRBY. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. To be entirely fair, I think it should be stated that 16,000 tons of material for building airplanes, and foremen, superintendents, and mechanics have been sent to France to construct airplanes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is not the issue. Of course, material has been sent to France; but this bureau was sending out pictures of completed airplane bodies, and it is declared in the caption of the statement that hundreds had been sent to France. That statement was false, and it was calculated to deceive the American people; and for that reason the committee thought the Government should not send out that statement with the Government stamp.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, there seems to be some difference about whether the committee understood when airplanes were mentioned whether they were fighting planes or were not fighting planes. As I understand it, we have shipped engines——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is not the question. The Senator is in error. We have not shipped any fighting planes nor training planes to France—not one of them——

Mr. KIRBY. We have sent engines to France.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I was talking about airplanes.

Mr. KIRBY. We have sent the planes to France to be attached to the engines. No; they have not been shipped complete, and they never will be shipped complete.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This is not a question of engines, Mr. President. It is a question of fighting-airplane bodies.

Mr. KIRBY. I will concede, if the Senator insists upon it, although I did not hear the witness say it, that they have not shipped hundreds of the completed machines to France; but that has got nothing to do with the question as I see it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is a witness who stated how many engines had been sent.

Mr. KIRBY. Yes; I heard the witness, and I heard how many squadrons we had and how many would be supplied.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We have shipped 10 engines to France. That is the number.

Mr. KIRBY. Yes; and how many to England?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Six to England and four to——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair suggest that Senators must address the Chair and receive permission to interrupt from the speaker.

Mr. KIRBY. Very well.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. With the permission of the Senator, I just want to put in the RECORD three or four lines of a statement on this subject.

Mr. KIRBY. Very well.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The other day there was a debate here as to whether or not the Aircraft Production Board, notwithstanding the lapse of a year since we became engaged in this war, had manufactured a battle plane; also, as to whether or not they intended to manufacture any, or expected to rely upon our allies to produce battle planes for us. On the following day there appeared in the New York Evening Post an article by Mr. David Lawrence, an apologist and defender of the Aircraft Production Board, so I assume that what he says certainly does no injustice in any way to the administration. Here is what he says on that subject:

Indeed, it was on Gen. Pershing's recommendation that the manufacture of single-seated planes—

That is, the battle plane—

was discontinued, because he believed he could get enough of these from the French So America concentrated on two and three seated combat planes.

I am not going again into the discussion of the misleading term that is given to these bombing planes—why they are called combat planes, or whether or not it is with the intention of deceiving the public. They are not battle planes.

This writer goes on to say as follows:

It turns out, however, that there is more need of the single-seated machines. All these facts will come out when the board appointed recently by President Wilson to investigate the air-production program completes its inquiry.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I have no objection to that being read into the RECORD. I am not apologizing for the Aircraft Production Board, although I believe it would be good for the public to know of the statement that was made by the head of the Aircraft Production Board in executive session yesterday. I am not going to state it here, because it was made in executive session. I do not care anything especially about this particular production here. You are criticizing and delaying the legislation because you complain of a certain thing having been done by a bureau that you say is unauthorized. Why not fix it so that the bureau can not make this sort of a statement, or say that the bureau is not authorized, and suppress it?

Now, let us get down to the point that is at issue here. Here is a joint resolution the necessity for which has been recognized by the War Department. Here is a joint resolution the necessity for which has been recognized by the Military Affairs Committee. Here is a joint resolution which has been unanimously favorably reported by the Military Affairs Committee, after the amendment was offered and refused to be considered in the committee, on the suggestion that it would confuse the matter and ought to be presented here, and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] was given permission to present it here.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. NEW. I think the Senator is in error in saying that the Military Affairs Committee refused to consider the amendment.

Mr. KIRBY. I mean it was withdrawn. The Senator knows he withdrew it after objection was made to it.

Mr. NEW. No; I beg the pardon of the Senator; I think he is again in error. I did not withdraw it from consideration there.

Mr. KIRBY. The committee recommended the joint resolution for passage without it.

Mr. NEW. It was simply taken by unanimous consent of the committee that I should present it on the floor here without any recommendation from the committee. I think the other members of the committee will sustain me in that statement.

Mr. KIRBY. I do not want to have any dispute with the Senator, but the committee recommended the joint resolution without the amendment, and gave the Senator from Indiana permission to introduce his amendment here. That is exactly the condition, and I understand that nothing more is expected here. What I want to do is to have the Senate pass upon this matter one way or the other, and I say if it is necessary to increase the age limit it ought to go above 31 instead of down below 21.

I say there is no necessity on earth for the present amendment being attached to this joint resolution. If you are going to train the soldiers to fight that are so imperatively needed on the battle front, if the Government is straining its resources both in money and in places for training and in officers for training to actually take care of the men who are to be soldiers when the training period is finished, then why bother about registering boys 19 years of age, and requiring them to be trained two years before they can be put into battle, when they are to be drafted only after they are 21?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. NEW. The amendment does not require that they shall be trained for two years. I think the Senator is again in error in his statement of the facts.

Mr. KIRBY. I understood that it provided that we should register boys 19 years of age, and that we should train them at least six months of the year until they became 21 years old, and that they could not be drafted and put into the fighting front until after they were 21 years old.

Mr. NEW. Why, Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas further yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. NEW. For the better information of the Senator, I will state that the amendment reads as follows:

That all registered male persons who have attained the age of 19 years shall be subject to military training in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President.

Nothing is said as to time. Under an amendment which was offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] six months in the aggregate was required for the two years.

Mr. KIRBY. If the Senator had gone on with the amendment, he would have come to these words:

But shall not be called for active service until they have attained the age of 21 years.

Mr. NEW. Oh, yes.

Mr. KIRBY. Here is another amendment providing that they shall be trained six months, at least, a year in those two years. That is the condition. We have over 3,000,000 men already registered, as I understand, that have been accepted. We have a million and a half men in training now, and it is thought that we will need these other men who have come of age since last June—another 670,000 to 1,000,000 men. The War Department says this amendment will confuse the plans. Every man knows that if we have only room enough to train the man who is necessary for fighting, we do not need to waste time in training the man who may be called on to fight two years after he is trained, and can not be called sooner.

Why spend money on such a man now, why take a place in the camp for him, and why waste the time of the officers who are needed for the other purpose of training soldiers on this particular man? Why take him out of the industries, why take him out of school, until he can be used, when the Government demands that he shall be used?

You say it is necessary to have universal training that we may have an army. When we have finished this organization for training and the perfection of it, we will have, in my opinion, at least 5,000,000 men in the Army, and probably 10,000,000 in camps before the war is over; and certainly that will be a sufficient army to protect the interests of the United States until you can institute this universal military training, if it is regarded necessary to do it.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. KIRBY. Certainly.

Mr. NEW. I should like to ask the Senator where he is going to get the 10,000,000 men of whom he speaks?

Mr. KIRBY. There are a good many million men between 30 and 45 years of age, and the Germans have them up to 54 in their army.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, those men certainly are not included in the draft age.

Mr. KIRBY. They are not—certainly not.

Mr. NEW. The total number of those who are included in the enumeration made under the supervision of the Provost Marshal General was ten million, from which must be deducted all exemptions.

Mr. KIRBY. That is true; but, I presume, there is no incapacity on the part of Congress for lack of power to increase the age and extend it up to 45 years. My judgment is that you are going to have something like that done before the war is over and if it is found necessary to go down to 19 years of age, that, too, may be done. But if it is found necessary to go down to 19 years of age, then when the man is trained he ought to be made a soldier and put into the battle front like the other soldiers. The necessity has not yet come for that, and I do not believe that any man should be drafted and put into the Army and sent yonder across the sea until he has at least had the right to have a voice in his own affairs at home, until he is recognized as a man.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. KIRBY. Certainly.

Mr. NEW. The necessity for soldiers was not recognized until after the 6th day of April, 1917. Had it been recognized earlier and provision made for providing those soldiers, our condition to-day would not be what it is.

Mr. KIRBY. I am not taking issue with any statement of that kind, but this joint resolution has been here, recommended for passage, more than a month and a half, and it is time that it is fought out and passed or defeated, one way or the other. I insist that we ought not to confuse our system of raising our army with this universal military training idea, which will be ineffective for any purpose under existing conditions.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, a word in regard to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] and the amendment which I proposed to his amendment, and which he so graciously accepted.

I am thoroughly in accord with the principle involved in the amendment of the Senator from Indiana—the principle of universal military training—and if this amendment of the Senator from Indiana, standing alone, were nothing more than a declaration of a policy, I should favor it. I should favor it whether we were in war or not. I should favor it if the chances of war were never so remote. I should favor universal military training because of its relation to the moral welfare, because of its relation to the physical welfare of our young men, and because of its educational value. I should favor universal military training because of the spirit of national unity and of patriotism which it would inculcate. I should favor it because of its great value in doing away with all sectional feeling and all sectional interests in the United States and making a thoroughly united American people. I think that universal military training would be the very triumph of democracy itself, and so I shall favor the proposition of the Senator from Indiana.

But, Mr. President, I introduced an amendment providing that the period of training during the two years between 19 and 21 should, in the aggregate, be not less than six months. I am not sure, Mr. President, that that amendment should be adopted under the present conditions and circumstances. A period of six months during those two years may, under present conditions, be too great a drain on certain industries in the land, and especially on the industry of agriculture, which, of course, we all recognize now as one of the most important and one, too, greately in need of men. Hence, on reflection and because of the division of opinion in regard to this matter, I have concluded to ask leave to withdraw my amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota has been accepted by the mover of the amendment.

Mr. STERLING. With the consent of the mover of the amendment, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], I ask leave to withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can not be done, because the Senate has agreed to the amendment to the amendment, as the Chair is informed. The Senator from Indiana can modify his amendment before a vote is taken on it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Would not a motion to reconsider be in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. How was the amendment modified?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will have to ask the Secretary to read the modification.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I wish—to have it read as modified.

The SECRETARY. The original amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] reads as follows:

SEC. 5. That in addition to the persons subject to registration and selective draft under the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, all male persons between the ages of 19 and 30, both inclusive, shall be subject to registration and draft in accordance with the provisions of said act: Provided, That all registered male persons who have attained the age of 19 years shall be subject to military training in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, but shall not be called for active service until they have attained the age of 21 years.

Then comes the portion accepted by the Senator from Indiana, as follows:

Provided further, That the period of training between the ages of 19 and 21 years shall be in the aggregate not less than six months.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I move that the vote whereby my amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana was adopted be reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a motion to amend already before the Senate. The Chair will recognize the Senator from South Dakota, but will say that the Senator from Indiana may modify his amendment, if he desires, before a vote is taken on it. The Chair possibly did not clearly express himself before. The question now pending is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a motion to amend his amendment, as it stands now, by eliminating therefrom the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will take it by unanimous consent that that is agreed to, unless there is objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want to say a few words upon the point at issue.

I think it very unfortunate, indeed, that the Senator from Indiana should have offered this amendment at this time. This is, in essence, a question which must be determined upon the battle field, which ought not to be determined now by us. If we lose this war, if Germany wins this war, or if a patched-up peace is made, amounting simply to an armistice, and not a lasting and enduring peace, then it goes without saying that we as a nation must become and must remain armed cap-a-pie indefinitely. We will have had full notice of Germany's intention to make a world conquest and to exercise world dominion, and we would be fools, indeed, if we did not prepare to prevent that when "the next war" breaks out—"the next war" concerning which the Prussian junkerthum and the military caste are already talking in Germany, and for which they are already making their plans. I have seen some right extensive plans advocated for "the next war." Prussia has made up her mind that unless she is whipped she will regard the next peace as an armistice for further preparation for further world-conquest lust.

Now, Mr. President, if she wins, of course, we must remain in arms, cap-a-pie, no matter what it costs the people in the subtraction of money from education and progress and industry. If we have self-respect we must remain armed. But if upon the other hand we win the war, as I rather imagine we will sooner or later, then we will hope to rid the American people of the menace of universal military conscription, a curse, although it may at times be the less of two evils, but in itself a curse to civilization, to nationality, to progress, to humanity, and to education. Speaking for myself, one of the reasons why I am so ardently in favor of waging this war to a successful termination is that I hope to put an end not only to the menace and threat of universal military compulsory service in the United States but to put an end to it all over the world.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate the executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government.

Mr. KIRBY. I ask unanimous consent to lay aside the unfinished business temporarily until we finish this joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumes the consideration of Senate joint resolution 124. The Senator from Mississippi will proceed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if we win this war, it will be a most unfortunate thing to have upon the statute books a national pledge for universal military compulsory service, for which we are neither prepared by our past history nor invited by our ideals as to the future. A nation which lives in peace times under universal military compulsory service is a nation of slaves to exactly that extent.

Now, there are two ways of having peace. One is to let Germany dominate the world and give us instead of the old Pax Romana a new Pax Teutonica, where none of us dare complain, and where all that any of us dare to do will be efficient in making a living for himself. That is one way.

Another way is to whip Germany, to whip the Teutonic junkerbund, to whip the military caste and the House of Hohenzollern, if possible; and then to be able to say to the entire world, "The world is not only safe for democracy but it is safe for liberty; it is safe for progress; it is safe for individual initiative; and not only is it safe for democracy but we have made democracy safe for the world, which is a bigger job than making the world safe for democracy."

Mr. President, to put upon the statute books a sort of a pledge that no matter how this war comes out we people of these United States are going to sink to the level of Prussians and Austrians and Bulgarians, to the level of the condition of the continent of Europe, living in armed camps, one against the other, suspecting one another every day, prepared to pounce upon one another every week, I say is going too far.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. WILLIAMS. One word and I will. I repeat, it is a very unfortunate thing that this great question which must be left to be determined upon the battle field, if we win to be determined in one way and if we lose to be determined in another way, should now be presented to this body with the danger and peril of misunderstanding in every vote that is cast.

I for one am not prepared to pledge myself that these United States will become an armed camp with universal compulsory military service, subtracting the resources and the money and the manhood of the Nation from progress and peace and civilization for all time to come. Now I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator if he does not think that instead of sinking to the level of the Prussians and Austrians we might well rise to the level of America and prepare to defend our existence and our national honor?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if that question were worthy of an extended reply, I might make it, but it hardly is. America does not have to rise She has already risen years ago. She already stands upon a plane of civilization and progress and enlightenment and liberty unequaled by any other part of this world in the past or now. She has very largely risen to that level because she has in peace prepared for more peace rather than spending her energies in peace preparing for war. We have, like our English cousins across the water, found that our past policies left us unprepared for Prussian efficiency when the war came, but like them we too may say, as they ought to say, that we are glad of the fact that hitherto during the ages that have gone ringing down toward eternity we have devoted our energies to peace and civilization and humanity and progress, and not to war.

We have thus far up to date in France and Flanders proven that in spite of our unpreparedness, in spite of the fact that we had to muddle through as best we could, we are still the peers, if not the superiors, of men who have been raised under a military caste, who have had no thought except for "the next war."

The Senator may think that America would "rise." If America went to the platform that she was going to spend the balance of her existence thinking about the next war, I rather imagine she would "fall" and that her future would be unworthy of her past.

The thing to do now is to win this war and, if we win this war, to put an end, not only here but all over the world, even in Prussia itself, to universal compulsory military service, to make mankind recognize the common fatherhood of God and the common brotherhood of man, and to quit thinking about cutting one another's throats and begin to think about helping one another as the common children of God, entitled to the heritage which God has given us. America fall! The Senator asks me. Shall America rise to this great Prussian opportunity? He reminds me of something I heard some years ago. Somebody said in the House one day that if certain New England mechanics down in Florida could not get away they might fall to the level of "the common white trash by whom they were surrounded," and I said, "Mr. Speaker, if they fall, they will violate all the laws of gravitation, because in order to reach that level they would have to rise." So when the Senator asks me whether we shall rise to the level of supporting American honor and the balance of it my answer is we have already risen to it. We have been rising to it all the time and we have rerisen to it lately.

We have had a new Easter of American patriotism. The god of justice and of righteousness and of American patriotism has been resurrected once more. Shall we rise to the level indicated by the Senator from Indiana? What level? The level of barbarians; the level of war seekers; the level of institutions and societies founded upon a military caste, seeking throughout all the years of peace to prepare itself for war provoked by itself. Whenever you turn a people into an armed camp, you at once give them the ambition to provoke war in order to show how well prepared they are for it.

Fight this war out; resort to compulsory universal military service in order to defeat compulsory military universal service all over the world forever. Resort to war in order to put an end to war. As far as we can see, between a universal law Teutonic, while living forever in a state of suspicion and hatred and hostility toward the whole world, thinking about somebody's throat that you want to cut and national disaster, there is, to my mind, very little choice.

Shall you rise to the level of Americanism? Have not those boys risen to it "over there"? Have not these boys in the training camps risen to it?

All we have got to do, Mr. President, is to obey the injunction of Charles Kingsley—those of us who are not fit for service—and that is "to hold our hearts up higher for those who are fighting afar," and not to forget while we are doing this, under the strain of circumstance, the traditions and ideals of the American Republic and of American democracy—a republic and a democracy whose every salient, keystone strength has consisted in the fact that they were constantly and always preparing during peace for still better and more enduring peace.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I am very glad, indeed, to find myself in perfect accord with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. He has said what I should like to say much better than I could hope to say it. To say that America should rise above its present condition in military efficiency would simply seem to me to mean that we indorse Prussian military autocracy and acknowledge our own inefficiency and inability to win against an organized military force consisting of a comparatively small number of people.

Mr. President, I have talked with many people who came from Prussia. I have talked with a great number who were subjected to military service in that country, and I never have found a single one of those people who did not say that the Prussian military autocracy ought to be dispensed with.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that to acknowledge that it is necessary for the American people to establish a compulsory military system is to acknowledge that Christianity is a failure.

After this war shall have been concluded, and after a victory shall have been won by the lovers of peace, by the people of America and their allies, to say that we shall fasten upon the people of this country and other nations a compulsory military system is simply to indorse the system which we are now fighting.

Mr. President, I will be glad to sacrifice my own life at any time in order to crush any autocratic military system, no matter where it may be found. I acknowledge that we must fight fire with fire. I know that under present conditions we must train our boys in order to meet the enemy, but let us hope that this will be a victory for humanity. Let us hope that when this war shall have ended it will mean that the people of the country will not be compelled to keep their young men in compulsory military training and service, but that they may be engaged in other pursuits or other business.

I indorse what the Senator from Mississippi said, that if the Prussian military system shall prevail, if it should so happen that they should be the victors, then, of course, we must see to it that our young men are trained until such a time that it is possible for us to do away with that system. But I do not believe, sir, that we should at this time place upon the statute books laws which we do not wish to enforce after peace shall have been concluded.

We are hoping now, Mr. President, that we shall win the war. We believe that we shall win this war in the hope that this system of military autocracy shall be crushed and that every nation on the face of the globe shall subscribe to certain rules, regulations, and agreements that they will disarm to a minimum. If that shall not be done, we can not say that we have won a real victory, as the Senator from Mississippi said, a victory that will not only be safe for democracy but a victory that will mean liberty to all people.

Mr. President, I shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], because I do not believe that this is an opportune time for such legislation. Let us pass such laws as are necessary to meet the needs of the hour. Let us subdue the enemy as quickly as possible. Let us crush this foe of all humanity, the military, autocratic system. Unless we do that I do not believe we can say that we have won a real victory.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, the joint resolution in charge of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] provides that all men who have become 21 years since the draft was imposed shall be registered for military service. I think there are about 600,000 men who have become of age since the draft was imposed and who have come into the zone of eligibility. It is perfectly proper that those men should be included in the registration.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] has introduced an amendment which provides that all registered male persons who have attained the age of 19 years shall be subject to military training up to 21 years of age. It is not mandatory. It provides that the Persident shall prescribe regulations if he believes that these men should have this preliminary military training.

I am in favor of this amendment. When it was introduced the other day I doubted the advisability of putting it on this joint resolution, because it is highly important that immediately this draft shall be completed so that we can perfect the call and provide the man power to make up the wastage that is now being caused by reason of our men going to the other side and by reason of sickness here. Three thousand men died in cantonments here on this side previous to the shipment on the other side of our troops. Since the troops have been sent over the casualties, according to the roll of honor of the Evening Star, now amount to some 2,100 or 2,200 men. When we hear of the result of the engagement of American troops—and I understand that American troops are engaged over there, although the reports at the present time are very meager—undoubtedly that casualty list will be greatly increased.

The problem that we have now is to fill the wastage that will naturally come by reason of the fact that our Army must take part in the attack and is, or will be, one of the important factors in the months to come on the other side.

Now, what does this amendment provide? A simple method of training these men preliminary to their call for the draft, that from 19 to 21 these men shall have a preliminary training—not an expensive system, but an economical system—that will enable them to learn the elementary military principles to prepare them for the draft.

I am told that the loss in one camp alone from pneumonia amounts to three or five men a day. The reason for that is that the men come directly from their homes, from their business, from the factories, and they are not in a physical condition to stand the exposure of this training. If they had the manual training under some universal military system, undoubtedly those men would be more physically fit for the exposure and for the extensive training necessary to make them American soldiers.

Gen. Wood said the other day that by reason of the fact that these men came from all walks of life it was a democratic Army, and that the National Army would give an account of itself which would be probably equal if not superior to that of the trained troops of Europe.

Mr. President, there is another reason why I believe this is a wise provision. Many of the Senators remember a statement that I think was sent to all the Senators by the Secretary of the Interior, showing that in the registration under the conscription act of the 10,000,000 men there were 700,000 men who were illiterate, and I think that in the draft which followed there were 200,000 men who could not read or write, and that in all the cantonments, in addition to the military training, they were holding night schools to teach the men to read and write, to teach them how to perform the ordinary duties of the soldier, the duties of a sentry, to read the bulletin boards and the orders, on the theory that an intelligent soldier makes a good soldier. What a reflection on our educational system in this country is the fact that there are so many illiterates in our National Army! Have we not neglected our duty in this country? We have boasted of America as the melting pot of nations and yet the fires of patriotism have been burning low. These men have come from European countries, and we have allowed them to retain their ideas, their customs, and national instincts; in fact, we have allowed them to continue the use of their own language and to print their own papers, instead of forcing them into night schools and under a compulsory system of training. As a result, there is a German propaganda in this country the extent of which we can not estimate. In my State we have had casualty after casualty resulting in great catastrophies and causing the loss of life and of property. The time has come when these men must be dealt with severely. Taking German propagandists and pro-German sympathizers in our laps and feeding them sugar plums is not a good national policy. If we had a blank wall and a shooting squad, such depredations would soon stop.

Mr. President, as an educational advantage for our young men, the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] will be a great benefit.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FLETCHER in the chair). Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to say that two days ago I received a short letter from a colonel in the United States Army, a man who was educated at West Point, who went through the Philippine war, and who is now in command of a camp in the South. In that letter he wrote as follows:

> I wish you could take a few days off and visit this place and see the work we are doing with these men. As I look back on the conditions as they were when troops began to arrive and look at these wonderful husky youngsters now, the improvement in physique, morale, discipline, and bearing, I feel that, even if we were never to use them in the great cause, the work put on them would be of the utmost value to the country and to themselves.

Mr. President, those young men, coming from all parts of the country and from all walks of life, have been in camp but a few months. We know exactly what kind of soldiers they were at that time, but a few months' training has put them in the condition which this distinguished soldier describes to me in the letter which I have read.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, that is only one instance of thousands of instances of which I have heard.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator yield to me to ask a question?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. How many boys are there between 19 and 21 years of age in the country who would be subject to this registration?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Taking the estimate that there will be five or six hundred thousand men who have come into the draft age during the past year, if this bill passes I should say that the number who would be subject to registration would be from 750,000 to a million.

Mr. OVERMAN. That number would be registered?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That number would be registered.

Mr. OVERMAN. Has the Senator from New Jersey any estimate of how much it would cost?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, the military history of this country shows that we have fought our wars and maintained our Military Establishment at great cost. We were not ready in the Spanish-American War, and it therefore probably cost us twice as much to fight that war as it would have done if we had then had some simple system of military training.

Take the shipping question alone. We were short of ships at the beginning of the Spanish-American War. Both political parties in this country had pledged themselves to a merchant marine. Up to 1865 the American merchant marine carried 90 per cent of the exports and imports of this country, but from that date the commerce of the seas was taken away from us; our commerce stopped at the water's edge. When the Spanish-American War broke out we had no ships, and we went out into the highways and the byways and bought them, paying for them twice as much as they were worth. I remember one old vessel, the Vigilancia, for which we paid $67,000, and she was sold to a Chicago junk company for $3,000 after the war. We spent $18,000,000 for our merchant fleet with which to transport troops, and at the end of the war we sold the vessels of which it was composed for $307,000. That is what failing to have some military policy in this country has cost us.

When Villa crossed the border at Columbus we were unprepared; we refused to accept the lesson of an invasion by a Mexican bandit; and when Germany declared war we made no preparation, although there were then men in this country with wisdom and with vision who advised us at that time to prepare. However, we failed to do so. I attribute that to the fact that we were a great peace-loving Nation, and war was repugnant to us. Had we prepared at that time, or had we had a universal system of military training, we would not now be preparing for war at inflated prices.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not disagree with the Senator on that question; but I merely wanted to be informed of the fact about what it would cost the Government to train these boys, if he has any estimate of it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Well, Mr. President, all I can say in regard to that is that Switzerland, which has a system of universal military training and a population, I believe, of only 4,000,000, trains and maintains an army of 500,000 men, with only 230 paid instructors, at an annual cost of $9,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to inquire of the Senator from New Jersey whether, if this amendment passes and takes effect now, the Government will not be obliged to build additional cantonments for the men, to furnish them with uniforms and arms for training, food supplies in sufficient quantity—which will, of course, be enormous—and, in addition, require the services of some forty or fifty thousand officers, none of whom we can at present spare, plus transportation, which at present is so congested as to demand the use of all of the rolling stock we have, while at the same time we must go on with the training of the drafted men with which to increase our Army and repair its wastage, and whether he has considered what the enormous cost of such an undertaking would be?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I have considered the money cost; but I am also considering the tremendous cost that we are now paying by reason of our unpreparedness. I believe that some simple plan can be formulated which will provide for the training of these men in the localities where they will be registered, so that a limited training, probably of a month or two weeks a year, may be afforded them, so that during this period they may be trained by officers who, unfortunately, will be wounded or maimed.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I desire to ask the Senator from New Jersey if he thinks a military training of two weeks or of a month a year will go very far toward making a soldier?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, answering the Senator from Delaware, I can only say that the military training at Plattsburg for a month in a year has worked wonders; and, as the records show, in the officers' training camps one of the questions that was first asked was whether the man had had any military training at any military camp; and men that had such training were always preferred over the men who had not.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator from New Jersey yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield further to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do.

Mr. WOLCOTT. As I understand the New amendment, this training is to last only during the war. I take it, therefore, that the New amendment is designed to assist in the contribution of men to the Army in this war. I want to ask the Senator if he thinks that a training of anything short of three or four months will be of material assistance in the making of soldiers for this war?

I quite agree that two weeks' or a month's training in a military training camp, such as they had at Plattsburg, would be of great benefit to men; but would it go far toward making a soldier? If the New amendment is of any value at all, it must be in the way of making soldiers for this war, because its operation ends with the war.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, a young man who is ordered to a training point at 19 years of age for one month's training will during his time of training have at least three months' training previous to his being subject to the draft. I firmly believe that three months' training will be of great benefit to any man and make him better mentally, physically, and morally than if he had had no training; he will be a better soldier when the draft is imposed upon him.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. What effect would the adoption of this amendment have upon the military schools of the country? According to my information the number of schools and the attendance upon those schools has been increased very largely in the last year or two, and it is very natural that that should be the case. What effect would the passage of a bill like this have upon such schools? Does not the Senator from New Jersey think—to come down to what I want to know—that there ought to be a provision in the amendment, if it should be adopted, to the effect that those in attendance or who may be in attendance upon the military schools of the country should be excused from such training?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think some such amendment might be a very wise one.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. FALL. Is not what the Senator from Tennessee suggests provided for in this amendment?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; it is not. I have, however, offered an amendment to the amendment providing for it in terms.

Mr. FALL. As I read this amendment, Mr. President, the matter of the exemption of the young men who are in attendance on military schools, or failing to call them, would be entirely in the hands of the President. I frankly say to you that I object to the amendment as it stands, because it does not go far enough, in my judgment, in providing the rules and regulations which I think it is the constitutional duty of Congress to provide.

Mr. McKELLAR. I also think that is an objection, and I so stated. I offered the amendment, if the Senator is referring to me.

Mr. FALL. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that now, under this amendment, the rules with reference to military training are to be entirely prescribed by the President, so that these men may not be called from their schools unless the President sees fit to call them.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think it is broad enough in its scope to permit that kind of exemption.

Mr. FALL. I am afraid that it will prove to be so.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am merely submitting the suggestion to the Senator for his consideration. I hope he will vote for the amendment.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I am for universal military training. Undoubtedly military training in schools and colleges is of great benefit; but that kind of training only reaches a certain class of men. The pending proposal is for universal compulsory training, not compulsory service; that all men in every walk of life, after they reach a certain age, shall for a certain period be trained by the Government in military tactics. The men attending military schools and colleges are men whose parents can afford to send them there. Such training no doubt has been of benefit, as demonstrated by the fact that the men who were at the second training camp at Fort Myer coming from a famous southern military academy, proved by their experience in military knowledge and science to be far better equipped than the men who had simply been trained in the National Guard or elsewhere. I believe that an amendment exempting those men who take military training in schools and colleges would be wise. The spirit, however, of this proposal is to make military training universal, so that if America calls on these men they will have sufficient preliminary training, and we will not have to go to the expense of drilling them and training them in the primary grades of military knowledge before they are called upon to undergo more intensive training and discipline.

Mr. President, I think for the Senate at this time to go on record against universal military service is unwise. Pass this amendment to-day, and it will be a message to the boys in the camps and the boys "over there" that America intends to supply from the young men of the country the reserves to take the place, when necessary, of the boys who have gone to the other side. It will be a message to the allies that we mean business and that all the young men of America will be ready for the call to the colors. The only source we have for our Army in this country are the men who will become of age in the next 16 years; they must fight the battles of the future. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] some days ago said that this war would be over in six months. If he is right and the war should terminate in six months, it is going to be a German victory, and we must fight on; and if it is not terminated in six months we will fight for two or three years, because we will not stop until German militarism has been beaten down.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I understood the Senator from New Jersey to state a moment ago that the defeat of this amendment would be construed as a disapproval of universal military service. Does not the Senator think that he states the proposition a little too baldly in making that statement? Speaking for myself, I am in favor of military service, but I am not quite satisfied, in view of the immense drafts that are to be made upon the Government in men and in treasure within the next few months and years, that it would be the part of wisdom to adopt this amendment. We have no place for the training of the young men; the cantonments will be required to take care of the thousands and hundreds of thousands, and even millions, in my judgment, that must be called into military service; and there are many other objections which will readily occur to the able Senator. Does not he think, in view of those facts, that the statement is too strong, that to defeat this amendment is a registering of opposition to military service?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think it would be very unwise at this time to defeat any measure that provides for universal military service or training in this country. I will say to the Senator from Utah that when we passed the conscription act there were grave doubts in the minds of many whether it could be imposed and whether it would be successful. It has created one of the greatest armies—limited, it is true, to a million and a half of men—that has ever been raised; and there is no question about the success of the draft.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will yield further——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KING. I want, speaking for myself, to say that I never had any doubt about the success of the draft law.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If the Senator will permit me to finish my sentence, I will be very glad to suffer an interruption. Since we passed the conscription act and raised our Army the situation has changed. Russia has broken down, Germany has advanced far into France, and the allies' lines are threatened. It is up to America now to consider future military preparation.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. NEW. I will ask the Senator if he does not know from the news of this morning that the present Government of Russia is advocating immediate universal military training for that country?

Mr. BORAH. That must be encouraging news for the whole world.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understand that such a statement was in the papers this morning. All that I can say is that Russia is beginning a little late.

Mr. President, I certainly believe that it is our duty, as a Senate, to say to the country that the young men of 19, 20, and 21 years shall be trained preliminary to the draft. I believe it is our duty at this time to pass this measure. It will be a message to Germany that the limit of our Army is not a million and a half men; that we have other resources.

Mr. President, in closing, I simply want to cite a little incident that happened to me. When about to vote for the declaration of war there came into my office a number of worthy women who were pacifists and who urged me to vote for preparedness, but against the declaration of war. They said, "Do not send our boys to be cannon fodder," and I must say that their appeal made an impression upon me. I came over to the Senate, and as I entered the Chamber a message was handed to me which contained a letter from a patriotic woman of New Jersey 70 years old. In that letter were three verses which give, I think, the most eloquent description of America's position in this war that I have since read. I have long wanted to put those three verses in the RECORD, and in my closing remarks and in my appeal to the Senate to vote for this amendment I am going to recite them to the Senate:

There came to us this edict, "Ye must not sail the sea
Except as I shall order and in the path prescribed by me."
Then, like a fire that smouldered and at a touch outblazed,
The deep voice of the Nation in protest loud was raised.

We want no conflict; we have seen its horror from afar,
Stripped of all the nakedness of a ruthless, cruel war.
But a united Nation sends answer back to-day,
"The sea is free and we shall go unhindered on our way."

From North and South and East and West rings out the same refrain—
The heritage our fathers gave to us we will maintain.
Be steady, oh, my country, for the men you bred will stand
A bulwark firm forever to guard the sea and land.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, before the Senator from New Jersey takes his seat I should like to ask a few questions, thinking, inasmuch as he is a member of the Military Affairs Committee, that he can give me the information I want. Will the Senator advise me how many men are yet available under the present draft law for field service?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understand that the first draft was about 175,000 short, and that 75,000 additional men have been called, and that there are about 100,000 more to be called.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think perhaps the Senator misunderstands my question. How many men are there subject to the present draft liable to be called for active service if desired?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The draft act provides for about 1,500,000 men. I understand in the first draft about 687,000 were called. So I presume that the next draft will contain over 600,000.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Still I have not made myself clear. I want to know how many men are embraced in the terms of the present draft law and what percentage of them are fit for fighting? That is putting my question in another way.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. As I understand, the Senator's question means, How many men are now registered between the ages of 21 and 31?

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is right; and not in active service.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understand the estimate is about 10,000,000 men.

Mr. NEW. It is short of that.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Well, over 9,000,000, I understand.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Can the Senator tell me the estimate of the number of men the Chamberlain resolution, now pending, will produce per year?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The draft at the present time classifies the men into four classes, and it will call, it is estimated, between 500,000 and 700,000 men, divided into the four classes provided by the registration. I should estimate probably 250,000 or 300,000, as a guess.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In the first class, does the Senator mean?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The first class—less, rather than more.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And about 600,000 in all classes?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. From 500,000 to 600,000; yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator tell me how many men are available under the present law registered in class 1?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not know.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Does the Senator know, or have any of the advocates of this bill estimated, how many men the present cantonments of the country will accommodate?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Well, Mr. President, answering that question, I think that I can satisfy the Senator that there will be plenty of accommodations for the entire drafted army that we may choose to train.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I assume that.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. We are sending men out of the country very rapidly and there is plenty of capacity in the cantonments. There are also, of course, many large encampments where tentage could be used.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am not questioning that the number of men required for training to fight this war can be accommodated in the training camps and cantonments; but, still, I should like to know how many men can be accommodated in these cantonments?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

Mr. KIRBY. About a million.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Not yet; I intend to answer the question of the Senator from Delaware, if I can. At the present time there are, as I understand, in the camps and cantonments of the country about 1,200,000 men, less the number of men who will be transported to the other side. The capacity of the cantonments probably in the next six months will be largely increased, because 400,000 or 500,000 men will be transported.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The capacity of the cantonments will not be increased unless more are built. Their capacity, as I understand the Senator to say, is about 1,200,000.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. We are sending men to the other side and some of them are being transported to camps where tents are used.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; I understand that; but the capacity of the cantonments remains the same whether men are in them and whether men have been moved out or not.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Not necessarily so. There are some cantonments capable of housing 60,000 men, which are now accommodating only 20,000 or 30,000 men.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The capacity of that cantonment would be 60,000 men.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Possibly, or it might be 80,000 with additional tentage. Will the Senator tell me what he is driving at, and I will try to answer his question?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think I have, Mr. President, made it as plain as I can make it. I asked the question of the Senator, who is a member of the Military Affairs Committee, What is the capacity of the cantonments of the United States? I do not care how many are in them. "Capacity" is a very well-defined term.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I should say the capacity was about a million and a half men.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I think I may be able to throw a little light on the subject of the cantonments. No one of the cantonments is at present taxed to its capacity. My understanding, my information, is that they could accommodate now about 40 per cent more men than they have. I do not state that as an absolute fact, but that is my understanding of the situation, and as I believe it to be. Now, Mr. President, it is also a fact that a large number of men—I think substantially all of them—are to be withdrawn from those cantonments in the very near future, leaving them comparatively open to new occupants.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Still the Senator who rose to answer the question has not as yet answered it. What is the maximum capacity of the cantonments?

Mr. NEW. I tried to answer that question by saying that the cantonments now had about 40 per cent more capacity than they are called upon to provide, and they are now housing something like 1,250,000 men.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then the total capacity would be 40 per cent more than that, would it?

Mr. NEW. That is what I meant to say—about 40 per cent more than that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question in that connection? Does the Senator from Indiana propose to use any of these military cantonments, that are now used for the training of the actual soldiers, for training these boys within the next two years?

Mr. NEW. That will be entirely at the option of the War Department. I should think they would be used in part, at least.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should certainly think so.

Mr. NEW. Now, Mr. President, in further explanation of the amendment, I should like to call attention to the fact that the amendment provides that these men may be called under regulations to be prescribed by the President. No definite time is fixed for it; and many men could be taken care of at auspicious seasons of the year, under canvas, if necessary, without detriment to their health or anything of the sort, if the time of year is properly selected.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Has not one of the complaints been that these tent camps have been productive of disease in the Army, more so than the cantonments?

Mr. NEW. I think the complaint has been that the tent camps were used at a time of year when they were not suited for the occupancy of troops.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask the Senator another question? I profess to no particular knowledge of military questions; but is it not true that a cantonment is far superior to a canvas camp as a place in which to accommodate soldiers?

Mr. NEW. I certainly think it is; and, in addition to that, Mr. President, I will state that if additional cantonment accommodations are necessary for the care of these troops they should be built, and would be built, I take it. I do not mean to say for a moment that it is contemplated to take care of these men under canvas. I say that it can be done in part without detriment to the health of the men, provided the element of season and locality is taken into account, as it may be under the wording of this joint resolution.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator, who is the author of this amendment, undertake to answer another question? In the Senator's judgment, how many officers will be needed to train these men from 19 to 21 years of age?

Mr. NEW. That would depend entirely upon the rapidity with which those men were called, and it is impossible to answer that question.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator who is the author of the amendment, I suppose, has a general outline of the plan in his mind. According to the Senator's notion, how many officers would be required to train these men in the fashion in which he thinks they should be trained?

Mr. NEW. Oh, Mr. President, that is a question that I could not definitely answer, and I do not think anybody else could; but that it would require a large number of officers goes without saying.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. NEW. I do.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana if he believes that in the event this amendment should be adopted the President should use any discrimination as between the young men who would be subject to this draft? Does he believe that the President should have the right to select a few, and such few as he might designate, to take this training and exempt the others?

Mr. NEW. No. I never have thought and never intended that there should be discrimination in the mere matter of taking the men. I have intended that all should be made subject to military training, but that the time of year and the conditions under which they may be trained shall be left to the option of the President.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then, Mr. President, does not the Senator realize that if this amendment be adopted it will be necessary, in the interest of fairness to all, to make such a provision as will provide for equal training of all the young men within the respective ages?

Mr. NEW. I think the amendment does make provision for that, Mr. President.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. And does the Senator believe that at this time we should provide facilities for training this large number of men, in addition to the enormous task which we already have upon our hands?

Mr. NEW. That is just exactly what I mean, Mr. President.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. As I take it, between these ages we will find somewhere between twelve and fifteen hundred thousand men.

Mr. NEW. I think that is approximately correct.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. And these men will be coming of age every day, some of them, reaching the point where they are not subject to training under this amendment, and, of course, then they become subject to the general draft; but others will be coming in all the time. I should like to know whether or not any estimates have been made as to the cost of assembling all of these young men, the cost of equipping them, and the cost of giving them this instruction? Has there been any estimate made of the cost of the operation of this amendment, assuming that is shall be fairly and generally applied?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I have made no estimate as applied to these men. I take it that the cost of training these men will be comparatively small. It will cost no more and no less, perhaps, to train a boy between 19 and 21 than to train one between 21 and 23.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NEW. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. Did the committee take any evidence on this proposition?

Mr. NEW. No.

Mr. NORRIS. Did they call anyone from the department to give them an estimate as to how many men there are in the country between the ages of 19 and 21?

Mr. NEW. No. They called no one for that particular purpose, but the committee had the benefit of estimates.

Mr. NORRIS. What were those estimates of the total number of men in the country between the ages of 19 and 21?

Mr. NEW. It is estimated that something less—not a great deal less—than 1,000,000 men reach the age of 21 years in this country each year. I take it that about as many reach the ages of 20 and 19. From them, of course, must be deducted those who are exempted for various causes.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but the exemptions would not be as great as the exemptions that take men out of the regular military service, because one of the objects would be to fix up men who are not in good shape.

Mr. NEW. That, I think, is one of the strong arguments for the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; probably. Now, I want to ask the Senator if anyone gave an estimate of the cost based on a service of six months in the year of all these men?

Mr. NEW. Not with direct reference to this amendment. As I say, it has been assumed—and I think the assumption a fair one—that the cost of training men between the ages of 19 and 21 will not materially differ from the cost of training men of any other age.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Indiana a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. NEW. I yield.

Mr. FALL. I think possibly the question asked by my colleague, the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], was directed at the question which I asked first, and which provoked the colloquy between the Senator from Tennessee and myself.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I want to call attention to the fact that if we take it one at a time, probably the debate will last longer. We can not hear what is said.

Mr. FALL. I am talking by myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is talking, the Senator from Indiana having yielded to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. The Senator yielded for a question, which I am putting to him, with reference directly to the Senator's amendment.

Mr. NEW. The Senator desired to ask me a question.

Mr. FALL. I stated that, in my judgment, the amendment would allow the President of the United States to exempt from immediate draft boys who are in attendance upon military schools. My colleague [Mr. JONES of New Mexico] has asked if, in the opinion of the Senator who introduces the amendment, there should be any discrimination. Now, is it not within the knowledge of the Senator that there have been exemptions, perfectly proper exemptions, from the general operation of the rules and regulations in the matter of students in attendance at colleges and schools?

Mr. NEW. Yes.

Mr. FALL. Is it not in the discretion of the President now, and would it not remain in his discretion, for example, to do as the Secretary of the Navy did with reference to enlistments in the Marine Corps and in the Navy—to notify the boys that, while they had been accepted, they would not be called, if they chose to remain in school, until the next six months, or the expiration of their term?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, by way of a general answer to that question, I think that very broad latitude is given to the President under the language of the amendment.

Mr. FALL. Is he not pursuing and has he not been pursuing that course with reference to the present law?

Mr. NEW. Exactly.

Mr. FALL. That is all that I wished to ask.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I voted this morning against laying this amendment on the table; but I did so for the reason that I did not think it was the parliamentary way, in fairness, to dispose of the amendment. It seemed to me that it was fair to have some expression of opinion more than had been had in regard to the amendment before it was finally disposed of. I did not, however, vote against laying it on the table because I was in favor of the amendment; and very briefly I desire to state why I am opposed to it at this juncture of affairs.

I do not propose to discuss the merits or demerits of universal military training. I doubt very much if that question is before us, when we consider the form and the meager provisions of the amendment. Whatever may be the merits or demerits of the system, to my mind it should be disposed of in a different way and at a different time by the Senate. I do not conclude myself therefore on the question of universal military training by my opposition to this amendment. It seems to me that all our policies at this time must necessarily be controlled to some extent by the supreme exigency which now confronts us. Our policies must necessarily take into consideration the fact that there is an immediate situation to meet, and that anything which subtracts from our efforts in any particular line in the meeting of that situation should be considered in shaping our policies.

We have at this time, according to the information which I have been able to gather from supposedly reliable sources, some 300,000 men in the Navy, some 250,000 men in the Regular Army, some 650,000 men in the National Army, and available under the present draft law as it now exists two and a quarter million men. This resolution, if adopted, will make available for training a million more of the young men of the country. It is the belief of those who have investigated the matter that about a million boys come of age each year. Then if we adopt the New amendment we will take out of our industries and agricultural life about 2,000,000 more for at least a portion of the year. By such a program we will break down our productive industries, both agricultural and manufacturing.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does it not really classify the men between 19 and 21, under the language used, just as the balance, except that they can not be sent to active service? Does it not, therefore, justify their being sent to cantonments and kept in cantonments at once? That is my serious objection to it.

Mr. BORAH. That is one of the objections; but I was going to say that we have this army, or available army, the figures of which I have just given; and if this amendment should be adopted we would draw from the industries and the agricultural interests of the country two million more, provided and assuming that the law is going to be executed.

Mr. President, the first objection that I have to this amendment, assuming now that one favors universal training, is that the Congress is not doing its duty in regard to the measure by leaving the entire matter to the discretion of one who has already declared himself against it. The Secretary of War in his report has stated plainly that in his judgment this is not the time to invoke universal military training; and yet we would be engaged in passing a measure which would leave it entirely to his discretion—as I assume that his discretion in this respect is the discretion of the President, and his judgment is that of the President—one who thinks it is unwise at this time to adopt universal military training, or to call these boys into the cantonments for the purpose of putting them in condition to meet their future obligations as soldiers. The amendment is wholly inadequate. It provides no machinery, makes no provisions for the carrying out of this most important program, and finally leaves the whole thing to be executed or not to one who is entirely against the plan. Congress is not meeting the situation at all.

This amendment says:

Provided, That all registered male persons who have attained the age of 19 years shall be subject to military training in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, but shall not be called for active service until they have attained the age of 21 years.

If universal military training is worthy of the consideration of the Congress of the United States at this time certainly the Congress should go far enough to prescribe the manner in which this training should be had, and make it obligatory. I would not want, myself, to deal with so important a matter by leaving it entirely to the discretion of one who has been frank enough to state that he is opposed to its execution at this time. So, Mr. President, whether you view it as an advocate of universal miltiary training or whether you are opposed to it, to my mind the amendment wholly fails to meet the situation as it should be met.

The able Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] stated that he thought the passage of this amendment would be notice to Germany of which Germany would have to take consideration; that it would notify the German people that we were preparing to meet this situation in accordance with the best rules of military preparation. Now, no doubt it would be a matter of great disturbance to Germany, and to Hindenburg particularly, to know that the Congress had passed a joint resolution leaving the training of its young men to a Secretary of War who has declared against the proposition in advance of the passage of the joint resolution. Viewing it from this standpoint, it seems to me that we ought to meet the situation as becomes the Senate in regard to such a matter, if we are going to take it up at all.

But to my mind, Mr. President, that is not the most serious objection to the adoption of this amendment at this time. If we shall assume the statute would be executed, let us look at the matter from another standpoint. There is very much in this war aside from getting men in uniform or sending them to the cantonments and training them. We have got to take care of our industrial and agricultural interests as we go along, and we have already drained those two walks of life far beyond the point of safety. I see no reason why we should take the young men of 19 and 20, in this exigency, under these circumstances, away from the industries of life where they are absolutely needed in order to sustain the war quite as much as they are in the cantonments.

A few days ago the President issued an address asking the young men of the cities and those who were not already engaged upon the farm to volunteer to go out upon the farm and to assist in raising the food which is absolutely essential to the maintenance of our part in this struggle. I think it is absolutely essential, and I think if that call is not properly answered other steps will have to be taken to meet the exigency. I presume that I am in no different position from that of many other Senators upon the floor, perhaps all Senators; but our mail is deluged with letters from those in the agricultural regions, stating that they are compelled to cut out their acreage, reduce their acreage, and reduce their crops, because of the want of labor. I know that so far as the State is concerned which I represent here in part, the only help left upon the farm is the boys 19 or 20 years of age. The others, of course, are subject to draft and subject to call; and the only ones left upon whom you can rely, who are there as permanent factors, whom you can depend upon throughout the year, are the ones who will be called under this amendment.

Does the able Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] believe that it would be wise, even if we could, to go into the agricultural regions of Indiana, onto the farms of Indiana, and draw away the boys of 19 and 20 from the farms and put them into a training camp? I do not think it is a wise thing to do; and that is the supreme reason why I could not support his amendment, even if I were in favor of universal military training.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. NEW. In answer to the question put to me by the Senator from Idaho, I will say that I have tried to obviate that objection as far as possible by giving the President as much latitude as has been given him in prescribing the time of the year when these men may be taken. It has been my thought that the men who come from the farms may be taken at one time of the year and that the men in Idaho may be taken at a different time of year from the men in Florida, under such regulations as the President may prescribe. I recognize as well as the Senator from Idaho or as anybody else that farmers are short of help, just as everybody else is short of help; and I would go just as far as it is possible to go in meeting that objection.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the proposition as stated by the Senator shows the impossibility of putting into execution at this time universal military training without interfering with the efficient conduct of the war—that is, if you are going to have universal military training, if you are going to have anything except theory and the most scanty and inadequate enforcement of it, you must necessarily invade the domain of the farmer and the industries of the country generally.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. Just a moment. Let me say to the Senator, Mr. President, that it may be a little different in his State, where a particular crop is raised and disposed of. It might be possible there to draw away boys at a certain time of year, but it is not possible at this time to take the boy of 19 and 20 from the farm in diversified farming at any time of year without interfering with the production of food.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, you must invade somebody's domain every time you make a soldier.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly, Mr. President; but we must have due regard to the supply of labor which is necessary. For instance, the Senator would not be willing to draw all labor from the industries and all labor from the farm. We must take that into consideration. Now, when you take into consideration the fact that we have made subject to draft every boy between 21 and 31, and when you take into consideration the fact that by this joint resolution you are adding a million more, are you not overstepping reason when you undertake to go further and take 2,000,000 more boys from these same industries and from these sources of supply? In other words, Mr. President, it seems to me you are giving too much consideration to the mere question of equipping men, and not enough consideration to the feeding of these men after they are equipped, which in my judgment is going to be the supreme question in this war before it shall be finally decided.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. NEW. I think that if you are to take the boys from 19 to 21 it will allow the exemption of more men than would otherwise be allowed to be exempted of ages beyond, say, 29 to 31. It would permit the exemption of a greater number of older men, skilled mechanics, trained farm laborers, and so on, than could be permitted if the younger men were to be left out of all account.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me apparent, Mr. President, that the able Senator from Indiana, while very much in favor of the principle, and with that I am not arguing with him at all, has overlooked the practical operation of the amendment at this time.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. In just a moment I will yield. I have on my desk here, which I shall not take the time of the Senate to read—I had intended to do so, but I do not wish to delay this measure—a great number of letters from all parts of the country which I have culled out with reference to the situation upon the farm, and I am sure that this amendment would only create additional disturbance and disconcert additionally the men who are striving to meet the President's call and the country's call to produce in order to feed the men who have already been drafted. Does the Senator from Indiana expect to see the army which is now available under the draft law in place in their training camps in this country?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I think that all the army that is provided for by the draft, and possibly many more, may be required before much time has elapsed for the prosecution of the war on the part of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. The question occurs to me whether there are not two or three months in every year when farm help will not be engaged in the planting and sowing of crops or cultivating crops, of the thrashing or caring for crops, which two or three months might be spent in military training. If the Senator will bear with me, I have in my mind, of course, the farming region of the Northern and of the Northwestern States. It simply occurred to me that there were those months during which there is little demand for farm labor, and the boys from the farm might spend that time in military training.

It might, if the Senator will permit me, cause some inconvenience during the winter season, but we can hardly put this upon the ground of simple convenience. It will require some sacrifice in some cases, but as a general proposition there will in the farm region of the North Temperate Zone be two or three months during the year, or, I should say, from two to four months during which there is little farm work being done.

Mr. BORAH. My observation and my experience with reference to northwestern farming would lead me to say that if the Secretary of War or the administration at Washington should undertake to conform its rules and regulations to the desires and needs of the farmer as to when he would particularly need his help or his boy upon the farm, you would find that the farmer would lose out in the contest every time.

Mr. STERLING. If the——

Mr. BORAH. Just a word. The Senator is well acquainted with the fact that there has been a special request from all over the country that the next draft except those who are on the farm, and there seems to be a disposition to do that. In fact, it has been stated upon the floor of the Senate that that would be the policy. In view of the fact that we have reached a point where the farm is already depleted of its labor to such an extent that the law now upon the statute books can not be put in operation, is it wise to call for additional men from the farms and to put them in a position where they can not be of service to those who are engaged in agricultural interests?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. NEW. I think objection is made by every man engaged in the industry of agriculture or of any other description to have men taken by the draft. I get letters every day from manufacturers in the State which I in part represent, who complain of the shortage of labor, and they are pleading for all sorts of congressional enactments which would leave their men free from military service, which would prevent them from being drawn from the particular towns in which the manufacturing industries are located to be sent to other places for other forms of labor, and all that sort of thing. I think we will find objection from the manufacturer who is depending upon men just as much as the farmer to about as great an extent as we will from the farmer.

I recognize fully that there are many objections to taking men, but——

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senator accentuates the strength of my argument. I am not so familiar with the manufacturing interests, and therefore I have spoken with reference to the farm; but I have no doubt that the same depletion of labor forces exists in the manufacturing industries. It is one of the serious questions now with reference to railroading. One of the causes of the embarrassment in railroading is the scarcity of labor, and this will draw away from railroads, it will draw away from the manufacturing industries, it will draw away from the farms.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Just a moment. So I say, Mr. President, this policy of universal military training must necessarily conform at this time to the exigency which confronts us. We can not declare ourselves in favor of universal military training outright and put it into effect without taking into consideration at this particular time in this particular emergency that there is need for these boys in other places. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I was going to call the Senator's attention to the fact that whereas the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] may with some plausibility, though not with any merit, argue that there are times in the year when farm labor can be taken from the farm without prejudicing the work going on upon the farm, the fact, nevertheless, remains that there is not a day in the year when labor can be taken from the manufacturing industry without doing it an injury. Therefore, if the farmer only will be taken because there are certain months in the year when he will not have to work and be subjected to this training and the industries left every day at work, will we not come to a pass two years hence when the young men undergoing training under the New amendment will reach the draft age, and is it not the logical thing to do, if the policy of the amendment is carried out, to call the men to train who are on the farm and leave the men in the industries to work in the industries from day to day?

Mr. BORAH. I referred a moment ago to the fact that the President had made a special plea to the young men of the country to take up work upon the farms, and I notice in a paper that came to me this morning a statement from ex-President Roosevelt to the same effect. He, I understand, is very earnestly in favor of universal military training, and has been for some time. He says:

> I wish to express my hearty and unreserved support of the boys' working reserve to include the boys between the ages of 16 and 21 who ordinarily would not be in productive labor and who can be turned into workers on the farm. The farmer has been prompt to recognize that the strong, healthy boy is a tremendous help at this time. One of the great benefits conferred is that of making the boy realize that he is a part of Uncle Sam's team, that he is doing his share in this great war, and that he holds his services in trust for the Nation.

Now, what we would do if we put this into effect is to turn the boy back who has started for the farm and send him to the camp and train him. It is to direct his attention to another point, and that is to military training, instead of helping in the industries of the country.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. NEW. If the Senator will yield further, recognizing as I do the shortness of labor on the farm, but at the same time realizing what I feel is the necessity for training soldiers in this country in the present tremendous emergency, I wish to say that I think it is high time there should be enacted here some kind of a draft measure that would take every loafer in this country—and by that I mean a man who is not actually and actively employed in some way that contributes to the public good—and send that man to the farm, to send every man who is not engaged in some useful enterprise to the farm, and draft men for that purpose exactly as men are drafted to go as soldiers. I think the first industry that should be regarded in the enactment of that form of draft should be the agricultural interests.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator and I are very apart on this proposition. The Senator seems to think there will be a practical way to put it into operation without interfering with the industries or the farm. I do not think so, and that is the difference between us. I think it would render the situation so uncertain and hazardous that it would reduce the acreage in this country and reduce the farmer's efforts tremendously just to know that his boy was subject to a call at any time if the administration here would see fit to call him.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FALL. I have no desire to make a speech myself, but I want to ask the Senator a question. The Senator's objection, as I understand it, which he is now urging is based upon the assumption that the present rules and regulations with reference to drilling and training will prevail if this amendment passes, and that of the men whom it is sought now to place in semimilitary service will be subject to draft under the present rules and regulations. I think that is the base of the Senator's objection.

Mr. BORAH. I assume they will be called into training.

Mr. FALL. Would not the same objection apply if it is left in the discretion of the President of the United States? I do not think that should be allowed. I think Congress should perform its constitutional duty. Would not the same objection apply if the old National Guard system were adopted? We are told that half the troops now available of the force are of the National Guard. They were trained at night, one day a week possibly, and yet practically half the men we have in France are National Guardsmen.

Mr. BORAH. I do not understand, although I may be in error, that the training which the National Guard received at the night training was regarded as very much of an asset.

Mr. FALL. I simply point to the newspaper reports of the very gallant fight the Sixty-ninth New York recently made in France.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; but the Sixty-ninth New York had a vast amount of training on the Mexican border.

Mr. FALL. They were on the Mexican line, undoubtedly.

Mr. BORAH. My understanding is that the National Guard was rendered effective by the training upon the Mexican border or the training which came along after the call to arms.

Mr. FALL. This is the point I wish to direct the Senator's attention. Suppose, for instance, that upon a farm in his State it was the policy of the Government to send a private or noncommissioned officer to that farm to train the men who are subject to the draft, and right there one afternoon in the week or one day in the week train them. Make the farmer pay the expense. The Government is not to bear the expense. The only way we should give military training to those men is to train them in squads. It is the modern system to train in squads and platoons. A great advantage of German soldiers, we are now told by the newspapers, in the battle which is now being fought is that they are under the leadership of noncommissioned officers.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, we then come to the proposition of getting officers by which to conduct these training schools, which would be a tremendous strain, it seems to me, upon our official life in the Army.

Mr. FALL. I do not think we should take the officers. As a matter of fact, we could let them go and take privates or noncommissioned officers for the purpose of training the squads.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I revert back for a minute to the amendment because I want to ask the Senator from Indiana if he will enlighten me as to the proviso. I understand the Senator from South Dakota has now withdrawn his amendment.

Mr. STERLING. It was understood that it was withdrawn.

Mr. BORAH. This proviso reads:

> That all registered male persons who have attained the age of 19 years shall be subject to military training in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, but shall not be called for active service until they have attained the age of 21 years.

Does not the Senator know that the administration is, whatever may be its ultimate view with reference to universal military training, opposed to putting it into effect during the war?

Mr. NEW. I do not know that positively. I apprehend that it is true.

Mr. BORAH. Does not the Senator think, in view of the fact that the President is being constantly deluged from all parts of the country to secure labor, to bring labor to this locality and that locality, and in view of the predilection which he entertains with reference to this matter, that undoubtedly this never would be put into effect during the war?

Mr. NEW. I do not know that.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, the Senator does not know it, but there is sufficient information upon which he might base his judgment, in my opinion.

Mr. NEW. Under this provision, at least, the President may use his discretion; and I fear, Mr. President, that the occasion will arise when the President will have to exercise that discretion in carrying out the terms of the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have occupied more time than I expected. I shall simply conclude by saying that regardless of the merits or demerits of universal military training I am opposed to putting it into effect or attempting to put it into effect either in this way or at this time. I do not believe the amendment would aid the prosecution of the war, but hinder it. There is no more serious problem connected with this whole vast war program than that of feeding our soldiers and our allies. We must not call a single man from the farm or from the industries of the country who is not being trained for immediate service. The merits of this great question will be taken up when this exigency is past, and then Congress can dispose of it with detail and with a fullness commensurate with the importance of the subject.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I shall not at this time discuss the question of compulsory universal military training. That is a question which has two sides, and a great deal can be said on both sides. To my mind, important as that question is, the particular proposition before the Senate does not properly involve it. Of course, if we adopt the amendment it will be assumed by its adoption that we are in favor of it, but if we do not vote for it, it does not follow by any means that at the proper time and under the proper circumstances Senators who vote against it now would vote against it then. Personally I do not see how I can tell which way I want to vote on that question until I know what kind of a peace is the result of the present great conflict. It is to be hoped that when peace comes it may be such a peace that the world will not, under the treaty that will be agreed on then, be permitted to hold itself under arms during all the years that will follow. It is to be hoped that we will have a peace that will make universal training, large navies, and large standing armies absolutely useless. If there should be a peace that does not settle that question I should favor, and I presume we would be under the necessity of favoring, a large standing army and a continual preparation for war. If as a result of this conflict there must be armed troops and preparation immediately begun for the next conflict that must follow, then compulsory universal training may be necessary. I hope that may not be.

But we are in a struggle now, Mr. President, where we want to exert and are exerting every power to bring about success and victory. It is not contended very seriously at least that this amendment if adopted will add anything in our efforts to bring victory to our arms in the present struggle. Very few people believe that the war is going to last for two years more, but even conceding that we have a long struggle, to get very much benefit out of the amendment the war would have to last longer than two years.

Now, we are in a struggle. We are told every day that food will win the war, that fuel will win the war; and we know that food and fuel are necessaries in order that we may win it. We know that a great many of the industries must go on. We must manufacture ammunition, guns, and cannon and other things necessary to keep our Army at the front. We must make clothing and we must produce food in greater abundance than we are producing it at the present time unless we ourselves go with less to eat and less to wear.

That is the condition confronting us, and here we come with a proposition that will not materially aid the war; but what will it do? It will take out of the industries and off the farms of this country 2,000,000 men in the prime of life. Various estimates have been given, but I think it can be said that around a million men become 21 years old every year, another million become 19, and another million become 20. So if we take two years we are taking in round numbers 2,000,000 men now engaged in all the industries of the country to keep our Army in line and to supply them with food and material necessary to carry on the war.

We are taking the men out of these industries without being able to put them in the trenches. If we took them out and put them in the Army it would be a different thing. We are only going to train them for use two years hence or three or four or five years hence. That is the proposition which confronts the Senate. I think when the country understands it, no man who favors, for instance, universal military training would be censured if he voted against this amendment under the circumstances.

To my mind, Mr. President, we injure our Army, we take away our resources, we deprive ourselves of one of the material methods by which we can bring victory if we pass this amendment. I know it is said the men will not be taken away all the time, but suppose they are taken away six months in the year or three months in the year.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will permit me to correct his statement, in all probability they would not be taken for six months in the year.

Mr. NORRIS. I am coming to that a little later on. Nobody knows what the period will be.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. Does not the Senator think it would be a good plan if the farmer's boy in the North got off four months in the wintertime and was sent down to a southern cantonment and given military drill for that period? They would come back in the spring better fitted to work on the farm and do spring work than if they stayed at home hanging around stoves during the winter, especially in a prairie country, where they have not any work to do in the winter on the farm.

Mr. NORRIS. After the draft has been supplied there are mighty few farms in this country from which you can take the boys from 19 to 21, even in the wintertime, without injuring the agricultural production of the country.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. FALL. I should like to ask the Senator by what process of reasoning he arrives at the conclusion that there will be a greater proportion of the boys selected under this amendment than have been taken out under the draft?

Mr. NORRIS. That is a fair question and I will answer the Senator. When we select the men to go into the Army under the draft there are a great many exemptions. Certain rules and regulations are provided, and if a drafted man does not come up to those in all respects he is rejected.

I understand all those who have here advocated universal compulsory military training have always claimed—and I think there is something in it, I am not saying it is not true—that one of the benefits which will come from universal training will be that men who are deficient in many respects will be cured of the disability by this training. So when we are selecting these men for training undoubtedly we will not apply the same rule that was applied when we were selecting men to go into service in the Army. So there will not be as many exemptions from this class as there were from those who were selected under the draft.

Mr. FALL. I think the Senator has answered frankly the question as he understood it. I do not think, however, he exactly caught my point. We have now approximately in a year 600,000 men out of 10,000,000 men, and out of 2,000,000 that may be taken, if the same percentage were selected for training under this measure, I see nothing to prevent calling 122,000 out of the total of 2,000,000; in other words, about 61,000 out of a million.

Mr. NORRIS. That is, taking everybody out, as is done in the draft.

Mr. FALL. As we do now.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not have any idea that that would be done. I do not think it ought to be done. As the Senator from Washington suggests, it would not be universal military training.

Mr. FALL. That is largely my objection to the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the proposal is objectionable not only as it affects the farmer—for there might be seasons in the year, as the Senator from Minnesota has suggested, when the farmer could be taken away without so much damage to him—but as it affects the man in the factory who is making munitions, the man who is making clothing for the soldier, and men in a hundred other occupations that are necessary to be kept up. You can not take those men out for military training in the winter time or the summer time or the autumn or the spring without interfering with their work. Suppose you take a man out for three months. What does it mean to the industry in which he is employed? It is not only the loss of that man for three months, but it interferes with the whole machinery; it interferes with the whole plan. If 2,000,000 men in this country are taken out of necessary industries and off the farms of the country, I want to tell you that we shall be short of food, we shall be short of ammunition, short of guns, and short of everything that is necessary to win this war——

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of New Mexico in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I want to make a suggestion for the consideration of the Senator, because as he has been speaking a thought or two combatting his view, arose in my mind. The Senator knows that in the wintertime there are high schools, universities, colleges, and other educational institutions which are then being conducted as well as at other periods of the year. In those universities, schools, colleges, and other institutions of learning are a great many thousands and hundreds of thousands of young men. Suppose that this amendment were so amended as to permit the President to designate institutions of learning or schools or colleges as the places where military training might be given, provided they adopted such standards of training as might be prescribed, why could not the requisite military training be obtained in those institutions of learning at the same time that the boys were at school?

Mr. NORRIS. I rather think that to a great extent it could. Of course it is not by any means the proposition which is now pending before us, but, as it seems to me, a plan of that kind would do less damage to our war activities than this would do.

Mr. KING. And, if the Senator will pardon me further, might not some of the evils, which unquestionably this amendment would produce, be mitigated and ameliorated by regulations that would authorize local training—training at night? There will be unquestionably—and we, of course, deplore it—many officers wounded and returning from beyond the sea. They might be utilized in training the boys at home, in these colleges and schools, and thus meet, to some degree, the objection which is made to the lack of officers.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that would meet the objection in some degree, although it would not entirely meet it.

Mr. NEW. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has concluded, I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. KING. I have finished.

Mr. NEW. The Senator from Utah, I think, has gone a long way by his suggestion toward meeting the objection that we shall not have sufficient officers for training purposes. Mr. President, I understand that before this recent drive there were more than 60,000 English officers who had been invalided back home during this war. In time to come, and to come shortly, I fear, we shall find large numbers of our officers being invalided back to this country. Those officers, while no longer able to take their place at the front, would be available for service in the training of these young men, as has been suggested by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think we could probably utilize the services of those officers, and to the extent that it is possible it ought to be done, perhaps. Although that would not relieve the proposition of its great expense, it would partially do so. But, Mr. President, 2,000,000 men must be paid while they are in training; we must provide places for them; we should have to spend many millions and hundreds of millions of dollars in preparing those places and pay hundreds of millions of dollars for transportation. Even if you only trained them for a month those things would have to be done. We should have to provide, or we ought to provide at least, guns for their training. We ought to make provision to provide uniforms for the men while they are engaged in training; and has anybody figured out how much that would cost?

I offer this argument now, but not as one of the main arguments against the amendment, for if it would accomplish anything in the war the cost would be a secondary consideration, I concede; but if it is not going to do something toward putting men in the trenches and keeping them there and sustaining them there, then we ought to consider the cost as one of the important items, because the cost of the war is one of the burdens which, if the war continues long enough, will break down civilization. Civilization can not continue against the increasing cost and sustain it indefinitely, and everybody knows that. So we ought to consider the cost. This amendment, in my judgment, means not merely millions or hundreds of millions of dollars in expenditure but billions of dollars if it is to be carried on very long.

Mr. President, I want to come to the amendment itself and discuss it very briefly. I am not complaining against the man who claims that we ought now to have universal military training. But it seems to me that it is not right to put it on this joint resolution. It is not a joint resolution that anybody objects to, but everybody wants to see it passed; the administration wants it passed; it is a military measure which should be expeditiously passed. But here it is proposed to put on this amendment, which was never considered in committee, which has no committee report behind it. When the author of the amendment was asked on the floor of the Senate about the items of expense, the men, and so forth, he could only give estimates. The experts have not been called upon to give us the information. The amendment was offered first in the committee, and if not formally rejected, at least it was found that it could not pass the committee, not because the committee was not in favor of the principle involved but because they saw what I am trying to show here, that this is not an opportune time to do it, and so the proposition was offered on the floor of the Senate and comes before us in this way. It is as important a proposition as any that can ever come before Congress, and we are asked to put it on a joint resolution without any other consideration than it has had here in the Senate.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NEW. As to the matter of estimates, Mr. President, no estimate was made——

Mr. NORRIS. I so stated.

Mr. NEW. My recollection is that no estimate was made of the expenditures which would be involved in putting the draft law into effect. I do not think that any estimate which could have been made would have been at all accurate and worthy of consideration as to that law, and I think no estimate can be made as to this proposed amendment, except such an estimate as is based upon the experience we have had in the last year in training the men who have been brought in under the draft law.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the fact that there has been no estimate—and the Senator himself admits it—is one of the objections to the amendment; it is one of the reasons why it is immature and has not received proper consideration. Because there was no estimate made as to the draft law is no reason why there should not be one made about this amendment. As the Senator from Indiana says——

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to finish the sentence first, and then I will yield to the Senator.

As the Senator from Indiana says, the experience under the draft law would enable the officers to make an estimate—I think a rather accurate estimate—so that we could have been told all about it. If the amendment would take the regular course that legislation usually takes, all that would have come out in the hearings before the committee, which would have been printed and Senators could have read them here.

Now I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I was just about to say what the Senator from Nebraska has in substance himself said, that the experience we have had in training men during the last year is better than any estimate that could have been made in advance, and I think we can tell with substantial accuracy what this will cost by simply taking into account what it has cost within the last year to train an equal number of men who have been brought in under the draft law.

Mr. NORRIS. I fully agree with the Senator from Indiana, but that has not been done. This amendment has come in here with such little consideration that nobody has even tried to make the estimate. That is another illustration of why, it seems to me, the amendment should not be put on now. A great proposition of this kind, affecting all of the country and affecting everybody in it, ought at least to have had sufficient consideration so that there could have been an estimate made, when one could have been made so easily. The officials of the department, if called upon, could have undoubtedly given, as the Senator says, rather accurate information in the way of estimates about its cost; but they did not suppose this was going to be tried here. The military men realize that this will accomplish practically nothing so far as putting soldiers into this war is concerned, unless the war lasts more than two or three years.

Mr. President, let us see whether this amendment is fair. That is another reason why, in my judgment, it should not be adopted now. If we had passed a law for universal military training Congress ought to take upon its shoulders the responsibility that properly belongs to Congress and ought to provide by statute just how the training should be brought about, how much it should be, when it should be, how the Army should be officered, and as much detail as to that Army as of the Army that we have raised by the draft or the Regular Army. But what does this amendment say?

Provided, That all registered male persons who have attained the age of 19 years shall be subject to military training in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, but shall not be called for active service until they have attained the age of 21 years.

In my humble judgment, if we adopt that kind of a proposition we have abrogated our duty and turned the responsibility over to the President. We give the President full power to say whether the training shall be for 1 day or 2 days, 1 month, 6 months, 9 months, or 12 months. The Congress ought not to do that; it seems to me we ought not to go that far either in shifting responsibility from our shoulders or in giving power to the President that properly belongs to the legislative department of our Government. Not only can the President fix the time of training, but he can fix everything else; he can fix the pay; he can say that the men shall serve for 10 cents a day or that they shall receive a hundred dollars a month; he can do anything that is necessary to carry out the purpose of the amendment. I take it that he would carry it out in some way, and if he did he would have, as every one must concede, an enormous task on his hands.

I understood the Senator from Indiana to say that we have about 1,500,000 now in the cantonments. Is that right?

Mr. NEW. About 1,200,000.

Mr. NORRIS. About 1,200,000. Well, we would have that many in round numbers in the additional army which it is proposed to train, and we would pretty nearly have to duplicate the facilities we have now. Mr. President, if we are going to do that we ought to provide by law how it shall be done. If we are going to have universal military service, either now or at any other time, I am sure that we ought to provided by the law just how it shall proceed, instead of turning all our powers over to the President and saying nothing whatever with regard to any of the details or any of the arrangements for carrying out the provisions of the law.

Then, Mr. President, under the terms of the amendment the training is to cease with the termination of the war. I thought the other day, when I asked some questions about it, that it was the intention to have this as a permanent provision of law, but I find the amendment tacked on to a joint resolution that by its terms is to terminate when the war is over.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is my firm conviction that it is the purpose of the proponents of this measure to make it the beginning——

Mr. NORRIS. I understood so; yes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. To make it the beginning of a permanent system of universal military training. I think this is the entering wedge, from which I fear no good will come.

Mr. NORRIS. It is intended to be the entering wedge. I will ask those who believe in that policy, and believe in it earnestly, as I concede they do, is it fair to put it on a joint resolution which by its terms is to expire when the war is over? If it is to be the entering wedge is not that a sort of legislative camouflage, as a Senator suggests? Ought we not to meet the question fairly and squarely, and let it be passed on its merits?

If it is a good thing, if we want to have universal military service, why confine it to the war when the soldiers who will be trained will in all probability not be used in this war? It seems to me, Mr. President, that tacking the proposal on to a proposed law that is going to expire when the war is ended is worse than camouflage.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think the merit of the system of universal military training is not the question of paramount importance in the consideration of this measure. I realize as every other Senator must realize that the United States Government is confronted with a stupendous problem. It will test the metal of our men and try the endurance of our people. We do not know when the end will come; we do not know how many men it will require to finish the terrible undertaking, but we do know that the work itself can not be successfully accomplished without adequate food and clothing for our people at home, our soldiers abroad and our allies in foreign lands. There is scarcely a mail that does not bring to my office dozens of letters complaining of the scarcity of labor—labor for the farms and for other industrial enterprises. A Senator asked me a few moments ago how many months of the year it required to raise a cotton and corn crop in the South. My answer to him was, That it takes about 13 months of the year. If we take these men away from the industrial pursuits we will find ourselves short of foodstuffs and material with which to clothe and feed our people.

I will tell you, Mr. President, that the war can not be won with bullets alone. There must be the combined use of both bullets and bread. Battles can not be fought and won on empty stomachs. Men will find their courage failing when they know their wives and mothers and daughters and sons are at home starving, and when they themselves are suffering from the pinch of hunger. I beseech Senators to think on this phase of the problem. The world is crazed with a blood lust and the spirit of war has warped our judgment. We have more men, and will raise more men for service at the front under the present law, together with the amendment which the Senator from Oregon has proposed to the present law, than we will have ships to carry to the front in the next three years. If I had my way about it, I should send every bona fide farmer now in the Army back to his farm with the commission to raise a crop to sustain our women and children and our allies across the seas. I trust the Senate will see the importance of this suggestion and act favorably upon it before it is everlastingly too late.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and if we take——

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will indulge me further, I wish to say that if we take these men away from their farms and put them in cantonments and permit the land to lie fallow, we will find ourselves at the end of the year in desperate straits for the necessaries of life.

Mr. NORRIS. And while we are doing everything we can and straining every muscle and every nerve to build more ships, if we take away from shipbuilding activities all the young men between 19 and 21, even though we take them away for only three months in a year—and military training to be of any account, it seems to me, would have to extend over at least that length of time, and most people think the period ought to be six months—we would not only lose the time during which they are taken away, but we would have to have producers to support them when they become consumers instead of producers, and we would disarrange the entire shipbuilding program. Perhaps the men who will be taken may not be engaged directly in shipbuilding, but they will be located where they are supporting men and keeping men who are employed in shipbuilding. They can not be taken away without the whole superstructure being affected. It seems to me that it is a dangerous thing to do.

Mr. President, I am sorry that this amendment is pending. I know the time may come—I hope it will not, but it may come—when I would feel as though I were required to vote for this kind of a proposition; but that times is not here yet. I hope that the time will come—and come at the close of this war—when such a peace will prevail that such a proposition as that now under consideration will be unnecessary in any civilized country in the world.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, when this amendment was offered some days ago by my friend Senator NEW I was a little inclined to think that it would be a proper piece of legislation, and I had expected to vote for it. I am rather inclined to think that this country will come to universal military training when this war is over and we get our bearings again, but just now I do not think that our energies ought to be diverted from the main purpose of defeating our enemies, and upon somewhat more mature reflection I believe this amendment will unquestionably have that effect.

In the first place, it would take out of our industrial, commercial, and agricultural life about 2,000,000 of our young men. Those 2,000,000 men would be taken out of the producing class and put into the consuming class. Ought we not to go a little slow about it under those circumstances? A serious situation confronts us. At one step to take 2,000,000 men from the class of producers and turn them into the class of consumers is a matter that should be very carefully weighed before it is enacted into law.

Another reason why this legislation should not be adopted at this time is that it has not had that careful consideration which a measure of such scope and possibilities ought to have. The Military Affairs Committee has not reported it; it has not considered it during this session. It ought to be carefully considered by that committee. Every question that arises in connection with it should be carefully weighed; the cost should be carefully considered; the effect upon the production of the country should be carefully weighed and considered before we step off, as it were, into this new venture.

I am not arguing against universal military training, because I believe it is to come. The events of the last few years have shown us that in the future we must take a different course than that which this Nation has followed in the past in reference to military training; but this amendment does not provide for universal military training; it merely provides for universal military training of boys between 19 and 21 during the years of this war and no longer. That is all it does.

What effect is it going to have? What is the situation that confronts us? Do we need man power? Senators, we have now available all the man power, and more man power, than any other nation in the world. We have several million young men who are already subject to draft into the Army and who are ready to be trained at any moment. There is no reason in the world why the young men who have already been drafted can not be trained for our Army. Why are they not now inducted into service if we intended to have a larger Army for the protection of our country. It is because we have not the officers to train them; we have not the arms with which to equip them, and we have not the materials with which to clothe them while they are being trained.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If we have not the officers to train them, and if they ought to be trained, I desire to ask the Senator what legislation has been brought to our attention through which we may hope provision will at once be made for the training of a large additional force of officers?

Mr. McKELLAR. We are training officers now in large numbers under the legislation that has already been provided by Congress at this session and at the last session.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Progress seems to be very slow.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think it has been slow. In the last year we have added to our officers more largely than any other nation. We are training them as rapidly as they can be trained; we have training camps for officers in almost every State in the Union. We are training by scores of thousands. We are training them quite as rapidly as we can equip them, and faster than we can ship them to France.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to make a suggestion——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. We are training and we have men now ready for service at the front far beyond our capacity to send them there.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course——

Mr. VARDAMAN. And what is the necessity for sending men to cantonments and taking them away from the fields of industry, where they can produce something to support our people at home and our allies? What is the necessity for doing that when, under the present system, we will have more men ready for service at the front for the next two years than we will be able to get ships to carry? It is more ships that we need just now, not more men.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is correct about that. It is estimated that we have between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 young men in this country to-day already drafted and subject to be inducted into the service at any time, and whom we can train whenever we have the necessary equipment, arms, and officers with which to train them. We are going forward in that matter and making gigantic strides toward mobilizing our man power. It is not man power that we need, but we need materials of war; we need the officers with which to train the men; we need ships to carry our armies to the seat of war, and our energies should not be diverted to securing greater man power in the Army when it is not power that we are lacking. Additional men are not necessary now; we all know that. Why should we divert our energies and our money to prepare men that we can not use and whom it is not proposed to use for two years?

Have Senators thought about the cost of this matter? Has any estimate of cost been made? Can any Senator say whether this proposed amendment will cost $100,000,000 or $1,000,000,000 or even $2,000,000,000? The plan proposed can be put into operation in such a way as to cost this country at this time when we are at war $2,000,000,000 annually, because everyone knows that a soldier never costs less than $1,000 a year, taking all of the elements of cost into consideration.

This is a serious matter, serious not only because of the item of cost, but serious because at this time, at all events, it is necessary that we should have greater production, because the purpose to be accomplished does not justify the outlay, because this is not where our lack is, because our every energy and our every resource should be devoted to winning this war. What will it do? Senators representing farming States of the Union have told us what the adoption of this amendment is going to do for the farming interests, how many men it will take from their States who ought to be producers, and who are our best producers. Other Senators from industrial States have pointed out how many men it is going to take from industry, and others from commercial States have indicated how many men it will take from the commercial pursuits of life. We need men to-day, Senators, a great deal more in agriculture, in commerce, and in industry than we need to have these youngsters drafted into our Army, because we have not actually inducted into the service more than one-third, nay, not more than one-fourth or one-fifth of the men who are now on the rolls and subject to draft, and it is proposed to draft another million under this joint resolution even without the amendment.

I am quite sure, as I have said heretofore, that we have got to come to a system of universal military training, and my present intention is to favor a proper system; but we ought not to allow ourselves to be diverted at this time to any other purpose than the purpose of winning this war and preparing our men—not merely training them in schools—but preparing them as fast as we can get the officers, as fast as we can get the guns, as fast as we can get the materials of war with which to train them.

Notice the wording of the amendment. I want to call the attention of the Senate to it:

That all registered male persons—

That means all of them, Senators. It means the maimed and the halt, the blind, the deaf, and the dumb, the physically fit and unfit; it means everyone between those ages, whether we can use them in war in the future or not; whatever we may do with them, it means all of them. Why should we spend this immense amount of money for the purpose simply of training them in this kind of a way? That is why I say, Senators, that before we adopt or even think of adopting a measure like this it ought to be given the most careful consideration by a proper committee.

We do not even know what this amendment means. No one can tell, if we adopt it just as it is, what it will do. For instance, suppose we had adopted it without an amendment? I have just offered an amendment that will permit our boys in the military schools, in colleges where military training is given, in our universities where military training is given, to be exempted from this particular kind of training. Without such an amendment, what would the new amendment do? Why, it would break up all our military schools and our universities, or a large number of them, and absolutely put them out of business. Would you want to do that? It is just an illustration of what will sometimes be done by legislation that has not been carefully considered and gone over time and again.

For these reasons, I am constrained to believe that this body ought not to pass this amendment just as it is without chart or compass, without limitation or direction, merely a blanket instruction to the Executive to put it in force, without an estimate of cost, without a knowledge of what is going to be the result of it, without the arms or equipment necessary to make it effectual. Where will we get the arms to train these young men—even rifles? We need every rifle that we can manufacture for the training of our troops who are going to fight the enemy or for actual fighting. Where are we going to get the rifles to train these boys? Are we going to train them with broomsticks? If so, what will it amount to? Are we to spend vast sums of money, perhaps thousands of millions of dollars, in an attempt at military training of young boys who will most likely not be used in this war, when we have not the guns, or camps, or uniforms, or other equipment with which to train them? How would they be trained with pistols when we are short of pistols already? How would they be trained with artillery when we are short of artillery already? Or with machine guns when we are straining every nerve to get our machine guns to train the men that are already drafted in the Army?

Senators, I ask you not to adopt this amendment. If we are to adopt it, let it come later, when we can consider all these matters, consider what it means, consider what its effect will be, consider where we are going when we undertake to adopt it. It is not necessary. There is nothing that requires that it should be done now. We are training our men as fast as we can get the materials and the officers with which to train them. Why go off chasing rabbits, so to speak, at such a time as this?

Now, Mr. President, I have offered an amendment to the amendment, which I wish to perfect. I can not believe that we are going to adopt the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] at this time, but I offer this amendment to it in order to save one of the bad situations which I have pointed out should the New amendment carry, and which is just one that has occurred to me. Probably other amendments have occurred to other Senators which are absolutely essential. I see here my friend from an agricultural State, Mr. GRONNA. There ought to be some provision there by which the producers on the farms can be exempted in some way. Other Senators are here from industrial States. There ought to be some provision to protect young men engaged in industry.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield to the Senator in a moment. Surely we ought not to pass this legislation. But if we are going to pass it, before we vote on it I want to submit this amendment. I have corrected it, and I will ask the Secretary to take it as I have corrected it:

Provided further, That attendance by those subject to the provisions of this section under 21 years of age upon military schools, colleges, or other educational institutions where military instruction is given under standards, rules, and regulations prescribed by the President shall be deemed a compliance by such students with the provisions of this section.

I offer that amendment for this reason: I do not think we ought to adopt such an amendment as that offered by the Senator from Indiana with only a few hours' consideration, with no committee report, with no examination, with no attempt to get the effect or the cost of it. I think we ought not to disturb the great educational institutions of this country as this will disturb them. At almost every State university they have military training to-day. Why, you are just going to cut them down at one fell swoop by the passage of this amendment. Almost every college in this country has military training. Many of our high schools have military training. You are just going to cut them down—put them out of business, to use a slang expression—by the adoption of this amendment unless further amendment is had.

I now take pleasure in yielding to my friend from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I am very much interested in the argument the Senator makes, and in the main I agree with him. I said this morning that I do not believe we should fasten a military system upon our Government unless we shall find that it is necessary to keep large military forces in order to protect ourselves; but what I wanted to call attention to was this:

I think it is generally conceded that a large percentage of the young men on the farms have been drafted, and that many of them have already been taken away, and many more are to follow. Practically the only help that the farmers have is the boys between the ages of 19 and 21. If we are to take away those boys now, the result will be that we will starve the boys whom we already have in the camps.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know that I agree that we will starve them; but I will say to the Senator that in my judgment production on the farms in this country will be immeasurably lessened by the adoption of this amendment, and I do not think we ought to do it. I am willing at any time to join Senators in considering such a bill if it is brought before the committee of which I have the honor to be a member. I shall be glad to give it consideration at any time if it is the will of the Senate to have such a measure passed at this time. I am not opposed to universal military training. Under present conditions or under anything like present conditions we will have to adopt some such measure. As I stated in the beginning, I am rather inclined to favor it. But just now, it seems to me, is not the time to embark on a scheme like this temporary makeshift when we are using our every energy to make real soldiers with the means that we have at hand.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, before voting on the pending proposition, with all due deference to the venerable Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], I desire to make a brief statement in order that my vote may not be misunderstood.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will not make the same request of the Senator from Kansas, if his statement is to be brief.

Mr. THOMPSON. I assure the Senator that all my statements in this body are brief; and usually I try, at least, to make them to the point.

I am in favor of the joint resolution presented by the Military Affairs Committee, requiring the young men of this country, when they become of age, to register under the selective-draft system which we have invoked during this war; but I am opposed to the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] providing for the registration of all the young men of the country when they attain the age of 19 years, and subjecting them to the provisions of the selective-draft law except active military service.

Mr. President, I have believed for some time, in view of recent events which have transpired, that some kind of universal military training for the young men of the country has become necessary; but as to just the exact system required for this country I have not yet fully made up my mind, and I do not believe that we can come to any well-established policy until the close of the war. I know that during the war it is impracticable to enter upon any settled plan. I know we all hope that when the war ends it will result in universal peace and disarmament of all nations, but our wish may be the father of the thought. I have felt that some plan should be devised by which the young men of the country should receive the necessary military training for the purposes of our Government in connection with their general education. I am opposed, except as a last resort, to taking the young men of this country from the schools and colleges and from the varied business and productive pursuits of life—minors who have no voice in the Government and no legal right to speak for themselves—and forcing them into active military service for a long period of time; for I believe that such a system would tend to lead to the very militarism against which we are fighting to-day. If a change should be necessary in order to secure more men, I would increase the maximum age to 45 years rather than reduce the minimum a single year. The young men of the country who are not born with silver spoons in their mouths have enough difficulty to get started in life without adding any additional burden.

I recognize the fact that in this day and age and under existing conditions some better system of preparation is necessary. A thorough course in military tactics should be added to the courses of study in the schools and colleges of the country, and each young man should be required to take the course, not only for his own good but for the good of the country. During the summer, commonly called the vacation season, all young men between the ages of 16 and 21 should be required to devote a few weeks' time to outdoor military training and receive instruction and actual experience in army camp life. This would give them a vacation from their regular pursuits in life and at the same time teach them that they owe something to their Government and give them an opportunity to render some service to that Government. This would permit the young men of the country to receive a course in military training without interfering with their educational or business pursuits.

Military training for young men now seems essential, not alone that they may be better prepared to defend themselves and the country in a great crisis like the present, but in order to conserve their health and to secure proper physical development, that they may be better enabled to fight the battles of civil life in times of peace. There is no better exercise or means for physical development, which all young men require, than military training. It is better than baseball, football, golf, tennis, or any other outdoor sport, and it serves a better purpose, because it not only gives the young man the necessary physical exercise but also an experience and a knowledge which may become most useful to himself and to the country at some future time.

As I view it, at least for the present, there is no need in this country for taking the young men out of the schools and colleges and the business and productive pursuits for any great length of time for the purpose of devoting all their time and energy simply to military training. I can not agree to take from the farm the boys of the ages of 19 and 20 at this time, when the outcome of this war is to depend largely upon the products of the farm, especially when I can see no good to be accomplished by taking them from the ranks of labor. Neither can I agree to taking them from the shops, where skilled labor is doing so much toward winning the war. Therefore I am opposed to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], for it proposes to do this for at least two years. It also subjects every young man in the country over 19 years of age to the provisions of the selective-draft law except that of active service, and is a long step in that direction, for under the circumstances it would, no doubt, lead eventually to that very end, for there are but few young men in the country who, after receiving some military instruction and being led from their usual avocations in life, would hesitate to enlist and go to the front even before they attain the age of 21; and once in the service at the age of 19, they are their own masters. There is scarcely a young man now 18 years old but who wants to go to the front, regardless of his immaturity, but his parents and older people know it is not best for him or the country. While it is true that they make good fighters, yet they also make good workers at home, and while minors they need the home influence, guidance, and protection of their parents.

There is a practical reason why this amendment should not be adopted. The training camps are full of young men of draft age, waiting for the necessary training before proceeding to the front. If all the young men of the country of the ages of 19 and 20 were put into the camps, estimated at about 2,000,000, as proposed by this amendment, it would necessarily force out the young men already there before they are really prepared, and would prevent many new young men of draft age entering the camps for some time, and thereby cause great delay in getting our men to the front, expedition in which is becoming more and more necessary every day. It would also take the time of the officers to train these young men who should give all their time to training men who are ready to fight. Therefore it seems to me that the amendment of the Senator from Indiana is out of place at this time, and should not become a part of this bill. It is not matured legislation on the subject of universal training, which should be carefully treated in a separate bill. I feel that under the present situation of affairs it would result in more harm than good, by causing great confusion and delay, and would defeat the real objects of the legislation.

There are in this country 1,000,000 young men who reach the age of 21 years every year, which, with our present facilities, is all that we can possibly take care of, especially in view of the fact that there are over two and a half million young men now of draft age anxiously waiting for the proper training to go to the front, where they are most needed. I will therefore vote against the amendment, but will vote for the bill requiring registration year by year as the war proceeds when the young men become of age.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I voted against laying this amendment upon the table; but up to that time I had not carefully read the amendment, and I hoped it was in different shape than I find it to be.

I think it would be eminently wise to undertake as thorough training as possible of all the young men under 21 in schools and colleges. Also, I would be gratified to see even those at home organized and trained there. I am entirely opposed to taking them to the cantonments before they are 21. They are not to serve until they are 21. There are ample men who are 21 to fill all the cantonments and receive the training we can give there.

This amendment will treat the men under 21 just as the men under 31 and over 21, so far as the draft is concerned. They are placed in the same class for draft. The proviso leaves it to the President to determine the extent to which they shall be subject to drill, or subject to be sent to cantonments, and limits their service in the field to that period of life after they reach the age of 21. I object to that broad plan of handling these young men. I am unwilling to vote for a measure which would go further than train them, as I said before, in schools and colleges and at home.

The suggestion was made that we had not the officers even for this training. Mr. President, I believe we should make our plans now for an Army of 5,000,000 men. To make an Army it is first necessary to have trained officers. To prepare munitions it is first necessary to have factories erected and properly equipped and ready to manufacture the munitions. It is necessary to have experts in those factories.

I think a proper vision of the work of the War Department required that before the declaration of war was made, with the condition of the world at war, the General Staff should have been ready to draw from their desks complete plans for the organization of an army, complete plans for the immediate construction of fighting airships, complete plans for the erection of buildings, and the construction of the character of guns that would have been needed for 2,000,000 or more men, as we might need them, complete plans for the erection of plants to manufacture powder for an army of that size. I think, Mr. President, to have taken almost 12 months to find out what we need to organize the Army is not evidence of that forethought, of that broad preparation, which an able General Staff, or whatever constitutes the organizing force for our Army, ought to have shown.

I mention this, Mr. President, not to criticize the past, but in the interest of our future. I would have the General Staff now, if they have charge, work out a plan for the immediate training of officers sufficient to command 5,000,000 men. I would have them work out a plan for the completion of factories in which to manufacture all the ammunition required to arm 5,000,000 men, and I would have the preliminary machinery completed so that when we call the additional men to the colors we will be ready to put them in shape in the shortest possible time to use them if the necessity arises; for, if it does arise, time will be of the utmost importance, and its waste inexcusable. No civilian can do this work intelligently, be he Secretary of War or chairman of a war industries board. A civilian can act as merchant to buy, but military experts must do the planning. I hope we may rely upon the President to see that intelligent plans are made at once and no new occasion disclose a lack of forethought, a lack of that complete preparation which the President and the Secretary of War should require from military experts.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I can not say that I am very enthusiastically in favor of the adoption of this amendment. At the same time, I can not agree with very many of the objections which have been directed to it, or directed to what apparently some of the objectors thought it meant.

As I understand the amendment, it simply adds to those who are subject to registration now the boys 19 and 20 years of age. That is the second proposition involved, the first being that, instead of the draft law being directed solely to citizens of the United States, this applies the draft law to all parties. The second provision, as I have said, simply decreases the age limit and provides for the registration of the boys 19 and 20 years of age in addition to those from 21 to 31. By the proviso it is distinctly stated that these boys, until they reach the age of 21, shall not be subject to the provisions of the draft law. Then it is provided that the President of the United States, in his discretion, may provide rules and regulations for the training of every man who is not drafted, not in the cantonments, not drafted as a soldier; that he may provide for the training of every man, not only those of 19, 20, and 21, but of all those who are not drafted but who are registered, the entire nine or ten million; that they are subject to the orders of the President of the United States as to training. That is all that the amendment provides, as I understand it.

All this alarm that the President may or will take these men from their occupations and put them in cantonments, where we say there is no place for them, is rather premature. It is assuming that the President of the United States will simply disorganize all the industry of the country—to my mind, rather a violent assumption. I do not think any sensible man would undertake to do it. I would rather assume that the President of the United States would take some advice from some men who knew something about military affairs and as to the necessities of preliminary training, and, in issuing his rules and regulations providing for the training of these men between 19 and 31 who are not in the draft, he would have due respect for what he recognizes as strongly as anyone else does—the necessity of producing foodstuffs and carrying on the business of the country.

It may be a violent assumption, but I indulge in it, that the President would take, as I have said, the advice of those who could best advise him as to how we could best train these men without interfering in any way whatsoever with the business of the country. I agree thoroughly with the Senator from Georgia.

I think that to-day the Military Committee, with due respect to that great committee, should be engaged in formulating plans immediately for getting 5,000,000 fighting men ready. I have heard or read the call of Lloyd-George, as has every other Senator here, for reinforcements on the fighting line. Some of us know something about the number of men who are going to France now and recently and something of the transportation system which is conveying them to France. We are only sorry that that transportation has not been availed of before to get these men to France. All the exclamations of alarm directed, as I said, to the provisions of this joint resolution, to my mind, are entirely misdirected, unless the Senator from Tennessee and others who agree with him think that the President of the United States is going deliberately to interfere with all the business of the United States. As I said, I do not engage in any such violent assumption.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. If the Senator will pardon me, the President of the United States, as I said in the first place, can do exactly what the Senator provides that he must do in the event the joint resolution passes by the amendment which he offers. There is nothing in the world to prevent his doing it, and the presumption is he will do just as he has done with the men actually drafted in the military service of the United States. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I can only say to the Senator that my understanding of the President's position, but I have had no talk with him, is that he does not think this legislation is necessary at this time.

Mr. FALL. And one of the objections that I have to it is that it does not compel the President of the United States to act. It is true, as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] said, he and the Secretary of War may not choose to avail themselves of it. This fear is based upon exactly the same ground, I presume, as that of some of us, which proved to be verified, when the Congress of the United States provided for volunteers in the draft. The President of the United States did not choose to avail himself of the provision. It may very well be that he will not choose to put the men between 19 and 21 who are not drafted under any system of military training. The responsibility then is his. Congress at least has provided that he could do so, and I have no doubt the President will assume the responsibility. He does not seem inclined to shirk it at all.

Mr. President, I would very much prefer seeing a bill drafted and brought from the Military Committee to provide for fighting men, and 5,000,000 of them at once. In my judgment, it is a perfectly simple proposition. I know, of course, I will be laughed at by many of the military experts in this body, and also that what I may say will be the subject of very much greater amusement, possibly, in the War Department.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If I may interrupt the Senator, it becomes an administrative matter rather than a legislative matter; and I am in thorough accord with the Senator. I think the greatest mistake Congress is making now and has made for the past two years is in assuming that this is going to be a short war. If I had my way, 5,000,000 men would be in the course of training now.

Mr. FALL. The reason why I make the statement is that I think the Military Committee should make such a provision, because it is the duty of Congress under the Constitution, as I read it, not only to provide for raising an army but to provide rules to govern them and for their training and not to leave it to the executive department of the Government. Under the constitutional provisions, as I read them, it is the duty of Congress, and Congress should not leave it simply to the Military Department. It is the duty of Congress—

To raise and support armies.

I read section 8, the general clause:

To provide and maintain a navy.

To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces.

* * * * * * *

To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States.

I think under those provisions of the Constitution it was and is clearly the duty of the Congress of the United States to provide an army and to provide it immediately. I know to say it is a simple matter to begin necessary training at once, and not a costly matter, will be a subject of amusement. My military experience has been very limited in character, Mr. President, but there is not an Army officer who will not, I think, vouch for the truth of the statement that I am now going to make.

The soldier in the Army is made by the noncommissioned officer. The fighting man is made in the squad. The squad leader is the leader upon the gory battle field to-day in Europe.

During the almost four years, while the great generals may have outlined the plans of campaign, the soldiers in the field—at least in the German service—have been led not by their commissioned officers but by their squad and their platoon leaders. Yesterday we had the news from England that the victorious onslaught of the German soldiers in the field has been due to the magnificent leadership of their noncommissioned officers. The captain of a company or the lieutenant of a company does not undertake to drill the soldier in the matter of the step and the command nor in the matter of the manual of arms and handling of the rifle. Sir, I may say to you that my experience is limited, but in my company I had a first sergeant who was better equipped to handle men and to lick them into shape and do actual fighting than was any officer in the entire regiment, including the Regular Army officer. I say this knowingly. In making fighting men the squad leaders, the corporals, the sergeants, and the noncommissioned officers are the men who teach the men and make soldiers of them.

You do not need a cantonment until you order the men into companies of 250 or into battalions or into regiments. You can go to the ranches in New Mexico. I am a farmer, and I may enlighten the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] by saying I am also a cotton farmer in the State of Texas. I am employing labor not only in actual farming operations but in producing meat stuffs. There are now 15 men in my employ subject to the draft. One noncommissioned officer sent to my ranch in New Mexico could within two or three months, drilling one day a week or half an hour a day during the week, make soldiers of those men, make them perfectly competent to go into any extended drill of company, battalion, regiment, or army. He can teach them with one rifle the use of the rifle. He can teach them the manual of arms. He can teach them the use of the bayonet. He can teach them all the rudiments of military training. He can give them the setting-up exercise exactly as well as a major or a lieutenant colonel or a colonel, and he need not interfere with my business at all. I am perfectly willing, as any other farmer would be willing to see that his men, within the time which he pays for, shall have an opportunity one day in the week or a portion of every day in the week to have this training brought to them by some noncommissioned officer or some private who understands the rudiments of military training.

In my judgment, some such plan as that should be adopted, because we will never get the necessary number of men through the cantonments here to win the war in Europe. Plans such as I have suggested have heretofore been the military policy of the United States. I objected to a change when the distinguished Senator, the chairman of the Military Committee, brought in the draft bill. I said to him and to all Senators then that it was not intended as an emergency measure, that there was not an emergency provision in it except the word "emergency" written in the preamble. I stated to you then, Senator, that France was being bled white, and you needed troops there, and that the measure was neither a sufficient measure nor was it intended to be a measure to provide for an immediate and an effective offensive upon the part of the United States in joining its allies. Whether I was correct in that assumption, I leave the result to you gentlemen to judge. You know how many men you have in France. You know how many you had there just before the great German drive took place. You have hundreds of thousands of them yet drilling, and what have they learned aside from the trench warfare which Gen. Bridges, of the British Army, said to certain Senators, myself included, required 11 weeks' drill? Aside from that everything they learn there could have been learned on the farm or at the factory from a noncommissioned officer. It is unnecessary to disorganize the great business of the country.

If I had my way, I would go further. I would pass a military draft law drafting into the service of the United States Government every able-bodied male and female citizen in the United States between the ages of 18 and 45, and assigning them to their place in winning this war, so many of them to military duty and so many to semimilitary duties within this country; and until you do something of this kind you are not going to render effective assistance, in my judgment, to the allies, who so greatly need it.

Mark my prediction, gentlemen, and I am no military expert. Halt this great onrush now as it will be halted, in my judgment, and then look to Italy and look to Salonica. Look there for your next break and your next drive. The great military power of the United States Government, in my judgment, is not used, and almost entirely Great Britain will be compelled to depend upon her fleet in a very short time for the defense of her own territory.

In my judgment every British or allied soldier will be driven from Palestine and Persia back to the borders of India. Yet we are wasting time in cantonment drill when we have at our service the English and the French soldier transports through which millions of men have been transported from the far corners of the earth to the blood-stained soil of France.

Mr. President, the measure here pending is comparatively of an unimportant nature. I do not agree with any of the objections which have been offered to it except the fundamental objection that it is the duty of Congress to provide for the training of these men rather than to shirk the duty and hand the power to the President of the United States. I do not oppose it except that I fear that under the advice which the President of the United States has been receiving at second or third hand he will not avail himself of the authority which is vested in him by this amendment if it becomes a law.

Mr. MYERS obtained the floor.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator from Montana for just a moment?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I was in hopes that we would get a vote on this amendment and on the joint resolution itself this evening, but if we are unable to do it I am going to ask for a recess until to-morrow at noon. If we could vote on it to-night, I would move an adjournment until Monday.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator if he will not give the Senate a little more time. I believe we will get a vote on the amendment and on the joint resolution. We ought to vote on it this evening.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I hope so.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think we ought to stay here even if it takes until 7 o'clock. Senators have other business for to-morrow. There are a good many committee meetings and there are conference committees to meet.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Montana will give me one moment, I will say that I had it in mind to make a speech of two or three hours' length on this amendment, but I have concluded not to do it in the hope that we would get a vote on the amendment and on the joint resolution to-night. The committees are very busily employed, and I think if we could pass the joint resolution we might give to-morrow to committees.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator that is what I want to do. If we can vote to-night I shall move an adjournment until Monday, so that committees may complete their work. If the joint resolution is not finished this evening, I shall feel it my duty to move a recess until to-morrow.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator is right about that.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I had it in mind to make a speech of two or three minutes' length on the amendment, and I have still the same mind. I believe it is always the privilege of the affirmative to close the debate, and I will proceed to do that very briefly, in behalf of the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW].

I have not had the benefit of hearing all the debate on this amendment, but I am so profoundly impressed with the wisdom of the amendment that I can not forego the privilege of speaking a few words in its behalf. I think it is the best piece of military legislation offered in this body since the enactment of the draft law.

I believe the war in which we are engaged will undoubtedly last several years longer, probably five years. We might just as well realize that we have undertaken in this war the most gigantic task which has ever been undertaken by the son of man since God's sun began to shine. I agree with former President Taft that we will have to put 5,000,000 men in Europe before the war is won, and it is high time we were beginning to do it.

This amendment is a step in the right direction. It is at least a beginning. Where are we to get the men? We must get them wherever we can. If it is proposed to put more men in the field, it is objected that they will be taken from the farms, from the shops, and from manufacturing industries. So they will be drawn from all, but we must have men in order to win this war. "We can not eat our cake and have it, too." We can not put large numbers of men in the fighting field in Europe and have them on the farms and in the shops and factories at the same time. We must have soldiers and at the same time have our farms tilled. Both are necessary. Germany has millions of men in the field; France has millions of men in the field; Great Britain has millions of men in the field; and yet they are cultivating their farms and are furnishing food to their armies. Who is cultivating their farms? Every man, woman, and child who is not in arms and who can be spared from any other vocation. We shall have to do the same thing.

One objection that has been made to this amendment is because of the fact that it will take some young men from the farms in the great farming States of the Northwest. As to that objection, I have to say that Montana is one of the great farming States of the Northwest and I have received very few complaints about young men being taken from the farms there. The few complaints I have received are inconsequential and negligible in number. The people there are not complaining.

Furthermore, with all that has been said about the lack of care and neglect of our young men in training camps and cantonments, of all the letters written by fond parents, complaining that their sons are not getting the same treatment and comforts in camps and cantonments that they received at home, I am proud to say that I have received but two complaining letters on that score from Montana. One letter was from a father whose son was in camp at Spokane, Wash., who complained of a shortage of clothing; another letter came from a man who was evidently an extreme pacifist, a peace-at-any-price man, a man who was opposed to all war, who complained of everything in connection with the war. Those are the only two complaining letters that I have received from Montana since we entered in the war about the treatment of our soldiers in camps, and I am proud of it.

The people of Montana are not complaining to any great extent of the young men being taken from the farms or the shops or the mines. I read from the Helena (Mont.) Independent of the 19th instant, as follows:

MONTANA STILL LEADS NATION IN THE PER CENT OF VOLUNTEERS.

WASHINGTON, March 18.

Adjt. Gen. McCain's report to-day showed that Montana is still leading the Nation in percentage of volunteers in the Regular Army to population. The State's quota was set at 752, and 5,826 have volunteered. This is only for the Regular Army and does not include the National Guard, National Army, Marine Corps, or Navy.

That is the spirit of the people of Montana. They are in favor of this war and are behind the administration in the prosecution of it. If they have to give up some of their young men from the farms, they will do it ungrudgingly, I am sure, and in a spirit of patriotism, believing that it is necessary in order that we may win this war for democracy.

The amendment of the Senator from Indiana would take the young men from 19 to 21 years of age, and in two years or less time would make a magnificent trained army of them, ready to put into the field in Europe, without waiting to be trained after they were drafted and put into the Army. We would have a ready-made army in two years from now, and, upon my soul, I believe it will be needed, too, two years from now, and even later; probably three, four, and five years hence. We can not win this war without soldiers.

I believe there is much wisdom in the amendment; I believe it is necessary; and I believe the people of the United States would respond to it in the same patriotic spirit in which it is offered. I say, here and now, we will need millions more of men under arms before victory comes to our cause in this awful war, and now is the time to begin providing them, and this is as good a way as any. Let us begin. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Indiana may be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW].

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I should like to ask unanimous consent for permission to perfect my amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has a right to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state the modification of the amendment he desires to make.

Mr. NEW. I send it to the desk to be read, and I would state also that the amendment consists in restoring my amendment to its original form and eliminating the amendment which was offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], which was accepted by me. This is a perfection of my amendment and eliminates that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary informs the Chair that that has already been done.

Mr. NEW. I did not so understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as it now stands is in its original form, and the pending question is on the amendment to the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR].

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, may the amendment to the amendment be read before the vote is taken? It is very short.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana which has been proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of Mr. NEW's amendment the following proviso:

Provided further, That attendance by those subject to the provisions of this section under 21 years of age upon military schools, colleges, or other educational institutions where military instruction is given, under standards, rules, and regulations prescribed by the President, shall be deemed a compliance by such students with the provisions of this section.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I accept the amendment to my amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the question is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. NEW. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WOLCOTT. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. What is the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] as modified by the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR].

Mr. NEW. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator will not do that.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The roll call will develop whether or not there is a lack of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll call has been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and vote "yea."

Mr. JAMES (when his name was called). I transfer the pair I have with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when Mr. MCNARY's name was called). My colleague [Mr. MCNARY] has been called from the Senate on official business.

Mr. SWANSON (when Mr. MARTIN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. MARTIN] is unavoidably detained from the Senate, but he is paired with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]. If he were present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MYERS. Has the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut, which I transfer to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN. I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have a pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. I desire to transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and I vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. In his absence I transfer the pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and vote "nay."

Mr. KELLOGG (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. STERLING. I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] and vote "yea."

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—26.

Calder	Frelinghuysen	Myers	Sterling

So Mr. NEW's amendment as modified was rejected.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF ESPIONAGE ACT.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 9504) to amend section 4067 of the Revised Statutes by extending its scope to include women. The bill, which has been reported unanimously by the Judiciary Committee, makes a slight amendment to the statute in relation to alien enemies by simply leaving out the word "male." so that it will apply to women as well as to men.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate. Then I will yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government.

Mr. OVERMAN. I now ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senator from Minnesota may secure action upon the bill which he has in charge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

Mr. NELSON. I renew my request for unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 9504.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, we are reaching a point over here where we desire to have an adjournment. I should like to ask the Senator whether the bill for which he asks consideration will take any time?

Mr. NELSON. It is very important that the bill should be passed immediately. I have here a memorandum from the Department of Justice, from which I will read two paragraphs, as follows:

> The department is daily receiving complaints, some of them well founded, against the activities of German-born women who are at present not subject to internment but who ought to be interned.
> The various intelligence services of the Government are greatly hampered by the present situation and are unanimous in urging the immediate passage of this measure.

As I have stated, the only change the bill makes in the existing statute is to strike out the word "male," so that the law will apply to both men and women. In addition a proviso has been reported by the committee that the act shall not apply to native-born loyal American women who are married to foreign husbands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9504) to amend section 4067 of the Revised Statutes by extending its scope to include women, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 6, after the word "is," to strike out "declared," and, in the same line, after the article "a," to insert "declared," so as to make the section read:

> That section 4067 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:
> "SEC. 4067. Whenever there is a declared war between the United States and any foreign nation or government, or any invasion or predatory incursion is perpetrated, attempted, or threatened against the territory of the United States, by any foreign nation or government, and the President makes public proclamation of the event, all natives, citizens, denizens, or subjects of the hostile nation or government, being of the age of 14 years and upward, who shall be within the United States and not actually naturalized shall be liable to be apprehended, restrained, secured, and removed as alien enemies. The President is authorized, in any such event, by his proclamation thereof, or other public act, to direct the conduct to be observed on the part of the United States toward the aliens who become so liable; the manner and degree of the restraint to which they shall be subject, and in what cases and upon what security their residence shall be permitted, and to provide for the removal of those who, not being permitted to reside within the United States, refuse or neglect to depart therefrom; and to establish any other regulations which are found necessary in the premises and for the public safety."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 15, to insert a new section, as follows:

> SEC. 2. That this act shall not apply to native-born women loyal citizens of the United States, married to aliens, and residing in the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that the memorandum from the Department of Justice, to which I have referred, may be printed in full in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The memorandum referred to is as follows:

> Memorandum for Senator NELSON, in re H. R. 9504.
> MARCH 29, 1918.
> Hon. John Lord O'Brian, the special assistant to the Attorney General for war work, on yesterday wrote to Senator CULBERSON inclosing the following memorandum with reference to the bill H. R. 9504, now on the Senate calendar, having been reported by Senator NELSON from the Committee on the Judiciary favorably with amendments:
> "The department is daily receiving complaints, some of them well founded, against the activities of German-born women who are at present not subject to internment, but who ought to be interned.
> "The various intelligence services of the Government are greatly hampered by the present situation and are unanimous in urging the immediate passage of this measure, which was introduced February 4, 1918."

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 1, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 29, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Oh Thou, who hast ever been our dwelling place and upon whom our fathers relied in all the exigencies of life for strength and guidance, and were not disappointed, turn not Thou away from us, for without Thee we are nothing; with Thee we are all things; for with Thee who can be against us? Strengthen therefore our arm of faith that we may cling to Thee in this hour of extreme peril.

We bless Thee for the grim determination and stern resistance of our allies, who have checked the advance of the overwhelming forces, battling against the civilization of the world.

Give victory to our arms and hasten the day when the hearts of all men shall be inspired with pure and undefiled religion; that a lasting peace may come to bless the world, in the name and spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PENSIONS.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the bill now before the House is completed the omnibus pension bills on the calendar may be in order.

Mr. GARNER. Does that apply to to-day only?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Only to to-day.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, when this bill is completed I want to try and send the Agricultural appropriation bill to conference.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I have no objection to taking up the pension bills any time to-day.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I suggest that it would be in order to proceed now?

Mr. ASHBROOK. There will be no debate on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to take up the bills now.

Mr. COX. I object.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman would have the right to call them up anyway.

The SPEAKER. This is not pension day.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I beg the Chair's pardon, I thought to-day was pension day, and that he would have the right to take them up.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on the completion of the bill now before the House and the agreement to send the Agricultural bill to conference, referred to by the gentleman from South Carolina, the omnibus pension bills on the Private Calendar may be taken up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that after the bill now before the House is disposed of and the gentleman from South Carolina has the Agricultural bill sent to conference the omnibus pension bills on the Private Calendar may be taken up. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. I have no objection to that arrangement being made to-day, but I want to state that it is the purpose of the Ways and Means Committee to get the bond bill up for consideration to-morrow, and I do not want any unanimous-consent agreement to interfere with to-morrow's business.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask this question: Is it thought that by the passage of the pension bills to-day their final passage will be expedited? I am asking the question in absolute faith, and let me say this to the gentleman from Ohio: There are matters that are deemed of extreme urgency. There is what is known as the housing proposition, for which there appears to be a very great demand, and it seems to be based on great merit—greater than some other measures that are brought in here in my opinion. If passing these bills to-day will expedite their final passage, I do not wish to interfere; but these other matters that I refer to are matters of extreme urgency. Of course pensions never fail; they always get through.

Mr. ASHBROOK. There is no question but that it will expedite the passage of these bills, and I do not anticipate that it will take a very long time to pass them. I have no desire to interfere with more pressing legislation.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not keep up with the pension legislation very closely, but if I understand the situation right there are now in the Senate some three batches of bills passed here at different times upon which no action has been taken.

Mr. LANGLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I have had a talk with the examiner for the Senate committee, and he says that he is up with his work, which the gentleman knows is necessary before the committee can consider the House omnibus bills. If we hurry these bills over there, he will get through them and have them ready, so that when the Senate meets at its next meeting they will probably pass all the bills.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I want to say, and I am sure all Members of the House appreciate the situation, that we are getting badly cluttered up with legislative matters. There are matters that appear to be matters of extreme urgency. I am not going to object to this request, on the assurance of the gentleman from Ohio that it will expedite matters. I know pensions are going through, and I do not object to their going through.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio to yield, or I will reserve the right to object. How many bills is it intended to call up if this consent is given?

Mr. ASHBROOK. One from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and two small bills from the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LANGLEY. It will not take more than half an hour if there is no debate.

Mr. WALSH. Will any rights be prejudiced if these measures are deferred until the next regular pension day?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say to the gentleman and the House that there is no question but that it will expedite the passage of these bills to send them over to the Senate to-day. The reason that there are a number of bills over there that have not been disposed of is due to the fact that the chairman of the committee, the Senator from New Jersey, died, and for some time there has been no chairman of that committee.

Mr. LANGLEY. And his successor was ill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Would it be possible to have an agreement for a night session to consider pensions?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to any time in the day—5 o'clock, 6 o'clock, or 8 o'clock.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me to make a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that there may be a session of the House, beginning at 8 o'clock this evening, for the consideration of the bills referred to in the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that there shall be a session of the House to-night, beginning at 8 o'clock, running not later than 10 o'clock, for the consideration of these bills mentioned by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK], and for no other business. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK]?

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. There are a number of pressing war measures on the calendar of this House. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has just referred to one and I will refer to another. There is a Senate bill on the calendar, under a unanimous report from the Military Committee, providing an amendment to the condemnation law so as to authorize the Government to condemn necessary lands upon which to construct Government nitrate and powder plants.

The President has located two nitrate plants which have been authorized by Congress. They are under process of construction. The Government has not been able to secure some of the lands absolutely necessary for this purpose. Is the Government to be forced to suspend work on any part of these ammunition plants for want of legislation authorizing the Government to acquire necessary lands?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. I can not. I do not suppose there is a Member of this House who would not regret to hear of our boys in France retreating with empty guns for want of ammunition. This may happen if we do not speed up on war legislation and quit talking about pensions and such things.

The chairman of the Military Committee has tried repeatedly to have the bill I have referred to acted upon by the House, and has been forced to ask the Committee on Rules for a rule, and I must not allow, if I can help it, other measures of less importance to intervene and postpone action on it, which will only require a few moments' time when reached under the rules of the House, as I do not suppose there will be a vote against it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, I am forced under the circumstances to object.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I move that following the completion of the bill before the House and the consideration of the conference report referred to by the gentleman from South Carolina, the omnibus pension bills on the Private Calendar shall be in order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. RUBEY. Oh, I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, for the present I withdraw it.

MILITARY TRIBUNALS.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, within that time I shall ask the Clerk to read the following resolutions which I desire to have in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rotary Club of Chester, Pa. Resolution.

Whereas the members of this club recognize an almost universal dissatisfaction among patriotic Americans at the immunity from adequate punishment which disaffected and disloyal elements of our population have heretofore enjoyed; and

Whereas it is the sense of this organization that the present emergency requires and demands that treason shall receive quick, certain, and condign punishment, and that avowed disloyalty shall be suppressed: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Rotary Club of Chester hereby requests and urges the Congress of the United States to create military tribunals in which all offenses aimed with hostile or treasonable intent at the integrity of the Military Establishment or the war efficiency of American industry, wherever committed, shall be tried; and be it further

Resolved, That this club recognizes the right and duty of every patriotic American citizen to expose and resist sedition and disloyalty, and recommends to its members and to this community an individual policy of aggressive and uncompromising opposition to every act or utterance tending to give aid or comfort to the enemy.

The above preambles and resolutions were unanimously adopted at a regular meeting of the Rotary Club of Chester, held March 26, 1918.

Attest:

E. WALLACE CHADWICK, Secretary.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, to conclude my two minutes, I desire to indorse the views of my constituents as expressed in these resolutions.

Mr. LANGLEY rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I made that request for the purpose of saying what I had it in my mind to say when I interrupted the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON] a moment ago, and that was that in my judgment it is very important for us to enact as war measures laws to show to our soldiers and to the world that we recognize to the fullest the debt of gratitude that this Republic owes to the fathers and grandfathers of the boys over there and to those who are yet to go, who are fighting and preparing to fight for the liberties of that Republic which their sires preserved. [Applause.] I am sorry the gentleman used the language he did in referring to these bills we are pressing for the relief of those old fellows, some of whom are doubtless dying at this moment.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes on the subject of the resolutions which were just read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I listened quite carefully to the reading of the resolutions submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], and if I understood the purport and effect of the resolutions it was that Congress immediately proceed to create some military tribunals to try people in civil life.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman did not understand them.

Mr. GORDON. Oh, that the military authorities create them? Well, the military authorities of the United States can not do any such thing as that.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not understand that they ask any such thing. They simply ask that all of the authority of the United States might be employed for the purpose of suppressing sedition, and that all utterances and demonstrations of any kind which would interfere with the purpose of the war——

Mr. GORDON. Oh, do not take my two minutes. I want to call attention to the fact that neither the military authorities nor the Congress of the United States has any right to create military tribunals to try people who are not in the Army or Navy. You have got to amend the Constitution in order to do that, and this proposition here is just simply an old thing that was stamped out after the Civil War by the Supreme Court of the United States in Milligan's case. You can not create military tribunals to try people in civil life.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand there is any such request.

Mr. GORDON. That is all they ask for.

Mr. BUTLER. They are simply the views of my constituents upon what is commonly known as patriotism, and they are of the highest order.

Mr. GORDON. Oh, yes; we understand that.

SALE OF SEED GRAIN TO FARMERS.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the committee substitute for the bill (H. R. 7795) to appropriate $50,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain and feed for live stock, to be supplied to farmers and stockmen, and to create boards in the respective States to assist in carrying out the provisions of this act.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7795, with Mr. POU in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That until the purposes of this act have been accomplished the Secretary of Agriculture shall, as soon as possible after the close of each calendar year, cause to be made to the Congress a detailed report showing all proceedings and transactions under this act during such calendar year. Such report shall, in addition to other matters, contain a statement of all persons employed, the salary or compensation of each, the aggregate amount of loans, advances, or sales, and the total amount thereof unpaid, and all receipts and disbursements under this act. All moneys collected by the United States under this act shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I wish to offer. I move to strike out, in line 4, page 5, the words "until the purposes of this act have been," and, in line 5, the word "accomplished," the last three words of that line, "as soon as," and, in line 6, the words "possible after the close of each calendar year."

Mr. LEVER. All of that?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. And, in lines 8 and 9, strike out "during such calendar year" and insert after the word "that," in line 4, the words which I sent to the Clerk's desk to be read.

Mr. BUTLER. How will it read?

Mr. STAFFORD. "That at the opening of the next regular session of Congress the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause to be made to the Congress a detailed report showing all proceedings and transactions under this act," and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 4, strike out the words "until the purposes of this act have been"; in line 5 strike out the word "accomplished," and, after the word "shall," strike out the words "as soon as"; and in line 6 strike out the words "possible after the close of each calendar year"; and in lines 8 and 9, after the word "act," strike out "during such calendar year"; and after the word "that," in line 4, insert the following: "at the opening of the next regular session of Congress."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, as I understand this bill, it is merely to provide for the temporary condition existing at the present time and to meet this condition during the present year. The phraseology of section 4 as framed by the committee would embody the idea that it is permanent legislation. The amendment I propose merely provides for striking out that permanent character of perennial report and substituting a report at the opening of the next regular session of Congress.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The matter of making loans to assist farmers in procuring seed is for this session alone, but there is business connected with this that will extend over into another year, and perhaps still into a further year. It can not be closed up this year, in my judgment, and the words of the bill, as the bill stands, are better to take care of that situation than the wording of the bill as amended by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, if this language remains in the bill as reported by the committee, there will be warrant in future Agricultural appropriation bills for carrying appropriations for the various purposes that are carried in this bill. I do not understand it was the purpose of the committee or those supporting this bill that it was to provide for any other time except for the exigency that is now claimed to be existing in certain sections of the country. The amendment I propose will provide a report by the Secretary of Agriculture of the operations of this fund during the present calendar year, and that he make that report to Congress at the beginning of its next regular session. I hope the amendment will be accepted by the committee, because it is in consonance with the general idea of the bill that it is for the season of 1918.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman is entirely right in the assumption its use is a temporary measure, but the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan, a member of the committee, I think has force, and it may be you would not collect all of this money up to the opening of the next session of Congress. There may be some that will never be collected, as a matter of fact.

Mr. STAFFORD. My amendment calls upon the Secretary to make a report of the operations of the law at the beginning of the next regular session of Congress. If the work is not completed and it is unsettled, the gentleman can bring in a paragraph on the Agricultural appropriation bill requiring a further report. We would like to have at the beginning of the next regular session a report as to the operation of this bill. I can not see any reason for requiring, reaching into the future, reports at the beginning of every calendar year, as the phraseology of the bill requires.

Mr. LEVER. Has the gentleman from Michigan any serious objection to that?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It seems to me that the bill as it is is better. Of course, it is a temporary matter, the loaning of money and the providing of seeds for this year alone, but everyone knows that the collections will not be made, all of them, this year; that there will be considerable business under the law for some time to come. No one can tell how long it will extend. The gentleman from Wisconsin will provide for a report at the opening of the next regular session of Congress, and there he would stop. This bill provides for a report at the close of this calendar year, which is only two or three weeks after the opening of the next session of Congress, and would call for an annual report as long as business remains on the book, so we will know from time to time just what the status of business is.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It seems to me that while the idea of the gentleman from Wisconsin may be right as to making a report at the opening of the session of Congress, he would stop there. We ought to go further and continue it until the matter is entirely closed up, just as the bill provides.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will there be any transactions under the authorization here after the present fiscal year?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. After the present calendar year?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, there will not be certainly any advances to be made.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. And if we have this report at the beginning of the next session of Congress we will know exactly how this fund has been used, and I can not see any reason for having a further report at the close of every calendar year.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I want to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, if we want to have a businesslike arrangement under this bill, it seems to me we ought to have reports at stated times until all that is collectible is collected.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is it not a fact that if a certain portion of the moneys advanced are not collected during the fiscal year, and the bill provides that the money shall be turned into the Treasury of the United States, that the Treasury would report that annually as the amount collected on this back balance, and the point trying to be arrived at by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is to stop the sale?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. That is limited by the first section of the bill.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. For the seeding season of 1918.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yesterday reference was made to the position of the President of the United States in respect to this legislation. I wish to say, in response to a letter written by me to the President on March 14, he wrote me, under date of March 18, a letter which I am sure Members of the House will want to hear. I will send both letters to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report them.

The following are the letters referred to:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., March 14, 1918.

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,
White House.

Mr. PRESIDENT: The cry will soon be food for a hungry world.

Lord Rhondda's almost frantic appeal to Mr. Hoover indicates that in some portions of the world the pinch of hunger has already come.

Campaign phrases sometimes become so well known that they fail to take hold. "Food will win the war," a tremendously important thing to remember at this planting season, has become such a hackneyed expression it scarcely attracts either the eye or ear.

The President of the board of agriculture of England has expressed it in a new way: "Victory will come to the side which has the last bushel of wheat in its possession."

Three million acres can be planted to wheat this year which would otherwise be barren waste, if Congress will quickly pass a bill now on the House Calendar—H. R. 7795—introduced by Mr. BAER, of North Dakota. It authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to contract with farmers to grow grain and advance a part of the cost. It also places in his hands a fund for the voluntary mobilization of farm labor. The labor problem upon the farms is one of increasing difficulty. Something must be done and done quickly to replace the farm labor diverted to the factories and the Army.

Mr. Hoover wired the British Government that we had in America 170,000,000 more pounds of meat at the end of 1917 than had been expected, due to the economy in meat consumption by the American people, and meat saving is still increasing, a great testimonial to the work done under Mr. Hoover.

But with bread it is different. Bread is a daily necessity of life the world over. Wheatless days will help, but they will not solve the problem.

Much has been done through publicity campaigns to increase food production, but we have stopped short of actual appropriations to supplement such publicity efforts.

The bill referred to carries $10,000,000, a drop in the bucket as compared with the mammoth war appropriations.

Is not the importance of increased food production being overlooked by reason of the tremendous and all-absorbing activities in other directions?

The seeding of grain has already begun in some of the States. May I suggest that now is the time to act?

Yours, respectfully,
GEORGE M. YOUNG.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, March 18, 1918.

MY DEAR MR. YOUNG: Pardon me for not having replied sooner to your important letter of March 14. I was waiting to get the views of the Secretary of Agriculture, who is out of town on a departmental errand. You may be sure that the subject matter of your letter concerns me very much and that I shall do everything possible to advance necessary legislation.

Cordially and sincerely, yours,
WOODROW WILSON.

Hon. GEORGE M. YOUNG,
House of Representatives.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. LEVER. Before the gentleman proceeds, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments to the section be closed in 10 minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. And I would like to have some time.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in 20 minutes, the time to be controlled by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. LEVER. I prefer that the Chair control it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is recognized.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the letter that has just been read, coming from the President of the United States, is not addressed to the Congress in such cordial terms as might be expected under the circumstances. The President evidently does not go the whole hog on this bill. He has been talking with the Secretary of Agriculture and he has concluded to further such legislation as he thinks desirable, so far as Congress is concerned. Thus far does the President go, but not much further. I do not think there will be a stampede in this House because of this letter which the gentleman from North Dakota produces. I question whether the President is fully informed upon this measure. I doubt whether he has read or will have an opportunity to read, unless he takes up the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this morning, about the activities of the Nonpartisan League, which is harassing Members of Congress at the present time. The league was organized by a gentleman whose business failed and who did not pay his obligations. He organized the Nonpartisan League on a $16 per annum dues basis so that indigent farmers might get free seed and other things. This organization is having its influence throughout the Northwest just now. But the gentleman who controls it is under indictment for alleged seditious utterances in the State of Minnesota. Is the President of the United States cognizant of these facts? Is it possible in these war times that the President of the United States would urge as a military necessity a bill advocated by a political organizer who is under indictment for seditious utterances?

I endeavored to tell the House something about this bill yesterday. The State of North Dakota is in some trouble about this measure, because the State of North Dakota, through its legislature, undertook to cover the matter of seed distribution. It got angled up with the law and the Government of the United States, in that it provided that while it would take care of its own farmers it wanted to have the first lien over and above the Government lien on what it loaned to the farmers. That is the trouble with the State of North Dakota. It is not our fault. The bill introduced by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER], calling for $50,000,000 to be given to indigent farmers, included certain preferred States. North Dakota, of course, was included. For apparently good strategic reasons Texas was included. They have a good many farmer votes down in Texas, and Texas, working with North Dakota, would make a good team. Whether all the gentlemen from Texas bite or not, I do not know, but certainly some of them did not bite. The bill also included the State of South Dakota, but thereby hangs a tale. South Dakota now comes forward and resents the notion that her farmers are indigent and in need of Government aid. South Dakota insists that she will take care of her own farmers.

I read from a resolution signed by the president of the senate, the secretary of the senate, the speaker of the house, and the chief clerk of the house of the Legislature of South Dakota. It throws a timely light upon this paternalistic bill.

That resolution sets forth:

Be it resolved by the Senate of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota assembled in extraordinary session at the State capital, the House of Representatives concurring:

That whereas there has been a bill introduced in the Congress of the United States (H. R. 7795) to appropriate money for the relief of farmers in procuring seed grain and feed for stock in certain enumerated Northwestern States, of which South Dakota is specifically named as one needing such Government aid;

And whereas South Dakota is now honestly advertising the prosperity of the State: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the legislature now in extraordinary session, with representatives present from all sections of the State, singly and collectively declare that, to the best of their knowledge and belief, the farmers of South Dakota are not asking for Federal aid to procure seed and feed; and that the State is amply able and willing to aid, if necessary, any farmer who needs aid, and that the few individual or isolated cases that may exist, if any, can and will be taken care of either by township or county aid. And further that the advertising South Dakota has received through "H. R. 7795" has done her a great injustice, as South Dakota has never been more prosperous than now, as proved by competent authority; be it further

Resolved, That engrossed copies of this resolution be prepared by the secretary of the senate and delivered by United States mail to the Secretary of the Senate of the United States, to the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States, to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, and to the Senators and Representatives of South Dakota now serving in the United States Senate and House of Representatives.

W. H. MCMASTER,
President of the Senate.
W. N. VAN CAMP,
Secretary of the Senate.
A. C. ROBERTS,
Speaker of the House.
C. W. GARDNER,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. Chairman, it will be noticed that the bill mentioned in these resolutions, namely H. R. 7795, is the very bill you are asked to pass to-day. The State of South Dakota rejects this bill. South Dakota farmers are too proud and too prosperous to be put upon your $450 free-seed roll. They are willing to pay for their seed, as every other State ought to be willing to pay for its seed. South Dakota rejects this measure.

The Secretary of Agriculture evidently knows these facts. Why does he not come forward and indorse the statement of the gentleman from South Carolina, who places his hand upon his heart and pleads so fervently for the boys in the trenches? [Applause.]

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes in which to reply to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from North Dakota that a unanimous-consent agreement has been entered into, to the effect that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes, and the time was all allotted.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER] may have the time that I intended to use myself, five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina was to have five minutes. The gentleman from North Dakota will be recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say, in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], that I do not want to enter into personalities which he is trying to bring into this debate. He has not brought forth one argument against the bill itself. I can not see where prejudice and patriotism mix. There is no partisanship in patriotism. I do not believe there has been sufficient argument brought out on this floor at any time against this legislation to warrant us in throwing this bill down at this time.

I want to say that if the farmers of South Dakota do not need seed I am greatly deceived. The Legislature of South Dakota does not represent the farmers of that State as the Legislature of North Dakota represents the farmers of North Dakota. We have a farmer legislature up there, and they have realized the need, and they have taken care of it as best they could.

From South Dakota I have received resolutions from the Farmers' Equity Society, one of the largest organizations of its kind in the United States. They indorse this bill. They say there are large sections in that State which need aid. I have also received letters from the Farmers' Union and many individual farmers of South Dakota, saying they need aid.

In Texas cattle are starving, and the cradle of our cattle industry is being robbed to-day. Talk about meatless days! Five years from now we will not have any meat at all in this country if we continue to kill off the yearlings and the 2-year olds as we are doing now.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAER. No; I can not yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. I will say to the gentleman that the Legislature of Texas has done what the Legislature of North Dakota ought to do. It has appropriated $2,000,000 to take care of that.

Mr. BAER. Texas is to be congratulated, and I repeat that North Dakota has done its best. I want to read what several men have said about the Nonpartisan League. The clipping is from the Courier-News, of Fargo, N. Dak.:

ST. PAUL, March 21.

"The National Nonpartisan League is the only movement which will save the United States from a revolution," in the opinion of Carl S. Vrooman, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture.

George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information, said: "Despite attacks, I believe intensely in the loyalty of the Nonpartisan League. I have done all in my power to protect it from unfair assaults."

Statements from these two men were read to the great audience attending the Farmers' and Workers' National Nonpartisan League rally at the morning session in the St. Paul Auditorium by Rev. S. R. Maxwell, of Denver, Colo., league lecturer.

Rev. Mr. Maxwell also said he had a personal letter from President Wilson lauding the league, which he said he did not feel at liberty to make public.

Other speakers at the morning session were George D. Brewer, veteran of the Spanish-American War, and Ben F. Wilson, both league lecturers.

"We are going to lick hell out of the Kaiser in Germany," Mr. Brewer said, and, as the cheers subsided, added, "and we are going to lick hell out of the industrial kaisers in this country, too."

R. E. Crane, indorsed by the league as candidate for lieutenant governor of Minnesota, spoke briefly at the afternoon session, as did F. E. Tillquist, indorsed as candidate for railroad and warehouse commissioner.

I could go on and read many other indorsements of men of prominence who say the league is loyal and patriotic.

Now, I am going to read an editorial from this morning's Washington Herald, a Republican newspaper, one of Mr. MOORE'S newspapers. It says:

THE FARMERS' LEAGUE.

It has become more or less popular in some publicity channels to denounce the Farmers' Nonpartisan League as an "anti-American combination of traitors."

This organization of farmers, with a membership of nearly 200,000 in Mississippi Valley and Rocky Mountain States, has been accused of many un-American things. The other day the Minnesota State convention of this nonpartisan league was held. Included in its platform, which declares for Government ownership, were these words:

"We pledge anew our devotion to our country in this supreme hour of trial. We reaffirm our faith in the principles of democracy and pledge our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor to the struggle to free the world from autocracy and establish democracy, political and industrial, among the peoples of the earth.

"We declare it to be our solemn conviction that the German military autocracy, revealed in all its horrors by the ruthless rape of Russia, is a menace to the world. We pledge our unqualified support to our Government in the war to free the world from this menace.

"We indorse whole-heartedly the statement of war aims by the President of the United States. We believe that he has stated clearly and unequivocally the real intent in the hearts of the American people and that this statement forms a sure basis for a lasting and democratic peace."

"If this be treason," doubtless Patrick Henry would say, if he were writing this, "make the most of it!" It doesn't look like treason; it doesn't sound like pro-Germanism; it doesn't sound like anti-Americanism.

I could go on and read these resolutions adopted by the Farmers' and Workers' Nonpartisan League at St. Paul, March 19–21, but I hate to take up the time of the House at this time, and I will append them to my remarks, if there be no objection. [Applause.]

Following are the resolutions referred to:

We, organized workers of the farms and the cities of the State of Minnesota, assembled in mass convention in the city of St. Paul on this the 21st day of March, in the year 1918, do hereby resolve and proclaim our sentiments and the principles for which we stand, as follows:

We and each of us hereby renew our pledges of loyalty and devotion to our common country and reaffirm our unalterable determination to work always for its best and highest interests and for the permanent welfare of its people, our fellow citizens.

Our Nation is engaged in a great and terrible war in which we believe its purposes, and the purposes of its people, as given clear enunciation by the President whom we have chosen to direct the administration of our national affairs, to be right and just and worthy the whole-hearted support of every good citizen.

Therefore we pledge our adherence to these purposes, we commend our President for his faithful statement of the intentions which are in the heart of the American people, and we assure him and our fellow citizens of our unqualified support of our Government in its war efforts.

We declare it to be our solemn conviction that the aggressive and lustful purposes and intention of the German military autocracy, as most lately revealed in the ruthlessness with which prostrate and bleeding Russia has been overridden, have imperiled the foundations of government by the people everywhere in the world, and that we can not hope to work out in safety the problems of free and democratic government and equal rights and opportunity until the German military autocracy has been vanquished and this menace thus removed.

This is the issue upon which the peace and liberty loving peoples of the world have taken their stand against a power which makes might its only justification.

We count ourselves one with forces everywhere in the world which are fighting despotism and aggression and seeking to make governments more just and to cause all governments to permit and foster just economic conditions.

We express our abhorrence of the doctrine that militarism is necessary to guarantee peace. On the contrary militarism is one of the inciting causes of war, and it is for this very reason that the interests of all the workers lie in the utmost concentration of effort in this war, which holds in it the possibility of making future great wars impossible.

We adhere to the principle of organization of all workers as a necessary step in the accomplishment of economic justice and as a protection and a safeguard for true democracy.

Therefore we organized workers and organized farmers now stand and will continue to stand side by side for the accomplishment of our common aims, to make democracy more perfect and the division of the fruits of labor more just.

The President of the United States already has asked Congress for further authority to fix prices of products where profiteering is holding sway, and we here demand of Congress that it accede to this request of the President in order that the Nation and its people may be defended against those individuals and corporations who are unjustly preying upon them and interfering with the Nation's progress in the war.

We urge that further authority be given to the Government to act as buyer and distributor, through the parcel post, of the necessities of life in any case where price fixing may not prove to be an adequate remedy for existing evils.

We demand that in those great industries where profiteering in Government supplies holds sway the Government take over the mines, the plants, the machinery, and the tools and operate them with the willing aid of the patriotic workers in those industries. Least of all do we believe in excessive prices on war contracts which build up huge vested interests enriched by wealth taxed from the people of the Nation. We believe that war supplies and the tools of war ought to be manufactured by the Government, and that the necessary factories and machinery for the purposes should be conscripted by the Government.

We indorse the course of organized labor throughout the country in being willing to submit to Federal mediation in all industrial disputes, which is an evidence of the fundamental patriotism of American workingmen. We urge upon the Government that as a necessary complement to its policy of mediation in industrial disputes affecting the war it adopt the course of commandeering those industries where there are disputes between capital and labor which do not promptly yield to mediation, and that all such establishments or industries or contracts thereafter for the duration of the war be operated and carried on by the Government.

The gains achieved for the producers and the consumers by Government regulation which has mitigated the pernicious effects of speculation and profiteering in food products since the war started must not be sacrificed when peace comes. We urge upon the Government that some form of regulation and control of the food markets be continued after the war shall have ended, that speculation in and monopoly of the food markets, by which many millions have been stolen from the producers and consumers of our own State every year, be stopped by the exercise of State and Federal authority. We also call for protection of cooperative buying and selling against the assaults of private interests, and we declare for the principle of direct dealing between producer and consumer in so far as is possible, aided and encouraged by the power of State and Federal Governments.

As a step toward the wiser stimulation and control of farm production we respectfully suggest to the administration that representatives of the producers of agricultural products should be included in the departments of the national administration having to do with the stimulation of production and the control of food products.

The live stock and packing industries of the country are under the absolute control and domination of a closely affiliated group of great corporate interests, commonly known as the Packing Trust. Recent investigation by the Federal Trade Commission has shown that the policies of this great aggregation of capital are such as (1) to oppress the workers in those industries—thousands of them living under insanitary and intolerable conditions and at a level of wages insufficient properly to support human life, (2) to control the retail meat trade and a large portion of the general food trade of the country in such a way as to collect extortionate toll from consumers, and, (3) most important of all, to menace the whole live-stock production of the country by a control over the purchasing markets which makes it almost impossible for the farmers to raise live stock.

These triple conditions of menace to the country must be alleviated. We see no sane remedy but for the Government to take over and operate the properties of the Packing Trust, at least for the duration of the war, calling upon the patriotic workers in the industries operated by the packing and food combine to render their services to the Government as faithfully as they have been rendering them to the private capital which now employs them.

The same conditions of monopoly that exist in the packing industry also exist in the milling industry, and here, too, the workers are underpaid and denied the right of organization, and we think that the same remedy as that asked in the packing industry ought to be employed, namely, that the Government take over and operate these flour mills at least for the duration of the war.

We declare ourselves for the control of the natural resources of the land, including the oil, the mineral, and the water-power wealth, as an asset of the people and in their interest. We indorse the President in his opposition to the bill known as the Shields bill, already passed by the Senate, which proposes to turn over great public wealth to private exploitation without adequate return to the people.

Huge sums of money must be had to finance our fight for democracy, and so much of these sums as can not be had by taxation must be had by bond issues. The bond issues of the Government are a safe and profitable investment. They merely postpone to another day the decision as to how the expense of the war must be met and make it possible to devote all necessary resources at once to the prosecution of the war. Therefore we urge upon all our fellow workers that they lay aside so much of their savings as is possible to invest in the liberty bonds, which are to be our investment in the cause of world freedom.

While we thus do our part, let us continue to urge that the war debt be wiped out as speedily as possible, so that it may not be an intolerable burden upon the future generations of workers, and that in providing for the taxation with which the debt must be paid heavy levies be made upon profits coined out of the war and upon the swollen incomes which represent far too heavy a drain upon the toil and the suffering of the workers.

We believe that conscription of wealth is as necessary and as equitable as conscription of men. We favor increasing the rate of taxation on war profits and incomes beyond the rates levied in the present war-tax bill until they are at least equal to the rates imposed by Great Britain, and we favor continuing these rates of taxes until the debt accumulated by the present war is fully paid.

Our own sons are making the supreme sacrifice for liberty upon a foreign soil and we would be recreant to our natural affection, as well as to our patriotism, if we did not adopt every means possible to make their struggle easier and their lot more tolerable. Therefore we urge all to make regular contributions to the Red Cross, the Young Men's Christian Association, the Knights of Columbus, and the other agencies for giving comfort and aid to the soldier and extending mercy to those who fall wounded.

We urge the attention, both of legislators and of private citizens, to the need of taking care of the families and of the affairs of the men in the national service while they are absent and of providing useful employment for them when they return. Particularly, we urge upon our legislature the need of a soldiers' moratorium law, acting as a stay of all debts of the soldier in service, such as was adopted at the recent session of the farmers' legislature in the State of North Dakota.

Our State has been the scene in recent months of lawless violence committed against citizens of the State, of usurpation of authority by petty officials, of neglect of duty by high officers who have failed and refused to extend the common protection of the law to all citizens. We condemn these individuals and officials who have thus been recreant in their duty as well as all those unscrupulous agitators who have falsely and for political purposes impugned the loyalty of good citizens, and we brand as an act of injury to our Nation these false charges of disloyalty, these acts of mob violence, this connivance at disorder by public officials, all of which have tended to arraign class against class in the State of Minnesota, and to make it appear—falsely—that a majority of the citizens of this State are disloyal.

Yet, while we condemn these derelict officials and these fomenters of disorder, we urge our fellow workers not to be drawn into resistance of authority, and not to make the mistake of opposing violence with violence, but steadily to maintain the dignity of good and peaceful American citizens, while at the same time with firmness they continue to advocate and to uphold those things which they believe to be right, to the end that they, at least, may not be the cause of any embarrassment to the Nation in its time of stress. Thus will the blame for such divisions and disorder as have occurred in the State be placed squarely where it belongs and not with the organized workers or the organized farmers.

We commend organized labor for its course of patriotic support of the Government in the war, a course which we believe serves best the permanent interests of the workers, and we pledge ourselves to cooperation in the problem and the struggle of finding the best means toward industrial justice in the reconstruction period that is to follow.

Finally, we declare our purposes to be, not the selfish advancement of any class, but the common good of all, and we call upon all men, whatever may be their views on the wisdom or the unwisdom of proposed reforms, to remember that the traditional birthright of Americans is tolerance and freedom and to strive always to maintain these ideals unsullied by the resentments of war time and unprejudiced by narrow political desires. We feel sure that only by adherence to these principles can the Nation come with moral triumph out of the stern trial of these times.

In reference to Mr. Townley's arrest, the New York American affirms that each statement which he made was a true statement, a patriotic statement, and a thoroughly American statement.

The fact that the editors of the metropolitan press quote Mr. Townley and assume responsibility, by stating editorially that they are thoroughly in accord with his position, is mathematical proof that the Minnesota incident is purely a case of the opponents of the league trying to use the Minnesota government machinery to pull their political chestnuts out of the fire.

The arrest of A. C. Townley, president of the National Nonpartisan League, looks very much like a trick of politics—of politics of the low sort.

In brief, Mr. Townley makes four affirmative statements:

1. That the Nonpartisan League is opposed to profiteering during the war.

2. That freedom of speech and of the press is the bulwark of human liberty.

3. That one of the causes of this world war was the desire of opposing groups of governments and groups of monopolies to gain financial and commercial supremacy.

4. That the rule of jobbers and speculators must be overthrown in this country as well as in every other country if true democracy is to prevail.

Now, we affirm that each of these statements is a true statement, a patriotic statement, and a thoroughly American statement.

If the president of the farmers' organization in the Northwest, or any other man, can be arrested and indicted and imprisoned for making such statements as those quoted, then the constitutional guaranties have lost all their force and the liberty of no man is safe.

The Nonpartisan League, of which Mr. Townley is president, is a body composed almost entirely of farmers living in Minnesota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Colorado, Utah, and Washington.

During the past few months Mr. Townley and other officers of the Nonpartisan League have worked almost day and night holding patriotic meetings throughout the Northwest, pledging support to the President, and soliciting and receiving large donations to the Red Cross.

The real offense of which Mr. Townley and his associates are guilty is that of making uncompromising and successful war upon the trusts and jobbers and speculators and other extortioners who have exhibited and robbed the wheat growers of the Northwest year after year and who have debauched politics and stuffed public offices with their creatures and tools.

In North Dakota the organized farmers, with the assistance of sympathizers in the towns and cities, have knocked out both the Republican and Democratic rings and have put on the statute books economic legislation which has ended the power of the trusts and monopolies and jobbers and speculators to rob the producers and consumers of that Commonwealth.

In Minnesota, in Nebraska, in Colorado, in Utah, and in Washington the same Nonpartisan League proclaims its intention to repeat the excellent results achieved in North Dakota.

Every day sees a new political organization becoming stronger and stronger and sees the profiteers more and more in panic.

Under these conditions the frightened gangs of profiteers have resorted to exactly such tactics as the Mitchel garg used here in New York. They are trying to hide their own sinister purposes behind a camouflage of patriotism and to discredit the farmers' organization by false accusations of disloyalty.

The whole thing is only another proof of how right old Dr. Johnson was when he defined "patriotism" as the last refuge of a scoundrel.

There is nothing disloyal in the language we have quoted by the president of the Nonpartisan League. There is nothing unpatriotic either in the attitude or the purposes of the Nonpartisan League.

On the other hand, any body of men who propose in any State or in any community to unmask the scoundrelly profiteers who hide their scoundrelism behind the camouflage of patriotism; any body of men banded together to obtain social justice, to put an end to the exploitation of the industrious farmers and workers by the unprincipled extortioners who prey upon both, perform a public service that is in the highest degree patriotic.

We protest against the arrest of President Townley and this attempt to besmirch the organized farmers of the Northwest with the false accusation of disloyalty. It is an indefensible assault upon the constitutional rights and liberties of American citizens.

A nation is only truly free in which every individual is free to speak and to write his opinion upon public affairs—political, social, and economic.

The liberties of all are firmly bound up in the protection of the liberty of each.

Every newspaper in the United States and every public man and every private citizen should speak out loudly and boldly in condemnation of this attempt to fasten the stigma of disloyalty upon the farmers of the great Northwest and to bring the president of the organization to punishment as a criminal because he exercised his undoubted rights as a free American to condemn the extortioners and exploiters who have robbed him and his people, and to point out that the war for democracy will indeed have been fought in vain if these scoundrelly profiteers are to continue after the conclusion of that war to rob and despoil the workers of the land.

In the Nonpartisan League movement the people of this country will not find any conspiracy nor discover any secret-planned sedition. On the contrary, we have presented publicly and openly, without equivocation or illusion, certain principles. A statement of these principles in this public manner precludes the possibility of their being dangerous. Yet that these public statements have driven some to the extremity of wrath and denunciation is the only answer of which they seem as yet capable. The Nonpartisan League is not too radical for progressive men of both parties, and I admit that it is not too conservative for the liberals of all groups. Jefferson says: "Error of opinion can be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it." A man who boldly proclaims a principle, no matter what it may be, can do but little injury. No amount of intellect, learning, or eloquence can make him dangerous. If the principles advocated by the farmers are wrong, they can only be destroyed by reason and argument—not by epithet and abuse. The farmers have set an example. The, have set forth the principles they purpose to maintain calmly, clearly, and openly. These have been proclaimed from platform and through the press, so that all may read and know. There is nothing secret or sinister in their methods—just the plain American method plus pitiless publicity. No injury can come to the Nation from that. On the other hand, benefit can come from it if there should be a fair discussion and criticism of them. Iron sharpeneth iron and discussion brings out much that might be overlooked. Threats of personal violence and of arrest, such as have been made, are not only un-American but actually hurtful, as they prevent the discussion needed to test under the hammer of logic and under the acid of reason the principles put forward by the farmers.

It is time to drop the high-tragedy rôle and get down to common sense. It is time to cease howling and begin thinking. It is time to quit questioning the patriotism of the men who feed, clothe, and sustain us. If the farmers' movement be wrong, we must grant that it is supported by men who are sincere, earnest, and determined. Hard names will not change them and hysteria will not cause them to waver. Only clean-cut argument and sound sense will make an impression on them. If, in the ranks of those opposing, such things may be found, it is time to bring them out.

I extend the following letters and telegrams at the request of Mr. GANDY, of South Dakota, who wanted to be present and vote for this bill:

BISON, S. DAK., March 8, 1918.

HARRY L. GANDY, M. C.,
Washington:

In spring, 1912, Perkins County furnished $67,000 worth of seed grain to 1,292 farmers. Of this amount $5,700 is still uncollected; the greater portion of this will be a loss to the county.

A. MICHELSON, County Auditor.

STURGIS, S. DAK., March 8, 1918.

HARRY L. GANDY,
Washington, D. C.:

Seed grain furnished farmers, Meade County, spring of 1912, 6,300 bushels, at a cost of $9,000; 125 farmers supplied with a loss to county of $680.

FRANK J. MURPHY, County Auditor.

RAPID CITY, S. DAK., March 8, 1918.

Hon. H. L. GANDY,
Washington, D. C.:

Eight thousand one hundred and ninety-one bushels applied for by 117 farmers; no loss; county still holds a few of the seed-grain notes.

A. D. CLIFF, Pennington County Auditor.

BELLEFOURCHE, S. DAK., March 9, 1918.

Congressman HARRY L. GANDY,
Washington, D. C.:

Approximately $10,000 spent for seed; about 200 farmers furnished; $1,500 uncollected notes; deficit covered by tax levy of $3,000 in 1912.

N. P. LANG, County Auditor.

ISABEL, S. DAK, February 22, 1918.

Hon. HARRY L. GANDY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am writing you to ask you to try and get the Baer bill or some measure that will give the farmers an opportunity to get money to buy seed this spring and give us all a chance to do our best to get all of our land in crop this spring, as I do not think one-half of the farmers here in this locality are going to get in a full crop without they get help from the Government. Our crops were so poor last year that we are not able to put in a big crop without help, and you know we must have the crop this year, and I am sure you will do your bit.

Yours, truly,

F. PROUTY.

SIOUX FALLS, S. DAK., March 1, 1918.

Hon. HARRY L. GANDY,
Washington, D. C.:

MY DEAR MR. GANDY: It has recently come to my attention that there is now pending before Congress a bill providing for help being extended by the Government to indigent farmers in North Dakota and Montana in buying seed wheat and other seed grains for use this spring, this help being needed on account of the almost total failure of the small-grain crops in the two States mentioned.

Mr. GANDY, if there ever was a bill before Congress that was worthy of your consideration and support it is this one.

I have no ax to grind in asking you, if you can conscientiously do so, to support this bill, but am asking this for the reason that previous to three months ago I traveled in the State of Montana for five years as a salesman selling farm implements. In this line of work I had plenty of opportunity to observe just what the agricultural conditions are in Montana, particularly in the new and undeveloped portions of the State. In that time we saw three almost total crop failures.

If you have never made a close study of the State of Montana in particular, you perhaps have not the least realization of the unlimited possibilities for the agricultural development of that country. There are thousands and thousands and hundreds of thousands of acres of virgin prairie land that with even subnormal moisture conditions will raise the best crops that ever grew outdoors. However, as is generally the case in new countries that are just developing, the settlers are composed of people of limited means—ex-professional men, ex-merchants, ex-clerks—people that are striving honestly and sincerely to better their condition. They are not afraid of work, but they are limited for capital, and the experiences that I have seen some of these people go through have been almost heart-rending. Many a family have gone hungry during the winter on account of their crop of the season before not panning out.

To summarize, Mr. GANDY, all that these people need is a chance and a little help. The banks out there are not always as willing to help with loans as they might be. Were it not for the help and the extensions that have been given merchants of that country by the wholesale houses the country would not be in near the stage of development that it is to-day, but the country is so large that with the help that the Government can give them in getting seed grain for this spring, as said before, even with subnormal moisture conditions the crops they will raise there will be phenomenal. Could you get a map or Government statistics of the new land that has been opened in the Montana country for cultivation even in the last five years you could see without a doubt where even with a large crop, Montana will help in the production of wheat to feed the people of this country and our allies, and, of course, this is what we all want and are straining every nerve to accomplish.

Thanking you in advance for your consideration, and trusting that you may see your way clear to support this bill, I am,

Very sincerely, yours,

W. L. NEWPORT,
Manager Dakota Moline Plow Co.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, the thought has been expressed in the House very frequently that men who do not represent agricultural districts are not particularly interested in bills appertaining to agricultural matters, but I take a different view from that. I think we Members who represent those people who live in the cities are more vitally interested in what the agriculturists do than are the agriculturists themselves, for the reason that we are entirely dependent upon the farmer for our food and thereby our very existence. We in the city have no way to produce food and we must depend entirely upon the farmers. The cities pay a large part of the taxes of this country, and they are willing to contribute in every way that will insure a full food supply. A sufficient supply is not alone vital to our people, both rural and urban, but to the winning of the war itself. Food! Food! Food! should be the slogan as Ships! Ships! Ships! Now, I do not know anything about matters in South Dakota. I do not know anything about the Nonpartisan League to any extent. Both of which are embraced in the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. In our State we have only two parties practically, the Democratic and the Republican, others are infinitismal; and, by the way, let me tell you that they are not very far apart just at this time. They are all working in unison for the winning of this war and not worrying about politics. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If there was an organization known as the Nonpartisan League, that had a million and a half of dollars in its treasury, which was sending lecturers into the gentleman's district, would he not recognize it?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Certainly I would recognize it; but they do not have to send lecturers into our districts in Maryland. We have such good Democrats and Republicans up there that we can explain political matters to the satisfaction of our intelligent constituents without the assistance of this Nonpartisan League and its lecturers. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOBECK. And you would get their votes if they did come there.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Of course, I would get their votes if they came over there. Why should I not? They might go further and fare worse. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That would be largely on account of the color of the gentleman's necktie.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I do not know whether that would attract the Nonpartisan League, but this tie and what is back of it does attract most of the leagues we have up there in Baltimore. I will say that. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I am very deeply in earnest about this bill. It is vital to our people that we have a large production of food this year.

I for one am willing to take a chance with the farmer by advance of seed. I know if he can make the crop he will repay the Government. He is willing to advance his labor, his honor, and his character against the advance of seed to him by Uncle Sam. Thousands of individuals take this chance with the farmer and why should not the National Government do the same when it has so much at stake. You have advanced to the munition makers, the shipbuilders, and others; are they more honorable and honest than the farmer? I think not. Do you realize that you must not only produce for the people at home and the soldiers and sailors abroad but you must also produce in such abundance that when the submarines take their dreadful toll that there will be sufficient left. We must not alone produce for consumption but destruction as well, just so long as these terrible pirates of the sea continue their diabolical work.

Now, as to the advance of money to the farmers for seed, I have had business relations with farmers for years, and I have had business relations with farmers who did not have a dollar's worth of real estate, and very little in the way of farm implements, and I tell you that the money you advance to the farmer is generally very safe. The farmer is honest, and honesty and labor are great assets. The farmer has both You lose very little of it in proportion to what you lose in other enterprises. If the farmer can possibly produce a crop and sell it, he is going to pay his debts. One of the first things he does when the season is over is to take the money he gets for his crop and go around and settle his debts. I know it. My father was a farmer, and I have had their association and friendship all my life. I do not believe we are going to lose much money that we advance to the farmers under this bill, and if we do lose half of it, what is the difference, just so we get the wheat to feed the people. Food is the vital thing, cost what it may. That is the thing I am interested in, representing a city district, whose very life depends upon the labor and success of the farmer.

It is not only seed we need to produce this crop. We need farm machinery; and I have always advocated the loaning of money to the farmer to buy farm machinery, because he can put in so many more acres by machinery than he can by mere hand labor. I am very sorry to see the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], who has such a bright mind and is usually of wide view, opposing this bill. His city needs food just as much as Baltimore needs food, and he ought to use every effort to see that legislation is passed which will assist in the raising of food. I told the gentleman this morning about a letter I received from my nephew, Lieut. Walter Linthicum, who is at Camp Lee. He fits out the soldiers there, and he tells me that among the very best men who have come to that camp are large numbers who recently came in from Pennsylvania. He says they are some of the finest men who have yet come to Camp Lee. There are also some from West Virginia and a few from Virginia. I am very much surprised that a gentleman representing such a high-class constituency should oppose a bill of this kind, the object of which is to feed the people of the country, the country for which these splendid and intelligent Pennsylvanians are to risk their very lives.

It will be too late to cry out what should have been done if we once run amuck of that grim monster—that monster worse than war—hunger, hunger.

Speaking of machinery, I wish to call to the attention of this House to a most interesting article by C. Bosley Littig, recently published in one of our Baltimore papers, in which he calls special attention to the standardization of farm machinery. No one can well estimate the loss occasioned the farmers by the many makes of farm machinery. What a blessing and saving it would be to standardize this important branch of industry.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That Camp Lee compliment is a very worthy one from excellent soldiers to their commander, who is doubtless a worthy commander.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes; it is.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But I want to ask the gentleman if the people of Baltimore, as well as those of Philadelphia, at the present time are not getting less food and paying more for it than they ever did before in their lives?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Of course we are getting less food and paying more for it, and that is one of the reasons why I want this bill to pass, so we can get more food and pay less for it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. One other question. If the gentleman's farmer friend had a tractor such as he refers to, does he think he would have any trouble in getting money to buy his seed?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I think the two things ought to go together. One is seed and the other is farm implements, so we can put in large crops.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I agree with the gentleman as to that.

Mr. GORDON. The bill does not provide for money for furnishing farm implements.

Mr. LINTHICUM. No; it does not; but it ought to provide money for furnishing farm implements. That is one of the things I have been advocating.

Seed alone, however, is not the only great aim of this legislation. Section 2 provides for the voluntary mobilization of labor. This is a most important work. Labor must be had upon the farms, and this will give the Secretary of Agriculture the power to provide the men needed. Only 10 days ago the leader or a leader of the Poles of Baltimore told me that there were thousands of his race who would gladly take to the farms if means and homes could be provided. He said the Pole was a natural born farmer, his whole training had been farming, and that he loved the outdoor life and God's beautiful sunlight above all things. He was a denizen of the city from necessity, not choice. I believe this to be true. I know the Pole by close association, his work and his love for the farm. I have seen large numbers employed by my father on his farm in Maryland. They are good, clean, practical farmers. This section will take care of just such cases and many others. It will help the labor situation.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, my district takes in the Minnesota side of the Red River Valley. For more than 200 miles on the west line lies the district of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER], who takes in the Red River Valley on the west side of the river. It is perhaps the greatest wheat-producing region in the world.

The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER] stated correctly that he was not asking for this relief on account of the needs of his particular congressional district. The conditions there are similar to those prevailing in my section, where the wheat crop last year, though light, was not a failure. I presume it averaged over 10 bushels to the acre. There is no lack of seed wheat there. But in western North Dakota and Montana there was a drouth, and in large areas the wheat crop failed. Although I have no personal knowledge, I have reliable information from people I know, who formerly lived in my district and who have moved to western North Dakota and Montana and taken up new lands there, as to conditions prevailing in that region. Owing to the failure of the wheat and the lack of banking and credit facilities it is difficult, if not impossible, for some of these settlers to get seed unless the Government steps in and helps.

The fact is that wheat and other grain prices have gone so high that it takes a little fortune to put in a 160-acre farm. I feel that the wheat crop will be reduced in acreage unless this bill passes. The land out there is virgin soil, it is very productive. I have no doubt that if they get a favorable year it will produce 25 bushels to the acre. Wheat at $2.50 a bushel for seed, $7,500,000 will buy 3,000,000 bushels of seed. If wheat produces fifteen or twenty fold, we will raise from forty-five to sixty million bushels of wheat from that amount of seed. That is not a small item. Some years our whole foreign export has not exceeded 60,000,000 bushels.

Now, when we are confronted as we are with the order that we must cut down the bread portion to 2 ounces per day, that we must cut the consumption in order to supply and meet the crying needs of the allies and of our soldiers, in face of the fact that the Government policy of fixing the price of wheat below its market value has discouraged the planting of wheat, in face of the fact that the country districts away from the railroads are now using wheat and compelled to do it as the most economical for the feeding of cattle, and selling the coarser grain, as was shown by Senator NELSON in the recent Senate debate on the Agricultural bill. By reason of these facts the tendency has been to discourage the production of wheat.

Wheat is exhausting to the soil, and it is not profitable to grow it on the same land for a series of years, for the last becomes weedy and the crop dwindles to 8 or 10 bushels to the acre.

Since the bill has been amended so as to include seed corn it will, however, supply a great need in my own State and district. The early frost caught all out corn, so that we have absolutely no seed corn. All must be brought in from outside. I hope this bill will pass.

The proponents of this bill and the committee deserve praise for bringing it up for action. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the bill on account of the special emergency, and we want that 45,000,000 bushels of wheat next fall to help feed our people and soldiers and our allies. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, may we have the paragraph read as it will read if amended?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the paragraph as it will read if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That at the opening of the next regular session of Congress the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause to be made to the Congress a detailed report showing all proceedings and transactions under this act. Such report shall, in addition to other matters, contain a statement of all persons employed, the salary or compensation of each, the aggregate amount of loans, advances, or sales, and the total amount thereof unpaid, and all receipts and disbursements under this act. All moneys collected by the United States under this act shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were—44 ayes and 42 nays.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That any person who shall knowingly make any false representation for the purpose of obtaining an advance, loan, or sale under this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the figures "1,000" and inserting "5,000," and striking out "six months" and inserting "five years." In other words, I move to increase the maximum penalty.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 19, after the word "exceeding," strike out "1,000" and insert in lieu thereof "5,000," and in line 20, after the word "exceeding," strike out "six months" and insert in place thereof "five years."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, this amendment which I propose simply increases the maximum penalty which may be imposed from $1,000 to $5,000 and from 6 months to 5 years. This is a war measure, and I submit that if anybody, a farmer or anybody else, knowingly makes a false representation under the guise of war-emergency legislation, for the purpose of filching money out of the United States Treasury, the court ought to have ample latitude to impose a severe penalty. Simply to say that he may be fined $1,000 or put in jail for 6 months would strike but little terror to some of the so-called farmers who are enrolled in certain organizations whose principles are not founded upon what is best for the United States. I believe that the courts ought to have authority to impose heavy penalties, to deter others from attempting to get any amount of money under false pretenses.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like the gentleman to say whether the thinks we should impose a higher penalty upon a man who can not possibly take advantage of the Government to the extent of more than $450?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think it is a question of money. Why not fine him $450 and the interest, or fine him the amount of the money he procures?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He has no money; that is the point.

Mr. WALSH. Then impose the imprisonment sentence along similar lines; but my idea is simply to make this conform to the other criminal statutes that we have passed.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania has concluded?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I submit to the gentleman that inasmuch as he raised this question during the passage of the War Finance Corporation bill and succeeded in placing a higher term of imprisonment and a larger fine upon those magnate malefactors who might get the better of the Government through the operation of false statements, perhaps it would be fair in proportion to keep the fine and imprisonment down in the case of a man who can only get $450 from the Government in one year. The gentleman will bear in mind that we are not dealing with millionaires or large corporations, and we ought to be fair to the poor farmer, from whatever State he comes, who, having no property whatever, no land, no nothing, can still obtain $450 from the Government.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. In order to make this conform to the criminal statutes generally, had you not better insert a minimum punishment?

Mr. WALSH. Let me say to the gentleman that I was simply seeking to make it conform to the emergency war legislation which Congress has passed. In nearly all of those acts the maximum is stated.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does it not always carry a minimum penalty?

Mr. WALSH. No; not in most of the war measures.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not be agreed to. In the first place, there is no need of putting a drastic penalty of this sort in this bill, and if you fix a penalty of $5,000 and there are violations you will not get any convictions, because a jury will not bring in a verdict of guilty with such a heavy penalty to be imposed.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Does the gentleman not think there ought to be a minimum punishment imposed here for obtaining money from the Government by false pretenses?

Mr. RUBEY. I am perfectly willing to leave that to the courts, as we have in a great many other cases.

Mr. GORDON. To obtain the $450 by false pretenses is a felony under the laws of every State in the Union.

Mr. RUBEY. The courts will take care of that.

Mr. GORDON. Does the gentleman not think there ought to be a minimum penalty fixed?

Mr. RUBEY. I do not.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. Yes. I gladly yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. It may be $1, or $10, or a hundred dollars, or one day, or no imprisonment. If you increase it it will not do any good, because it is already so high. Does the gentleman not think that no court, taking into consideration everything, would go to the maximum?

Mr. RUBEY. I agree with the gentleman, we should not increase it.

Mr. CANNON. I think we better leave it as it is.

Mr. RUBEY. I think the gentleman is right.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I wish to oppose the amendment. But, first, I desire to appeal to my usually warm-hearted friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], coming as he does from the rock-bound coast of New England, not to insist upon this harsh amendment. The amount the Government would lose in individual cases is so small—only $450—that——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, in view of the great embarrassment that it would cause the gentleman from Pennsylvania to be compelled to vote on this amendment I ask to withdraw it. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the paragraph, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 5, line 18, after the word "act," insert "or shall use money or grain procured under the provisions of this act for a purpose different from that for which the same shall have been obtained or shall, without first repaying the indebtedness incurred for money or seed furnished under this act, secrete or convert or suffer to be converted to his own use or to the use of any other person the crop or other property upon which said indebtedness is then secured by lien or mortgage."

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that this matter has been taken up with the Solicitor of the Agriculture Department, and the committee agrees that this amendment should be adopted in a modified form, and I send to the desk and offer as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota the following:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RUBEY as a substitute for the Volstead amendment: Page 5, line 18, after the word "act," insert "or shall use money or grain procured under the provisions of this act for a purpose different from that for which the same shall have been obtained, or shall, without first repaying the indebtedness incurred for money or grain furnished under this act, secrete or convert or suffer to be converted to his own use or to the use of another person the crop or any part thereof or any other property upon which such indebtedness is then secured by lien or mortgage."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to say very much in regard to the amendment, as it has been accepted by the committee. I believe such an amendment ought to be made to the bill. It embodies usual provisions for safeguarding the Government, and as such ought to be insisted on. It was suggested by my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] that the penalty ought to be made very severe for misusing any of the money which we appropriate—five years' imprisonment. I think that is entirely unnecessary. The section as it stands with this amendment would be in line with the laws that we generally have in our Western States, where mortgage security of this kind is quite often taken.

Now, just a word in regard to the merits of this bill. A great deal has been said against it, and a great many sneers and gratuitous insults have been directed against the farmer. I want to remind my friends upon this floor who have engaged in this sort of sport that you have just arranged for a credit of $4,000,000,000 to banks and industrial concerns. You advanced to them out of the Treasury $500,000,000, and you gave a like amount to the railroads and guaranteed them during the war the highest earnings they have ever received. We all recognize that these advances are hazardous and can not be justified except as war measures. Now, when the farmers in the West, many of whom are homestead entrymen on Government lands, are asking for a smaller amount so they may be enabled to do their bit in this war by raising food, you apparently make a virtue of your prejudices. These men are just as patriotic as those who are to get the billions and their need is much greater, as they had a crop failure last year. Why not make this appropriation? We are not giving it to the farmers. They are not asking a donation. On the other hand, we are demanding security. We are asking that it be returned, just as we do from the men who are to get the billions. A great deal has been said here in regard to the Nonpartisan League. I am not aware that the Nonpartisan League is at all interested in this legislation. Not a word have I received from that organization, though there are a number of them in my own district. Not a kernel of this grain will be used in my State, as far as I am aware. Let me remind you that the Great Northern, the Northern Pacific, and other railway companies have, year after year, been doing this very work. They advanced seed to farmers and hauled labor free for the purpose of building up the country along their lines. They have done it as a business proposition. This country could afford to do the same thing, even in peace times. Is there any sense in abusing farmers who are asking that same sort of relief? You have taken from them the opportunity to get relief from the railroads. The railroads can not do it. They are in the hands of the Government. The wheat must be had; the Government needs it. We ought to be willing to do something to save the situation. [Applause.] This may mean thirty or forty million bushels that can be had in no other way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. SUMNERS. I want to speak to the motion. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am very much interested in the pending amendment, but I do not know just what is the disposition of the committee toward it.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The committee accepts it.

Mr. SUMNERS. Then I make the pro forma motion to strike out the last word for the purpose of making some observations upon the bill. As a man representing a southern district, a district where we do not produce one-tenth of the grain we consume, I am going to support this bill dealing with wheat production in the Northwest. [Applause.] My people living in the fifth district of Texas are vitally interested in the wheat production of that section. Their boys are in France and must be fed; they must themselves have bread. There is much opposition to the labor mobilization feature of this bill. I want to say to you gentlemen of the South when that time comes, when the grain farmers of Kansas need labor to save the wheat that you must eat to live and that your boys who are in France must have to win, it is good old-fashioned horse sense to send any labor which we can spare to harvest that grain [applause], just as though it belonged to you.

Mr. VENABLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS. I will yield.

Mr. VENABLE. Is there any surplus labor in the gentleman's district?

Mr. SUMNERS. In the towns there may be some. There come times when we have laid by our crops and there come times in the gentleman's district when his people lay by their crops in the summer time——

Mr. VENABLE. Is that the time to sow wheat?

Mr. SUMNERS (continuing). No; but that is the height of the harvest in the Northwest. It would be a wise policy to have the labor which can be spared sent into that territory to save the wheat—not somebody else's wheat, if we look at it broadly, but the wheat of all of us, the wheat to put the strength into the bodies of your people who are to harvest the cotton of the South and to put the strength into the bodies of our southern boys which will give them a better chance to come back to us. [Applause.]

Mr. VENABLE. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. SUMNERS. Just for a question.

Mr. VENABLE. Are crops laid by and labor idle when the spring wheat is harvested?

Mr. SUMNERS. Why, no; and there is nothing in this bill and there is nothing in the whole situation to justify the conclusion that labor will be shifted from the country from which it is needed into a place where it is not needed. We have got to credit the men charged with the administration of this bill with practical common sense. I do not think there will be much shifting of labor, but I will tell you what I think will be done under this bill. There are in the towns and villages of this country many men who have been trained on the farm, there are many patriotic boys and girls there, and I believe firmly that with a proper campaign in those villages and towns that are closely associated with the agricultural interests we could mobilize those forces, with a retired farmer possibly at the head of a squad of young patriots, and put them into the fields at the high points of necessity. [Applause.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS. I am sorry I have not the time. I know there comes times in the cotton fields of the South when we have a rainy spell. It becomes then a contest between the weeds, the grass, and the cotton as to which one is to survive. If we could throw a little surplus labor at that time into these fields and clean them out, then the ordinary labor that is engaged in the cultivation of the crops can take care of them.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS. I am sorry I can not yield. That is what I think will be done under this bill. But the thing, gentlemen, in this discussion I do not like——

Mr. GORDON. Something for nothing.

Mr. SUMNERS. Get something for nothing! Nobody is to get something for nothing. A lot of folks on the floor of this House think if the Government would loan its money to big city banks and then the big city banks loan it to the little country banks at a profit and the little country banks loan it to the farmer and take a mortgage on everything from his bull calf to his wheat crop, it would be all right. They could not discover anything paternalistic about that. According to their idea there is no paternalism if there be a large enough number of toll takers between the Government and the man of final destination.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS. I shall endeavor to resume under the next section.

Mr. PRICE and Mr. RUBEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate has been exhausted on this paragraph. If the gentleman will wait until the next paragraph is reached there will be opportunity then.

The question is on the substitute of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] to the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

The question was taken, and the amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, is not there a vote to be had on the amendment offered to the last section? You simply voted on the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair considered that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], in view of the committee having adopted the substitute, did not desire a vote on the amendment himself. The Chair will be——

Mr. LEVER. I understood the gentleman from Minnesota accepted the substitute and withdrew his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understood it. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That not exceeding $100,000 of the moneys appropriated by this act may be expended for the payment of such administrative expenses, including such rent, the expense of such printing and publications, the purchase of such supplies and equipment, and the employment of such persons and means, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary for the purposes of this act.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee: Page 6, line 3, after the word "act," add the following:

"Provided, however, That no expenditures or advances shall be made under this act unless and until the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine and by proclamation declare that the same is necessary for the more effectual prosecution of the war."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is the gentleman from South Carolina willing to accept that amendment?

Mr. LEVER. I would be glad to have the gentleman's statement on it, and in the meantime I will consult with my colleagues.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if there be any justification for this measure at all it surely must be based upon the theory that we are at war and that the legislation is necessary for the more effectual prosecution of the war.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. LONDON. Is there any precedent for a proclamation by a member of the Cabinet?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, I do not happen to recall whether there is or not. This, of course, can make a precedent if there is none.

The theory upon which this bill was brought in, as I understood it, was that it was necessary for the more effectual prosecution of the war; that is, to encourage the production of foodstuffs, which encouragement was made necessary by reason of war conditions. This is to put into the law its purpose, and for that reason I offer the amendment. I very much hope that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], the chairman of the committee, after consultation with other members of the committee, can see his way clear to accept it.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I have consulted with gentlemen who are vitally interested in this proposition, and they feel that making it necessary for the President to issue a proclamation——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Secretary of Agriculture——

Mr. LEVER. For the Secretary of Agriculture to issue a proclamation, conditioned upon his investigation of the facts, will throw around the operation so much red tape as to delay the effectiveness of it, and for that reason I shall feel constrained to vote against it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then, Mr. Chairman, while I deeply regret that the chairman of the committee and the members of the committee can not see the way clear to make the passage easy by accepting it and approving of it, I shall have to appeal to the Committee of the Whole to consider it very carefully and in the hope that they will consider it favorably. The purpose of the bill, as it has been pressed upon us from the beginning to the end, was to protect the Nation's war interests. Is that true or is it not true? Is the war being used as a cloak here to put over a proposition to which no 10 men in this House would agree except placed upon that basis? Do we mean that, which has been laid as the basis of this bill from the beginning until now?

Mr. BURNETT. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. BURNETT. Is it not a fact that the chairman of the committee himself stated from the outset that he would not support it except as a war measure?

Mr. LEVER. I do not know as I stated it, but I will state it now.

Mr. BURNETT. You did before.

Mr. LEVER. But, practically, saying so does not make it any more so.

Mr. BURNETT. It does not make it any less so.

Mr. RUBEY. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee this, as I realize he is in earnest in this matter: How long do you think it would take the Secretary of Agriculture to make such investigation as he might feel obligated to make under this amendment before he would be prepared to issue his proclamation? And at this time, if we are going to use it at all, we will need it within the next 10 days.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I take it that he will have abundant time to make that investigation before this bill will pass the Senate. I venture to say that.

Mr. RUBEY. Will he have authority to make it?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. He will be thinking about it.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. If he keeps in touch with the situation as much as other men will he not be able soon to determine the necessity of this legislation?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not know, but I think he ought to be required to make the investigation.

Mr. GORDON. Is there a single legitimate purpose provided for in this bill that was not included in the legislation brought in here by the Committee on Agriculture a year ago?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, I would rather not answer that question for reasons that the gentleman will understand. Yes; I will answer it. I think the bill that was brought in covered all the necessities.

Mr. GORDON. Both purposes?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes. Now, I have answered the question.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will prevail. I think it ought to prevail. If it does not prevail, then we have gone into the realm of——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON], as to whether or not there was any precedent for the issuance of a proclamation addressed to the people of the United States——

Mr. LONDON. By a member of the Cabinet——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; by a member of the Cabinet, the gentleman from Tennessee replied that he knew of none. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he does not think it would probably establish a very dangerous precedent to authorize a Cabinet officer to issue a proclamation? If the power is granted at all, should it not apply to the power of the President of the United States instead of a Cabinet officer?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, the answer which I made to the inquiry of the gentleman from New York was that I did not remember whether there was a precedent, and I do not; but inasmuch as the entire operation of the machinery in this bill is placed in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, and inasmuch as the President has nothing to do in any sort of way under the terms of the act with its operation, it occurred to me as being proper to permit that official who had the authority under the terms of the act to issue the proclamation. But I would not object to making it incumbent on the President to make the proclamation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does not the gentleman think that it would be wiser for the President to make the proclamation?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to close the debate now while anybody wants to speak, but I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 35 minutes. I wonder if gentlemen who have asked for five minutes would not be content with three minutes?

Mr. BUTLER. Two for five.

Mr. GORDON. I would like to have five minutes. I have not yet spoken on the bill.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, make it 35 minutes, the Chair to control the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto conclude in 35 minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I desire to move at the proper time to strike out this paragraph. I would like to have five minutes on that.

Mr. LEVER. I presume the gentleman can get five minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would not the gentleman's request preclude that?

Mr. LEVER. No; I would not think so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Would it not be better to give each Member speaking five minutes?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to move to close the debate. I have not done it in the consideration of this bill, but I have almost reached the point of physical exhaustion on this floor here for the last three or four days. While I have tried to be liberal, I do not want to be forced to move to close debate, but I shall feel, unless gentlemen are a little bit liberal with me and the committee in charge of this bill, that I shall have to do it. I will modify my request, Mr. Chairman, by asking unanimous consent that the debate on this section and all amendments thereto shall close in 40 minutes, to be controlled by the Chair.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded, which is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. LEVER. Then I move——

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman moves, I will make the point of no quorum.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts is only trying to limit these speeches to three minutes. I wonder if the gentlemen who have requested time will not be willing to accept that proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be concluded in 40 minutes, and that the gentlemen speaking during that 40 minutes be limited to 3 minutes each. Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I suggest the substitute, that all debate on the bill and all amendments be concluded in 40 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman that this is the last section of the bill.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Well, people may want to strike out the last word, and all that.

Mr. LEVER. Nobody is objecting.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I withdraw my suggestion.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 40 minutes, the Chair to control the time, and that the speeches be limited to 3 minutes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman can not include in his motion.

Mr. LEVER. Then I withdraw that part of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 40 minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PRICE] is recognized.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Agriculture says in its report that they recognize that the farm-labor situation is the most serious one to the farmers of this Nation. I think that any man who comes from an agricultural section of this country will agree to that proposition. I know that in my own district it is an acute problem, and I want to say that something will have to be done to cure it. While the legislation proposed in this bill is not ideal, yet I propose to support it, because it may, perhaps, accomplish something.

The chairman of the committee stated here yesterday, in answer to a question, that if this bill were passed it would be likely to produce, according to their calculations, some 30,000,000 additional bushels of wheat in this country, and he warned this committee that the time might come when the bread line might be interrupted between this country and France, and where this prospective 30,000,000 bushels might be the deciding factor in this war.

With that idea in mind, Mr. Chairman, it becomes a serious matter to vote against this proposition, however much we may dislike this sort of legislation. The fact is that 1 000,000 bushels of grain might be the deciding factor in this war, and I shall therefore support this bill.

The main point I wish to discuss, however, is farm labor. I saw a statement the other day from Prof. Wood, president of the agricultural college of my State, in which he said that, according to the best estimates that they could get, the farms of Maryland are short 9,000 men. Assuming that one skilled farm laborer can cultivate 20 acres of ground, that would mean 180,000 acres of productive land in my State that will not be tilled. I presume these same conditions exist all over the country. The causes of this are various. One is that the munition factories and governmental activities generally have taken great numbers of farm laborers at high wages away from the farms. Another is that the draft law has operated to the detriment of the farm and has resulted in many places in stripping the farms of labor. It is proposed that another draft of farm laborers be made. I want to say to you that the farms of this Nation can not stand another drain by the draft or from any other cause, if you are to produce the food that is to win this war.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRICE. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. As it is important to have something to eat at home and abroad, does not my friend believe that the farm laborers will be cared for under existing law, or under a law to be passed before the next draft?

Mr. PRICE. I hope so; but as a matter of fact it has not been done, and it is recognized that there is a defect in that respect, because the War Department has recently modified its rules and regulations to the extent that they are placing farm laborers at the bottom of class 1. I do not believe they ought to be in class 1 at all, and I propose to offer a joint resolution, to bring this matter before Congress, placing farm laborers in a deferred classification.

Mr. BLAND. Does not the gentleman know that we passed a furlough bill for the benefit of farm laborers, to enable those who are in camps and cantonments to go home and help in putting in the crop?

Mr. PRICE. I do.

Mr. BLAND. Does the gentleman know whether it is going to be put in operation or not?

Mr. PRICE. That is simply a recognition that there is something wrong with the system. I fear that before this law can be put into full operation another call will be made further depleting the farms of their labor and the farmers already in camps be sent away, thereby rendering this furlough law of little value. It is evident, therefore, that some additional law or regulations must be passed to meet this very serious situation. I therefore propose to introduce to-day a resolution that will, in my opinion, largely cure the existing trouble should it be acted on favorably by this Congress.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that under the rules and regulations that the Provost Marshal General has adopted shipbuilders and those engaged in the shipbuilding industry are put into a deferred classification and, according to the testimony of Gen. Crowder, that has operated to the very great advantage of that industry.

Mr. PRICE. That is true, and the resolution that I have referred to is intended to treat farm labor in the same way, and I have no doubt will operate with success, the same as shipyard labor. I shall insert the text of the resolution in the RECORD, so that gentlemen may familiarize themselves with its provisions, and at the proper time I shall ask the Committee on Military Affairs to report it to this House for its consideration.

The resolution is as follows:

House Joint Resolution 272.

Joint resolution authorizing and directing the President of the United States to so amend the selective-service regulations as to place in a deferred classification all registrants who are bona fide farmers or farm laborers, including owners and managers of farms and overseers of farm operations and laborers regularly employed thereunder, and to formulate regulations for special "food-producing classification lists" by the local boards and prescribing that the classification of such registrant shall not be changed so long as he shall be engaged in such occupation, except that so long as he remains on the "food-producing classification list" he shall be regarded as not available for military service, and in all respects as though he stood classified in class 5.

Whereas the United States of America is now at war with the Imperial Government of Germany and her ally, Austria, for the successful prosecution of which we have pledged all the resources of the Nation; and
Whereas one of the chief and fundamental resources is the products of the farm; and
Whereas the magnitude of our war preparations has made such an unusual demand upon labor that farm laborers in large numbers have been induced by high wages to abandon their usual occupation on the farm; and
Whereas the operations of the selective-draft act as administered through the selective-service regulations has resulted in a further depletion of farm labor; and
Whereas further depletion of said labor will seriously affect the production of the farm which will prove disastrous to the successful prosecution of the war; and
Whereas the raising of food and the increased production thereof is absolutely necessary to the cause of human freedom to which we have pledged ourselves; and
Whereas the Food Administration is continually calling upon our people to further conserve food, as well as calling upon our farmers for increased production; and
Whereas our allies are constantly reminding us that more American farm products than heretofore supplied will be required to feed them, and our own large and continually increasing Army; and
Whereas the selective-service regulations has made especial provision for workers in shipyards while engaged in the building of ships, which for the successful prosecution of the war is next in importance to food itself, which regulations have resulted in an ample supply of labor for this purpose; and
Whereas we believe some special regulations regarding farm labor will bring equally as good results: Therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized and directed to so amend the selective-service regulations as to place in a deferred classification all registrants who are bona fide farmers or farm laborers, including owners and managers of farms and overseers of farm operations and laborers regularly employed thereunder, and that a special "food-producing classification list" of registrants shall be made by the local boards under such regulations as the President may prescribe, and the classification of such registrant shall not be changed so long as he shall be engaged in such occupation, except that so long as he remains on the "food-producing classification list" he shall be regarded as not available for military service, and in all respects as though he stood classified in class 5.

Mr. Chairman, the operation of the draft law has already taken 215,000 men from the farms of the Nation, which is 20 per cent of the total and more than the proper proportion, as less than 13 per cent of the total population of the country are farmers. It is therefore evident, Mr. Chairman, that the farm has contributed more than its proper share to the National Army already raised. In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, it has been estimated that 1,750,000 farmers have been induced by high wages to leave the farms to engage in munition manufacture and other war work, leaving the farms of the Nation already depleted of about 2,000,000 workers. If this estimate is correct, or approximately so, and this shortage can not be replaced, it means that 40,000,000 acres of productive land in America can not be cultivated, and are therefore eliminated from food production. This, too, at a time when we are called upon to feed about two-thirds of the world. Not only that, Mr. Chairman, but when to fail may mean the loss of the war, which means the destruction of all our dearly bought liberties, in fact the destruction of civilization itself. In less than one year of war we have already felt the necessity of food conservation and have in fact realized an actual shortage in some foods. Every day we are warned by the Food Administration of the necessity for cutting down our food supplies, and almost every day our governmental agencies are urging increased food production to make sure the feeding of our soldiers and sailors and our people as well as the feeding of the armies and peoples of our associates in the war.

In the face of these conditions we find large numbers of farm laborers included in class 1 A of the draft uncertain as to the date of their call to service, which further embarrasses the farm operations of the country. This embarrassment and uncertainty should be removed and removed immediately. I have made an investigation in my own district and find from the figures submitted by the local boards that just about 25 per cent of the registrants classified in class 1 are farmers. I presume this is a fair index for the country at large. Should a call for another million be made, that would take another quarter million men from the farms, which in my judgment spells disaster and in all likelihood will be the direct cause of the interruption of the bread line between the storehouses of America and the battle fields of Europe. This is too serious a matter to trifle with or take any chances on, and I warn this House and the country now before it is too late. My mail is filled daily with complaints from farmers setting forth clearly the situation and its dangers, and I urge upon the Members of this House the wisdom—aye, the necessity—for the protection of the farmer in this labor crisis which also means the protection and perhaps the preservation of the Nation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "Secretary of Agriculture" where they appear in the amendment and insert the word "President."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not see the gentleman from Tennessee on the floor, but he stated to me that he would have no objection to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WALSH: Page 6, line 1, after the word "means," strike out the word "in" and insert "outside," and strike out the words "and elsewhere."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply provides that this money, for rent and the employment of labor, shall be expended outside the District of Columbia. I do not think this is a good time to bring more clerks and Government employees into the District or to spend more money for rents here. Furthermore, inasmuch as this work is to be carried on in the wheat-growing States, I submit that the Government can establish its headquarters, for instance, at Bozeman, Mont., where they have a great agricultural college, and the work can be more economically and more efficiently conducted in that part of the country, and the administrative officers can keep in touch with the Department of Agriculture here in Washington and carry on the work just as well as if we brought down a hundred or two clerks, messengers, stenographers, and assistant superintendents and put them here in Washington.

Mr. SEARS. I agree with much of what the gentleman has said, but the gentleman said this was going to be carried on only in certain States. I call attention of the House to the fact that the House amended that, and now we can supply seed wheat to sow anywhere.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I should like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman yields to me the remainder of his time.

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not yield his time.

Mr. GORDON. Does the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Does your amendment apply to the amendment that is pending?

Mr. WALSH. My amendment applies to the section.

Mr. GORDON. Then it is not in order at this time. I want to speak on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. WALSH. I have answered the gentleman's question. Now I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] for a question, and then I will yield the floor.

Mr. DEMPSEY. What the gentleman says seems to apply solely to the disposition of seed. It does not seem to apply to the mobilization of labor. For instance, his illustration as to headquarters, which he said could be established in Montana, would hardly apply to the mobilization of farm labor.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, no; and you could not mobilize farm labor from an office in the District of Columbia. That, I assume, will have to be done by agents, who will be sent out from the Department of Agriculture. It is unnecessary that they should establish headquarters here in Washington for that purpose. They can be sent out, and I believe are now being sent out by the Department of Labor and the Department of Agriculture, also. What I mean to accomplish by my amendment is to have the headquarters for the loaning of this money and the making of the arrangements to supply the seed at a place within the reach of the States where the aid is going to be given, and not to clutter up Washington with additional clerks, stenographers, and other employees and with the renting of other buildings. Let us keep some of them out there nearer to the scene of the action which the department is going to conduct.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Does not the gentleman believe that the purpose of his amendment could be accomplished better by changing the wording of it?

Mr. WALSH. In reply to the gentleman I do not think that any part of this $100,000 appropriated under this act will ever be used for the purpose of mobilizing labor, because I think that is already being done under the appropriation which the department now has, and that it can be conducted without disturbing this appropriation in any way whatever.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to all of the debate upon this bill. The impassioned argument of the chairman of the committee yesterday reminded me of a little story that appeared in Life a few months ago. It was an interview between a landlord and his chef. He called the chef in and says, "You cut the portions in half and I will double the prices, and we will win this war." [Laughter.]

That sums up in the practical effect of the argument of the chairman of the committee. "Why," he said, "you are threatened with the bread line, and there is a great necessity. Mr. Hoover has informed the committee that there is need for an increase in the production of wheat." That is wholly beside the question of the bill. The President's letter says that any necessary and proper legislation to increase the production of wheat ought to be enacted. I agree to that.

The object of this debate is to find out whether or not this legislation is practical and necessary, and whether or not it will accomplish the purpose. The legislation as reported by the committee was a mere scheme to give money to a lot of the "ragtag and bobtail" who do not have any money or credit enough in the community in which they live to borrow any. That is all there was to the bill. Every practical and sensible provision of the bill was included in the Agricultural bill a year ago. There was authority there to mobilize, as far as practicable, farm labor, and to sell seed to the farmers at cost for cash. That is as far as the Government ought to go. This going around and looking for somebody to loan money to for the Government, who can not get trusted where he is known, is disgraceful and will not accomplish anything. It is pandering to a lot of the "ragtag and bobtail" that have no credit—proposing to take Government money and loan it without security to fellows who can not borrow from anybody else, on the pretense that they are going to save us from starvation. [Applause.]

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. BAER. Does the gentleman consider that the shipyards and the war industries to which the Government is loaning money——

Mr. GORDON. Oh, we are not loaning any money to them without security, and there is the real point.

Mr. BAER. What kind of security? They have nothing but the "know how."

Mr. GORDON. No; they have plenty of land and other property—millions of dollars' worth.

Mr. SWITZER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. SWITZER. Under the provisions of the war-finance bill, does not the man have to bring a certificate that the banks will not loan him any money?

Mr. GORDON. That is a different thing. The war-finance bill is based upon a condition created by the Government itself in monopolizing the credits of the country by the sale of Government bonds, and there was a real necessity for that legislation. That legislation does not propose to give anybody anything.

Mr. BAER. It is the same way here.

Mr. GORDON. The only necessity for this legislation is that a lot of fellows who have not got any money or credit or character, who can not borrow any money from individuals, want to borrow it of the Government without security, and that is all there is to this bill. [Laughter and applause.] You have my opinion of the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the discussion on this bill for three or four days with a good deal of interest, and am very much surprised in many instances. Especially have I been surprised just now in listening to the remarks of my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON], speaking of those who will be the recipients of the benefits of this bill as the ragtail and bobtail of society and of the country.

I come from a State, while not mentioned in this bill as one entitled to the provisions of the bill, yet we raise a great deal of spring wheat in Colorado, and for the past 30 years I have been intimately and well acquainted with the farmers of that district.

The men who will make application for the provisions of the bill are the homestead farmers, and in my judgment they are men of very high character. Perhaps they may be unable to furnish the security required by banks to buy seed. They are high class in every respect. They are honest and patriotic citizens. They have been reduced by circumstances over which probably they had no control to the condition they now occupy, "that of homestead entrymen," builders of the great West.

Mr. VENABLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I will.

Mr. VENABLE. The theory of the bill is that these people who need this aid are not able to borrow $450, or any part thereof, in the local communities where they live. Hence it becomes necessary that the Government should extend to them credit without security. What is the reason that the people in the gentleman's district are in this condition that they are not able to borrow any money at all in the local community?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Let me answer that by saying that these people who will perhaps be the beneficiaries under this bill are residing on homesteads to which they have not secured title, and the only security they would be able to offer is that which is contemplated in this bill—a mortgage on their crop, a chattel mortgage which would require in that western country a very high rate of interest, which they ought not to be called upon to pay.

Mr. VENABLE. That is all based upon the property qualification. Why can not they get some loan on character?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. If there was a plethora of money in that country, as is true in portions of the country which are fully developed, money could be loaned at rates of interest that would probably take care of applicants for loans of that character. There are very large demands for money in the West and the banks are not always able to supply that demand where undoubted security is offered; hence the man who has little security or none to offer can not be or is not taken care of.

Mr. DILLON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Yes.

Mr. DILLON. Will the gentleman state what rate of interest these pioneers who have no title to real estate must pay?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Ten per cent, I will say, usually, and not infrequently 12 to 15 per cent on chattel security. At two different times during my residence in Colorado I have contributed in raising money by subscription in order to furnish seed to homestead farmers. And I want to tell you that we never lost anything. If they were not able to repay the first year they repaid whenever they had a crop that would enable them to do so.

Mr. KEARNS. The gentleman says that they have to pay from 10 to 12 or 15 per cent interest out there?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. At least that upon chattel security.

Mr. KEARNS. If that condition exists in the gentleman's State, ought it not to be remedied?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. It is a condition that will regulate very largely itself with development, but when there is a large demand for money, as there is in the development of a new country, it is only reasonable that a high rate of interest should obtain. I am very much interested also in the labor provision of this bill. How labor can be procured I am unable to say, but the demand for labor, if we are going to increase the crop production as we should in that country, needs very careful consideration by this House.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman, it has been stated many times during this debate that it is proposed to have the Government extend its credit without security. There is nothing to justify that statement. The Government is to be secured by every grain of wheat produced by the man who gets the money, and, in addition to that, the Government is to be protected by a criminal provision in the bill under which the borrowers could be sent to the penitentiary if he uses the money or grain furnished for any purpose other than that for which loaned, or sells one grain of the wheat raised before the Government is fully repaid. Let us see if this is not a fair deal for the Government. Out in the northwestern country there are farmers who know how to raise wheat. In that territory the production of wheat is more or less hazardous. They had a drought in some of those sections last year. Many of these farmers are homesteaders. They have no established personal credit. The banks can not supply their necessities if they did have. The Government says to these farmers, "We are engaged in fighting a great war, we need more wheat." Gentlemen, this legislation is not for the benefit of these people who live in that territory; it is for the benefit of the Nation. Under the provisions of this bill the Government says to those people who live up there, "We recognize that the Government must have more wheat than would probably be needed under ordinary conditions, more than the land in prospect of wheat production will probably produce. The Government wants you to do your best to help out this situation. The Government knows you have got to take a chance, and the Government of the United States is willing to bet the cost of the seed wheat that you can raise a crop of spring wheat if you will bet your labor and the use of your land. Do this, and let us see if we can not raise more wheat in America than we now propose to do." Gentlemen, that is all there is to this bill. [Applause.] Just a plain practical trade between a Nation needing a large wheat production and a lot of farmers who, if given a little help, can help meet that need.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. The necessity for this legislation is based upon the fact that these men have failed to make a crop on these lands, and if that is true, is it not a bad business proposition in times like these, when dollars are so much needed, to gamble $7,500,000 of the people's money?

Mr. SUMNERS. Let me answer you. The year before last I had a piece of overflow land that I wanted my tenant to plant some wheat on. Wheat was high, labor was high, and the man could not afford to take the whole risk. I told him that I would risk the price of the grain, the seed wheat, if he would risk the labor. By my taking a part of the hazard he was able to take the rest of it and we won. That is this proposition. [Applause.] These men are on their own homes. They will try to raise wheat there or not at all. I understand that that territory is fairly dependable; and if it were not for the fact that the country is new, that it had a drought last year, and wheat is so high now these people would need no help perhaps. But I repeat, gentlemen, this bill is not for those people. It is for the Nation.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. In this case, instead of asking the landlord to make the gamble, you are asking the Government to take the tax money of the people and gamble it.

Mr. SUMNERS. The Government of the United States is more interested than the landlord is. Besides, many of these people are on their own new-made homes. The Government of the United States, if it be a gamble, is gambling for its life. That is what some of my colleagues from the South do not seem to appreciate. The Nation's life is at stake; and the Nation says, "We must have more bread; we have utilized certain territory for wheat, but we do not have enough; we have got to go out into the territory where men take chances, even where men take big chances." Up in the Northwest, farmers went up against a drought last year and they have not got the money this year to buy seed and make a crop; they can not borrow the money. The United States will put up the wheat if they will go out there on those plains of the West, plant a crop, and harvest it. The Government then says to them: "This is a straight business deal. This is no something-for-nothing proposition. If you sell one grain of that wheat before paying the money you owe the Government, you will be put in the penitentiary." When a man mortgages his grain and his labor in that fashion, you gentlemen of the opposition get up here and talk about the Government having no security. These men hypothecate their liberty and put a mortgage upon their good names as a guaranty of integrity of transaction. They put a mortgage upon every grain of wheat that comes from their honest toil, and yet you talk about no security and denounce this as a paternalistic and socialistic proposition. Where are you going to get the wheat which we have got to have? I want results.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS. No; I can not; my time has almost expired. Just the other day we set aside $500,000,000 to be loaned to private concerns, and one of the conditions provided in the act was that no concern could get any of that money unless its credit was below that of the best commercial institutions. You gentlemen of the opposition practically all voted for that bill. You swallowed it down and did not bat an eye. But when a man who is out in the fields of this country and is willing to help this country win a great war comes here and asks for a little pittance, pledges the use of his land and the strength of his body to repay the debt, you talk about socialism. Mortgages every ounce of the energy in his body from the beginning of the planting season until the thrasher ceases its hum, and you talk about no security! What do you want? He is giving you the best security on earth.

We take some chance; but we take a bigger chance if we refuse to take this chance. I am willing to take the chance with the money, but I am not willing to take the chance of not doing the best I can to insure the maximum of effort to produce the grain necessary to sustain the morale of our people during the trying times upon which we are just entering and to sustain our boys on the other side who to-day, while we debate this bill, are receiving their baptism of fire. [Applause.]

Mr. MORGAN. There is one matter that I presented yesterday that I desire to call attention to again. Section 1 of the bill limits loans to the crop of 1918. The wheat planted this fall—in 1918—will be the crop of 1919. Hence no loans could be made to aid farmers planting wheat this year. I insist that the bill should be amended so as to apply to wheat sowed or crops planted in 1918. To say that we will aid the farmers who sow wheat in the spring of 1918 and not aid those who sow wheat in the fall of 1918, to my mind, is an unjustifiable discrimination. But beyond this, the object is increased wheat production. We should provide for this increased production in both the spring-wheat area and the fall-wheat area. Now, why not amend this bill so it would apply to crops planted in 1918? Certainly the spring-wheat area is very limited. If this bill is worth anything at all, it ought to include the contingency of what might happen this fall. So I appeal to gentlemen from the State of Kansas, to gentlemen from northwestern Texas, to gentlemen from eastern Colorado, to gentlemen from Nebraska, to my colleagues from Oklahoma, and to all of you, to permit this bill to be amended so that it will apply to crops planted in 1918. Do not discriminate against three-fourths of the semiarid regions where one-third of the wheat of the United States is produced from year to year. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to the fact that this amendment is offered at the last moment by an enemy of this bill, and is being supported by men who have said in this debate that this bill would do no good, because it was to be passed so late. It was said there was no use——

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I have but four minutes. That it was no use to pass this bill because it will become a law so late it can not be put into operation until this planting season is over. By offering this amendment it means the adding of red tape to the administration of the bill, with consequent delays, and if those gentlemen were right when they were talking yesterday, that this bill ought not to be passed and the House ought not to take up its time to consider it, because it was too late, then to-day, if they are consistent, they ought not to be in favor of this amendment, which will delay the administration of the act.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is not referring to the amendment offered by myself?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I am talking of the one offered by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What was the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. STAFFORD. To have the clerical work done outside of the city of Washington.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. That is silly, because there ought not to be any unnecessary restrictions on the administration of this bill. Action by the department will have to be quick if the law is to get seed where it is needed before the planting season is over.

Mr. WALSH. It is right in the bill. They can do it, and I am compelling them to do it; so if it is silly, the committee brought the silliness into it.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. There is nothing in this bill to compel the Secretary of Agriculture to take the administrative force to any particular point of the United States, and ought not to be. It is true that the Department of Agriculture is working on a plan to put this bill in operation. The Secretary has done just as much as he possibly can in that direction, and just as soon as this bill is passed I do not doubt it will be put into operation very quickly if we do not load it down with red tape; if we do not load it down by passing amendments like the one offered by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee—offered by a man who has shown he is unfriendly to this bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman favor the bill independent of its war character?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. There is no need of raising that question, because there is a war on now and everybody recognizes there is a war necessity for this bill. The author of this bill would never have asked for its consideration had it not been for the need of an increased food supply for our people and for the armies of the United States, France, England, and Italy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. Efforts have been made to overload the bill with amendments, and some of doubtful value have been added during this consideration of the measure. I am supporting the bill for the reasons ably set forth by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] and others. Rather than continued amendments I would have preferred to see the bill tightened to its original purpose, and the section which appropriates $2,500,000 for an Agricultural Department bureau of labor stricken out. However, I did not press such an amendment, as I desired not to delay the bill. In my opinion the new bureau will overlap and run counter to the Department of Labor's Bureau of Labor, produce confusion, unnecessary competition, and additional governmental expenditure. But that section has been retained, so detailed discussion of it now is unnecessary. I have opposed the various amendments, and voted to keep the bill alive when the southern cyclone suddenly sprang up against it and nearly swamped it the other night. However, one amendment is pending that I think might be adopted, the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts. For some time I have thought that additional side-line governmental activities in connection with the war should not be brought into the overcrowded city of Washington. I note that the Shipping Board a while back seriously contemplated moving to Philadelphia, with its thousands of office employees. It should have moved there. This seed-purchase bureau might be in Chicago or Minneapolis rather than here. But I presume that the headquarters of this new activity will prefer to be in Washington, because here we find the headquarters of the new weekly Government publication known as the Seed Distributor, or something like that, a 5 or 6 weeks' old "war baby" published in the interests of——

Mr. SWITZER. Of the borrower?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Not the interests of the borrower. And then there is the United States Employment Service Bulletin—a weekly newspaper. It is another "war baby" and only 8 weeks' old. And there is the Emergency Fleet News—also a "war baby" and about 4 weeks' old. There seems to be dozens of these departmental newspapers being printed by the Government nowadays, when everything is congested, sent out under departmental frank, literally jamming the mails, and all proclaiming themselves house organs, and nearly all of them useless.

Mr. WALSH. When the gentleman said "house organ," did he mean Col. House?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, no; but, of course, there is the Official Bulletin, which is "higher up" than these "seed" publications. I mean house organs in the sense that department stores use the phrase. These Government newspapers call themselves house organs, but in reality they are departmental organs.

I sincerely hope that the liberal sum mentioned in this bill for printing and the like in connection with the putting out of seed in the stricken districts of the Northwest will not, any part of it, be used for another governmental newspaper. Even though the wheat situation entitles this bill to come in as a war necessity, these governmental weekly newspapers are simply masquerading when they pretend that they are necessary to the conduct of the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I hope this amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] will be adopted. All the time during consideration of this bill in the Committee on Agriculture it was urged that it was a war measure. It was put at no time on any other ground. It was urged that it was necessary to pass this bill at this time because of conditions existing by reason of the war, and it was conceded, eliminating that view, in normal times there would be no justification for it. Not only was it urged all the time before the committee as a justification and a reason for passing this bill that it was a war measure, but it has been continuously stated and emphasized upon the floor of the House from the commencement of this discussion up to this present moment that it is a war measure, and that was the justification for passing the bill.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I regret, my friend, I have not the time.

So if that is true, I see no reason on earth why it should not be stated in the bill itself. In all other war measures that have been passed statements, though not exactly similar to this, but sufficient to put them upon war grounds, have been included. Now, the delay which might occur by this provision if put in the bill is not well founded, it seems to me, for the reason that this matter has been under consideration for a considerable length of time. It is stated that arrangements have been made already to put it into effect immediately. If arrangements have been made, if the investigation has already taken place, then no delay can possibly occur. The President can get the facts promptly and act without delay. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Always, to the chairman of our committee, with pleasure.

Mr. LEVER. After a reconsideration of the Garrett amendment, I think I am in position to say that, as far as the chairman of the committee is concerned, he has no objection to it.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I am very much gratified to hear the chairman of the committee make that statement. I call the attention of the House to the fact that now the chairman of the committee [Mr. LEVER] states that upon reconsideration of the amendment, and realizing the force and effect of it, so far as he personally is concerned he will not object to it, but will vote for it. The chairman of the committee being for the amendment, I hope there will be no serious opposition to it. So far as I am concerned, I am always in favor of stating the facts and the truth, no matter what it is, in bills as well as everywhere else, and if it is the fact and it is the truth that the foundation, the reason, and justification for the passage of this bill is that it is a war measure, then there should be no objection on the part of anybody to stating the truth in the face of the bill and putting it upon that ground. I know the adoption of this amendment will bring considerable support to the bill which it does not have now. Its adoption and incorporation into the bill will promptly remove considerable determined opposition to it, and therefore I urge upon the friends of the bill the importance of this amendment and assure them that its adoption will be very beneficial. I hope the amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I am not in favor of the amendment, because it would involve delay that ought not to be made possible. This bill should be passed at once, and the Secretary, without a moment's delay, must enter upon the execution of it, if it is to be of any effect whatever. I am opposed to the amendment for the further reason that it makes the execution of the law depend upon the proclamation of the Secretary of Agriculture. The Congress of the United States, if this bill becomes a law, will itself have declared that it is a war measure, and that it is wise and necessary during the existing emergency, and Congress does not need to wait for the word of the Secretary of Agriculture or any other official. The Congress knows enough itself to determine some of these things. Why should we delegate authority to one after another of the executive officers? Why, one watching legislation, as time goes on, sees bill after bill passed, law after law enacted, to be executed "in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture," the "Secretary of the Interior," the "Secretary of War," and so forth. Is Congress losing its power to think and act for itself? We have considered this measure day after day, and we know as much about it as does the Secretary of Agriculture. Everyone who has spoken of it has said that this would never have been suggested but for the war emergency, the need of additional supply of wheat because of the war. We know that. We have declared it. The passage of this act declares it. We do not need to have the Secretary of Agriculture or anyone else declare it and issue a proclamation to that effect.

I trust the House will retain a little bit of its independence and pass this law without referring it to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. In any of these other bills that have been passed as war measure has there been any such an amendment.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Sometimes, I think, but not often.

Mr. LITTLE. The President has announced, with many of them, that they were war measures?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. We have declared them war measures, and we have not left it to be determined by an executive officer whether we were right or wrong in so declaring. And I say that with respect for the Secretary of Agriculture, one of the great men of this administration, an official for whom I have the highest regard. I do not wish Congress to humiliate itself by "passing the buck" to the Secretary of Agriculture or anybody else.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman knows the amendment has been amended as now to give that power to the President of the United States?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The Congress is abundantly able to think for itself, and ought to do so in some of these matters, and I object to an amendment of that kind in any form.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Gentlemen, I want to say a word in regard to this legislation. I do not know that I can inform you any on the matter, but if there is any kind of legislation that I ought to be posted on it is legislation of this kind.

I spent 20 years in buying from and selling grain to farmers, and every spring every grain buyer was confronted with this difficulty of furnishing seed to the farmers. Now, my district, at the present time, I presume, is as independent as any district in this country would be as far as legislation of this character is concerned, and I presume it will not aid them in any way. I will say, however, that I believe that there are places in this country where this character of legislation will be of great assistance in producing more foodstuffs, and I expect at this time to vote for the measure, and I do it fully conscious that there are some things in the bill that probably ought not to be there. However, I believe, as a whole, the measure is meritorious and ought to receive the support of every Member of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, is there any time left?

The CHAIRMAN. There are six minutes remaining.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to take two minutes just simply to say that I am absolutely and unalterably opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. I do not think this is a time for this House to say that we are going to pass a bill; that we are going to vote for a bill; but that it shall not go into effect until the President of the United States issues a proclamation saying it is a war necessity. I have unbounded confidence in the President, and I have no objections to his issuing such a proclamation, but this is simply a plan devised by gentlemen here in order that they may put themselves in position where they can support the measure. This amendment is put in here in order to relieve them of any responsibility in voting for the bill. Now, that is all there is to it. That is all the amendment is brought in here for. It is proposed by a gentleman who is absolutely opposed to the bill; has been opposed to it, and is opposed to everything in the bill from beginning to end. He brings this proposition in here in order that those who are opposed to the bill may protect themselves. Put this amendment on here and then they can all answer "yea" when the roll is called on the final passage of the bill. Now, that is all there is to it, and I am unalterably opposed to it. I hope the House will vote it down. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, when the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] first came to my attention, I felt inclined to be opposed to it. But practically all of the legislation that we have had touching the war has been put upon the basis that it was a war measure in the act itself. I can see no objection to this amendment. I understand that the President must proclaim the necessity. I take it that, inasmuch as the President is in favor of the bill, he must have the facts upon which he forms his opinion. The Secretary of Agriculture has announced himself in favor of the bill, and he likewise must have the facts. So that I can not see that any special delay can be occasioned by writing this amendment into the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Is it not a fact that all the other legislation along this line has provided for proclamations by the President?

Mr. LEVER. That is very true. I said so in my opening statement. I am satisfied that the bill can not be hurt in its effectiveness by this amendment.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman how it will be helped?

Mr. LEVER. It will be helped in this way: There are a great many gentlemen in the House who feel that legislation of this kind ought to be predicated upon war necessity, and they would like to say so in direct terms.

Mr. FARR. Do you not think the common sense of those gentlemen ought to rescue them from a different conclusion?

Mr. LEVER. Well, you know there are common sense and uncommon sense, and we will have to deal with both of them.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. And it would take away the idea that it is a precedent for all time to come?

Mr. LEVER. Undoubtedly. This is only temporary legislation. It is not permanent legislation. I would not think for a second of voting for it in time of peace. I am going to vote for it because it is a war measure, and I will be glad to have the President of the United States so declare it to be and issue his proclamation.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. DECKER. Would it not be better for the House of Representatives to state on its own knowledge and information that it is a war measure? Why leave it to a coordinate branch of the administration to make a statement that we ourselves either believe or do not believe?

Mr. LEVER. My answer to that question is that the gentleman from Missouri has not offered an amendment to declare this a war measure. The proposition here is the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee to declare this a war measure. We are dealing with the proposition as we find it.

Mr. DECKER. I am heartily in favor of the bill, and support it on the ground that it is caused by the needs of the war, and I think that we are the ones that ought to state it in the bill.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. RUBEY. Has the gentleman forgotten that the title of the bill as reported by the committee was "A bill to provide for the national security and defense and further to assure an adequate supply of food"? Is not that so?

Mr. LEVER. That is so.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That would be entirely true in time of peace.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "ayes" appeared to have it.

Mr. RUBEY. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 78, noes 49.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 6, line 1, after the word "means," strike out the word "in" and insert the word "outside"; and strike out the words "and elsewhere."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORGAN: Page 6, after section 6, add the following as a new section:

"SEC. 7. That the provisions of this act shall be construed to apply to any crop planted during the year 1918."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LEVER. Under the rule, I understand, the committee automatically rises, and the previous question is ordered. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the committee do now rise and report back the bill to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. POU, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7795) to appropriate $50,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain and feed for live stock, to be supplied to farmers and stockmen, and to create boards in the respective States to assist in carrying out the provisions of this act, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on each amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands a separate vote on each amendment. The Clerk will report the first one.

Page 3, line 16, strike out the words "in spring-wheat areas."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 19.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk wil report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 18, after the word "of," and before the word "wheat," insert the word "corn."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 18, after the word "oats," insert the word "rye."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 25, after the word "eighteen," strike out all down to and including the word "therefore," on line 4 of page 4, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "No seed shall be furnished or supplied under the provisions of this act unless the Secretary of Agriculture shall first secure the payment of the price for the same by good and sufficient first lien on all seed so furnished and supplied and upon all crops to be produced therefrom."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 4, after the word "that," strike out the rest of the line; line 5, strike out "accomplished." After the word "shall," strike out "as soon as"; line 6, strike out "possible after the close of each calendar year"; lines 8 and 9, strike out the words "during such calendar year," and insert, in line 4, after the word "that," the words "at the opening of the next regular session of Congress," so that as amended the section will read:

"SEC. 4. That at the opening of the next regular session of Congress the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause to be made to the Congress a detailed report showing all proceedings and transactions under this act. Such report shall, in addition to other matters, contain a statement of all persons employed, the salary or compensation of each, the aggregate amount of loans, advances, or sales, and the total amount thereof unpaid, and all receipts and disbursements under this act. All moneys collected by the United States under this act shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 102, noes 29.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-six Members present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that section 4 of the bill as it now stands may be read for the information of the House, if that may interrupt the roll call. It is very short.

The SPEAKER. The fact has been ascertained that there is no quorum present, and you can not turn a wheel until you get one.

Mr. WINGO. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. We vote on the amendment, do we not?

The SPEAKER. Yes; you vote on the amendment that was just read.

Mr. WINGO. Would it not be proper to read the language?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. After you ascertain that there is not a quorum present, you can not do anything until you get a quorum. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has just been read. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 184, nays 132; answered "present" 1, not voting 114, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RUBEY as a substitute for the Volstead amendment: Page 3, line 18, after the word "act," insert: "or shall use money or grain procured under the provisions of this act for a purpose different from that for which the same shall have been obtained, or shall, without first repaying the indebtedness incurred for money or grain under this act, secrete or convert or suffer to be converted to his own use or to the use of another person the crop, or any part thereof, or any other property upon which such indebtedness is then secured by lien or mortgage."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee: Page 6, line 3, after the word "act," add the following:

"Provided, however, That no expenditures or advances shall be made under this act unless and until the President shall determine and by proclamation declare that the same is necessary for the more effectual prosecution of the war."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DILLON) there were 115 ayes and 78 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman on the committee?

Mr. MORGAN. I am not.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. MORGAN. I am not.

The SPEAKER. Is there any gentleman opposed to the bill who wants to make a motion to recommit?

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill with instructions to strike out section 2.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RAGSDALE moves to recommit the bill with instructions to strike out section 2 of the bill.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAGSDALE) there were 55 ayes and 197 noes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The question on ordering the yeas was taken; and the Speaker announced that 25 Members had risen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays were refused.

So the motion to recommit was lost.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. LEVER. On that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 250, nays 67, answered "present" 4, not voting 110, as follows:

Mr. VAN DYKE with Mr. POWERS.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, on the first call of the roll I voted "nay." On account of a letter that I have seen from the President I desire to change my vote from "nay" to "yea."

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to be recorded "yea."

The SPEAKER. Was the lady in the Hall listening when her name was called?

Miss RANKIN. No.

The SPEAKER. The lady does not bring herself within the rule.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. Would a person who was in the Hall but who did not hear the name called be entitled to answer "present"?

The SPEAKER. Oh, yes. It is a part of the duty to get a quorum here, and the Chair has the right to count Miss RANKIN present.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the national security and defense and further to assure an adequate supply of food, by authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to contract with farmers in certain areas for the production of grain through advances, loans, and otherwise, and by providing for the voluntary mobilization of farm labor, and for other purposes."

On motion of Mr. LEVER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on March 29, 1918, approved and signed joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 154. Joint resolution authorizing the erection of a memorial in Washington to the memory and in honor of the members of the various orders of sisters who gave their services as nurses on battle fields, in hospitals, and on floating hospitals during the Civil War;

S. 3129. An act to provide for the disposition of the effects of deceased persons in the naval service;

S. 3199. An act to amend section 1570 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

S. 3445. An act to authorize the payment of gun pointers and gun captains while temporarily absent from their regular stations, and for other purposes;

S. 1546. An act to permit the use of certain refined products of petroleum as stores on steam vessels carrying passengers; and

S. 3689. An act authorizing the Postmaster General to cancel or readjust the screen-wagon contract of H. H. Hogan at Kansas City, Mo.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 3528. An act to suspend for the period of the present war sections 45, 46, and 56 of an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 3693. An act to prescribe the personnel of the Army Nurse Corps, the qualifications for appointment, and the method of appointment therein, the pay, allowances, and leave of absence of members of said corps, and the conditions under which they may be retired; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 3736. An act to provide for the payment of six months' pay to the widow, children, or other designated dependent relative of any officer or enlisted man of the Regular Army whose death results from wounds or disease not the result of his own misconduct; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 3803. An act authorizing the President during the existing emergency to sell supplies, materials, equipment, or other property heretofore or hereafter purchased, acquired, or manufactured by the United States in connection with or incidental to the prosecution of the war; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 3863. An act to provide quarters or commutation thereof to commissioned officers in certain cases; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 3980. An act to prevent interference with the use of homing pigeons by the United States, to provide a penalty for such interference, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 3982. An act to suspend certain restrictions on the purchase and distribution of military stores and supplies, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. GALLIVAN was granted leave of absence for one week, on account of important business.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 9054, an act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma objects.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman from Oklahoma reserve the right to object, for an explanation? I hope he will reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma objects.

HOUSING FOR WAR NEEDS.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, I have been directed by the Committee on Rules to present a favorable report on House resolution 265, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 265.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 10265, entitled "A bill to authorize the Secretary of Labor to provide housing, local transportation, and other community facilities for war needs"; that there shall be not to exceed two hours of general debate, to be divided equally between those supporting and those opposing the bill; that at the conclusion of general debate the bill shall be considered under the five-minute rule for amendments, and after the bill shall have been perfected in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the same shall be reported to the House with such amendments and recommendations as the Committee of the Whole may make, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit the bill.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. WALSH. To propound a parliamentary inquiry as to whether or not the adoption of this rule would make the measure reported in order under it a continuing order.

The SPEAKER. No; it would not. It is not a continuing order.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this bill—House bill 10265—is a bill providing housing accommodations for industrial workers engaged principally in munition plants and in plants directly connected with the manufacture of war supplies. I will state to the House that this bill has had a rather full career before committees of this House. In the first place, the bill was referred to the Committee on Labor of the House, which held extended hearings on the bill. My information is that it was practically the unanimous opinion of the Committee on Labor that the bill should be favorably reported, but before the Committee on Labor reported the bill the House changed the reference of the bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which I have the honor to be a member, held extended hearings on this measure, and it is the unanimous opinion—I believe I state it correctly—of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that this measure should be speedily enacted into law. Then the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds directed the chairman of its committee to come before the Committee on Rules and ask for a rule to expedite the passage of the bill. The Committee on Rules, contrary to its usual custom, held extended hearings on the merits of the bill. Gentlemen connected with the Department of Labor and others connected with war industries appeared before the Committee on Rules, so I can say to the House that this measure has had extended hearings before three committees of the House, namely, the Committee on Labor, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and the Committee on Rules, and it is, I believe, the unanimous opinion of all of those committees that this bill is now worthy of immediate consideration, and for that reason I sincerely hope that the House will give it immediate consideration by the adoption of the rule. It is not my intention to go into the merits of the bill at this time, because it is only my business and my purpose to recite these facts, so that the House may adopt the rule, and then give the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds an opportunity to present the real reasons as to why this bill should be enacted into law. However, it might not be amiss at this time to read to the House one or two sections of the report from the Committee on Rules.

The main object of the bill is to provide, as its title indicates, for the housing of industrial workers who are engaged in industries connected with and essential to the national defense during the continuation of the existing war, and the committee desires to express the opinion that the only justification for the proposed legislation is the condition confronting our country as shown in the hearings.

And I will state in this connection that the bill itself only applies to conditions existing during the actual war in which the country is now engaged.

Mr. SHERWOOD. How much does this bill provide?

Mr. CANTRILL. I will answer the gentleman as soon as I read this section:

This investigation disclosed an alarming condition. It was ascertained that good, skilled, competent workers could be had, but that in many cases houses could not be had, and therefore this vitally necessary work could not be performed as speedily as the exigencies of the situation demanded. Private capital could not, or would not, build on a scale to meet the demand, and therefore it became a governmental problem to house the labor which is absolutely necessary for the full development of our resources to successfully deal with the emergency confronting us.

In answer to the gentleman from Ohio I will say that the bill originally provided for $50,000,000 to build homes for industrial workers in many parts of the United States. Those places and localities will be pointed out in the debate by members of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, however, since this rule was reported from the Committee on Rules, has decided to offer an amendment to the bill from the floor adding $10,000,000 to meet housing conditions as they apply to the District of Columbia, making it $10,000,000 for the District of Columbia alone and $50,000,000 for the country at large.

In this connection also permit me to say that England was confronted with exactly the same situation which now confronts this country in the housing of our industrial workers, and England up to this time has appropriated and spent over $700,000,000 to house the industrial workers in her munition plants. And I want to be very frank with the House and state this, that this $60,000,000 is, in the opinion of the committee and the experts who will have the matter in charge representing the Government, but a starter on this proposition if we are to successfully meet the conditions that we will be confronted with probably during the next few years of the war. But there is an absolute demand now for about $60,000,000 in different parts of the country to provide houses for workers to live in who operate these plants. The Government has appropriated money for the plants, they have been built, the men can be procured, but there is absolutely no place for them to live in order to operate the plants. And I submit to the common sense of this Congress that it is utterly useless and worthless expenditure of money to build plants for the manufacture of munitions and war supplies unless homes can be provided in which men can live who make those supplies. [Applause.] One is as important as the other. And with the information that the Committee on Rules and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have, and I happen to be a member of both committees, and in two instances have heard this testimony in detail, it is an immediate, absolute war measure, and it is the duty of the American Congress to immediately pass this bill and provide this relief. I state this fact in order that the committee, I hope, will adopt the rule and give us a chance through the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to present the detailed facts to the House for final action.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield before he leaves the floor?

Mr. CANTRILL. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. I notice in referring to the bill the gentleman spoke about munition factories. Is it intended that this will also meet the demand for housing facilities in the shipyards?

Mr. CANTRILL. No, I will state to the gentleman. It is brought out in the hearings; and I would go into it more in detail, but the gentleman will understand that under the previous question I have but 20 minutes, and I will yield other parts of that time to the other members of the committee. But I am satisfied that the gentleman will get the full detailed information as to the exact points in the country where it is proposed to spend this money and the direct purposes for which it is to be spent. In a general way, however, I will answer the gentleman by saying that this money is not intended to look after the proposition coming directly under the control of the United States Shipping Board. It is principally for munition plants and for finishing plants situated in different parts of the country for munition supplies, like aeroplanes and two or three other things, which absolutely have to be made and made speedily.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will not my colleague state that the principal argument, the concluding argument, for it before the Committee on Rules was by the Shipping Board of the necessity for housing at Hog Island?

Mr. CANTRILL. As I recall it, of course, there is that necessity; but, as I recall the hearings, in the main they would be scattered in different parts of the country to meet this immediate situation. The gentleman has time, and if his recollection is different from mine of course he can present those facts.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANTRILL. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. We passed a bill nearly 30 days ago appropriating $50,000,000 to provide housing in our shipbuilding plants.

Mr. CANTRILL. I reserve the balance of my time, and the gentleman from Kansas can use a portion of his time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I want to submit a few observations on the situation that confronts us. First of all, there is necessity for housing the employees at the shipbuilding plants and also to the munition and arms-construction plants. There is no question about the necessity for housing those employed in these industries. The most forceful argument made by the Committee on Rules for housing conditions was made in behalf of the Shipping Board. Now the Shipping Board has been provided for. Only $50,000,000 was asked for as a whole when they appeared before our committee some three weeks ago. Fifty million dollars has already been appropriated for housing conditions for that purpose. Now $60,000,000 is asked for housing conditions aside from the Shipping Board.

Mr. Speaker, the thing that strikes me forcibly is not the fact that we must have housing facilities, but the recklessness with which we appropriate millions upon millions of dollars with little consideration or question, and in connection with these appropriations create bureaus and commissions, multiplying them in the Government until Washington can no longer contain them all.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman from Kentucky indicated that this was intended to be only a starter. Can the gentleman give us an idea as to how much is contemplated here?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; I think I can give some idea of that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. He referred to England as having spent some $700,000,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If the war continues, it is estimated that this is but a very small starter; that we will be spending anywhere from $200,000,000 to $300,000,000 a year for these purposes. Now, to men who have come from the several walks of life and from separate parts of this country where industrial enterprises call together large numbers of men, and sometimes suddenly, it seems absolutely reckless to appropriate such enormous sums of money for these housing purposes when it is conceded that they are necessarily temporary.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I would rather proceed a little while before yielding.

Now, in the first place, let me show you the reckless manner in which those in authority reach their hands into the Public Treasury. We have an organization in the Treasury Department that is essentially the builder for the Government of the United States. The office of the Supervising Architect is equipped with men familiar with making contracts throughout the country and with builders. We have an architect's bureau there well equipped for preparing plans and specifications for any kind of housing facilities that the country requires.

Strange as it may seem, this bureau is entirely ignored, and the Secretary of Labor reaches out and grabs control of the expenditures of this money for housing facilities, and there is created a new bureau in the Department of Labor, which will cost for the first year the sum of $300,000.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague permit me to call attention to one section of the bill which provides that this office force in the Treasury Department shall be utilized for this purpose?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes. But the utilization contemplated there will not take the place of the $300,000 expenditure which it will cost to create the organization in the Department of Labor similar to that already existing in the Treasury Department, which within the last two years has built but few public buildings, so that this bureau in the Treasury Department is to-day on the pay roll and has its organization without anything to do. Yet it is proposed to create a new bureau at an original expense of $300,000 to do exactly what this bureau could be required to do. That is one of the indefensible provisions of this bill. It is a reckless expenditure of the money which is collected from the people of the United States by taxes, by bond sales and stamp sales, and in other ways for war purposes. It is indefensible that Congress at this time should consent to or permit such wicked waste of public money.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. I understand the gentleman to state that there is now in existence, fully organized, a housing bureau fully capable of meeting all the requirements of housing munition-plant workers and shipping-plant workers, and that this is the creation of another bureau which the gentleman says is entirely unnecessary. Is that the contention?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. My contention is that the organization now in the Treasury Department, under the control of one of the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, is fully equipped for taking charge of all the housing facilities that are required by the Government, and that by placing that work in the hands of that organization the expense of creating this new organization as proposed would be avoided—this new organization which will cost the Government over $300,000, as the testimony shows, in the Department of Labor.

Mr. TOWNER. Does the gentleman contemplate offering an amendment to take care of the situation?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. When the bill is under consideration for amendment that ought to be done. Now, I do not know what changes have taken place throughout the country since the rule was adopted that make it necessary not only to increase the amount of the authorization from $50,000,000 to $60,000,000, $50,000,000 having already been appropriated for housing laborers in the shipyards, unless it be that the $10,000,000 is necessary to provide housing facilities in Washington for the additional employees that will be required in the Department of Labor and in other departments of the Government that are brought here by reason of the reckless expenditure of these collossal sums of money for employees in Washington. Many of these employees are doing absolutely nothing to earn the salaries that are paid to them.

I stated a moment ago that the principal argument made in behalf of this appropriation of $50,000,000 before the Committee on Rules was the serious condition that confronted those engaged in ship construction, and the necessities at Hog Island was cited as an example. Now, we have provided $50,000,000 for housing laborers in the shipyards, and yet we are asked to authorize $60,000,000 for other purposes.

Gentlemen, pay day will come. We must take account as we go on of the manner in which we are authorizing the expenditure of these hundreds of millions of dollars. There is not a man on this floor who understands the necessity for spending this $110,000,000 for housing facilities throughout the country. It is all asked for in a lump sum; no details are given.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. Does not the gentleman think that there is a considerable number of activities in Washington that might just as well be housed elsewhere?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; that is true.

Mr. PLATT. For instance, the Food and Fuel Administrations. Why should they be here?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not know why the Food and Fuel Administrations should be here——

Mr. TREADWAY. Or anywhere else. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; or anywhere else. Neither has stimulated the production of either food or fuel—and the stimulation of production is the all-important thing in both food and fuel—as a matter of fact, the production of food and fuel are limited by the conduct of these two administrations.

Mr. ROBBINS. Does the gentleman think the Shipping Board ought to be in New York?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not care where these boards are. What I am objecting to is the creation of new bureaus. Every time millions of dollars are appropriated some department of the Government takes advantage of the fact that we are at war, and that we must have the authorization of millions to create new bureaus to provide places for other employees, for other men; I am not going to say that it is to provide places for other "deserving Democrats," because I believe all "deserving Democrats" have been provided for long ago. [Laughter.]

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. LUNN. A moment ago, in referring to the additional $10,000,000 asked for in the District of Columbia, the gentleman inferred it was possibly for the additional employees to be made necessary in the Labor Department. Am I right in drawing the conclusion that in the gentleman's opinion this bill is not necessary, and that there is no need of additional housing conditions in the District?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, no.

Mr. LUNN. That was the inference from the gentleman's argument.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But there is made by this bill a necessity for additional housing for the additional employees that are necessarily brought here by the provisions of this bill. Many employees are provided for in this bill who are absolutely unnecessary, and there are thousands of persons on the pay roll here to-day who ought to be at home. They are not needed here.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand that the gentleman does not take a position in antagonism to the housing proposition.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, no.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But that he does object to the creation of a new bureau which is to administer the fund that is to be expended?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Now, may I ask my colleague, in all good faith, just how he would provide for the administration of that $50,000,000 other than as is provided in the bill itself? There has to be some provision for administration.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. By the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, who already has an organization. He has been for years the builder for the United States Government when we expended money for public buildings.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is architectural, largely?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The questions with which this board will have to deal, if I understand the matter correctly, from the testimony given before the Committee on Rules—which I did not follow any more closely than did the gentleman from Kansas—are not so much questions of architecture, but matters of passing upon titles and the like.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. All that is provided for in the Treasury Department.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Does not the gentleman refer to the office of the Supervising Architect in the Treasury Department?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BRITTEN. And does not that particular office let contracts for millions of dollars worth of work every year?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Does it not supervise not only the architecture but the construction of the buildings, the title to the land, and everything that would come under this bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Absolutely everything that is provided for in this bill is now done by the Supervising Architect under the Treasury Department.

Mr. BRITTEN. And the gentleman also will recall that they are not building post offices now, and that this very capable organization could be used in this direction.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him just one question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Was the gentleman taking the position that the Supervising Architect's office passes on the title to the land on which public buildings are erected?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Supervising Architect refers the question of title to the United States district attorney's office in the jurisdiction in which the building is to be constructed, which this new organization will do.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; the gentleman is mistaken. It goes to the Attorney General, as the chief law officer of the Government, and the title is examined in that department.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The district attorney for the district of Florida will pass upon the titles in Florida.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Absolutely, but could not the Department of Labor make that same reference to the Attorney General?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Undoubtedly; or the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury could make it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Why, certainly he could make it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Without this $300,000 organization that is to be created immediately upon the passage of this bill in the Department of Labor. Three hundred thousand dollars is a large sum of money to be wasted in this way.

Mr. PLATT. Would the gentleman advocate an amendment to strike out in this bill the words "Secretary of Labor" and insert the words "Secretary of the Treasury"?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I would, in order to use the organization already in existence in that department and that is in every way qualified to do the work authorized by this bill. There is no more reason why the Secretary of Labor should put up these housing facilities than there is that he should put up the courthouses and the post-office buildings throughout the country.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Has the Committee on Rules considered the question whether some of these activities could not just as well be transferred to other places, like New York and Philadelphia, where housing facilities are plentiful?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There is no reason why that should not be done.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. They would have to have houses there, though.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But there are vacant houses in many cities throughout the country where enterprises are engaged in Government work. The thing to which I want to call the attention of the House again is the fact that on such small pretext advantage is taken of the opportunity to create new offices, new bureaus, employing literally thousands upon thousands of young men and women, bringing them out of the activities of civil life, many of them out of the productive walks of life, bringing them here to Washington where they have difficulty in finding places to live, where they will spend all their salaries trying to pay their running expenses, and will return to their homes at the close of the war, or when their term of service here is over, without anything to show for what they have done here except the experience, and who will have rendered absolutely useless service during the time they have been here. Many of them will have just that experience, with just that result.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman state about how much of this $10,000,000 will be required to build houses for the people who will be brought here as employees of this new bureau?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have not the slightest idea. The $10,000,000 have been added to the bill since the hearings were had before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and before the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CANTRILL. Let me correct my colleague there, please. The facts in the case are these, that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds at a formal meeting decided to offer this amendment from the floor, because I had the rule on the original bill and stated that since I was a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I would not offer the rule if they attempted to amend the bill by making this addition to it in the committee, but that they must offer the amendment from the floor, which would give opportunity for a full discussion.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It was since the rule was considered and hearings were had before the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CANTRILL. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has since decided to recommend the addition of $10,000,000 to the bill by an amendment from the floor.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Then what I said is true, that this has occurred since the hearing was had.

Mr. CANTRILL. But not added to the bill by the rule.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HICKS. How many men are employed in the Supervising Architect's office, and what are they doing at this time?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not know how many men are employed there. I know that the Secretary of the Treasury has forbidden building operations, and erecting buildings has been suspended throughout the country except in cases of the most extreme necessity.

Mr. HICKS. These men are still employed in the Supervising Architect's office?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. They are still employed in the Supervising Architect's office, and are provided for in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. HICKS. But they are not doing anything as far as the gentleman knows?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not know what they are doing. I know they are drawing their salaries.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. That very question was submitted to the subcommittee on the legislative bill in determining the force for the Supervising Architect for the next fiscal year. We examined the Supervising Architect. He went at length into the need of having an organization, to be ready at all times to meet these conditions, and although there was opposition in the subcommittee, the committee decided to give him the same organization that he has for the present fiscal year.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And he still has the same organization that he has had right along?

Mr. STAFFORD. The same organization as provided for in the current law.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I reserve the remainder of my time.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 8696) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 5351) providing for the disposal of certain lands in block 32 in the city of Port Angeles, State of Washington.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) authorizing the granting of insurance under the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended by the act approved October 6, 1917, on application by a person other than the person to be insured.

HOUSING FOR WAR NEEDS.

Mr. CANTRILL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU], chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I shall detain the House but for a minute. It has recently been stated to me by several of our colleagues, on both sides of the Chamber, that the Rules Committee were being criticized for bringing in, as I was told, so many rules. I would like to suggest to gentlemen that the criticism is not deserved, and that if there is anybody deserving of criticism it is not the Committee on Rules. We have only presented such resolutions as we felt were absolutely necessary. It is just as fair to criticize this Congress because the volume of business it must consider is so large.

When the chairman of a great committee comes before the Rules Committee with a resolution from his committee requesting that a special rule be reported, with the statement that there is no other way to bring the matter before the House, what is the Rules Committee to do? I suppose if we sat on the lid they would criticize us because we did not bring in the rule. It seems we are to be condemned if we do and condemned if we do not. The Rules Committee has over 100 resolutions pending at this time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And, if the gentleman will allow me, these resolutions are not introduced by the members of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. POU. Absolutely not; the gentleman is correct. During this session, according to my best recollection, the Rules Committee has not consumed three hours of debate in discussing all the resolutions it has presented to the House.

I am going to conclude by saying that the Committee on Rules is working as a unit, all of the members of the committee, those composing the majority and those composing the minority, are together. They are trying to make the committee an agency to do what it can to speed up the great task before us of winning this war. [Applause.] Because gentlemen insist on discussing measures at considerable length, and because gentlemen get weary hearing long discussions on the floor, I respectfully submit that criticism should not be directed against the Committee on Rules but against those gentlemen who, without adequate reason, are killing time.

If we are not to report resolutions providing for the consideration of measures supported and desired by the great majority of the House, one may well ask why you have a Committee on Rules. In any event, Mr. Speaker, the RECORD will show that our action has been sustained by a large majority in every instance except, possibly, one. Let those who kill time, those who would hinder and delay, if there be such, be criticized if they persist in pursuing such a course; but be careful and put the blame where it belongs. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 10265.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania in the chair.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object. The bill ought to be read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10265) to authorize the Secretary of Labor to provide housing, local transportation, and other community facilities for war needs.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Labor, for the purposes of providing housing, local transportation, and other community facilities for such industrial workers as are engaged in industries connected with and essential to the national defense, and their families, only during the continuation of the existing war, is hereby authorized and empowered, within the limits of the amounts herein authorized—

(a) To purchase, acquire by lease, construct, requisition, or acquire by condemnation or otherwise such houses, buildings, furnishings, improvements, local transportation, and other community facilities and parts thereof as he may determine to be necessary for the proper conduct of the existing war.

(b) To purchase, lease, requisition, or acquire by condemnation or otherwise any improved or unimproved land, or any right, title, or interest therein on which such houses, buildings, improvements, local transportation, and other community facilities, and parts thereof, have been or may be constructed.

(c) To equip, manage, maintain, alter, rent, lease, exchange, sell, and convey such lands, or any right, title, or interest therein, houses, buildings, improvements, local transportation, and other community facilities, parts thereof, and equipment upon such terms and conditions as he may determine.

(d) To aid in providing, equipping, managing, and maintaining houses, buildings, improvements, local transportation, and other community facilities, by loan or otherwise, to such person or persons and upon such terms and conditions as he may determine.

The Secretary of Labor may exercise any power or discretion herein granted and may enter into any arrangement or contract incidental thereto, through such agency or agencies as he may create or designate: Provided, That houses erected by the Government under the authority of this act shall be of only a temporary character whenever it is practicable to so construct them: Provided further, That whenever it is practicable to use any part of the clerical or field force of the Office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department in or about any of the work contemplated by this act, the Secretary of Labor shall do so: And provided further, That every contract for the lease of ground upon which the Government contemplates the construction of a building under authority of this act shall contain a provision giving the Government an option to purchase the same for a stated consideration.

SEC. 2. That whenever the Secretary of Labor shall purchase, lease, requisition, or acquire by condemnation or otherwise such land or right, title, or interest therein, or such houses, buildings, furnishings, improvements, local transportation, and other community facilities, and parts thereof, he shall make just compensation therefor to be determined by him, and if the amount thereof so determined is unsatisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same, such person shall be paid 75 per cent of the amount so determined and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, added to such 75 per cent, will make up such amount as will be just compensation therefor in the manner provided for by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code.

SEC. 3. That upon the requisition of or the filing of a petition for the condemnation hereunder of such land, or any right, title, or interest therein, or such houses, buildings, furnishings, improvements, local transportation, and other community facilities, and parts thereof, immediate possession thereof may be taken to the extent of the interest to be acquired and the same may be occupied and used, and the provisions of section 355 of the Revised Statutes, providing that no public money shall be expended upon such land until the written opinion of the Attorney General shall be had in favor of the validity of the title, nor until the consent of the legislature of the State in which the land is located has been given, shall be, and the same are hereby, suspended as to all real estate acquired hereunder.

SEC. 4. That the word "person" used herein shall include any person, trustee, firm, or corporation.

SEC. 5. That the power and authority granted herein shall cease with the termination of the present war, except the power and authority to care for and rent such property as remains undisposed of and to conclude and execute contracts for the sale of property made during the war.

SEC. 6. That at the beginning of each session of Congress the Secretary of Labor shall make to Congress a full and detailed report covering all of the transactions of his department with relation to the subject matter of this act, describing each parcel of land purchased, the improvements made thereon, together with the amount of money spent in connection therewith and the disposition of the same; descriptions of all parcels of property sold, to whom, the terms of sale, and the status of the title at the time of the making of such report; description of each piece of property purchased under the terms of this act and still owned by the Government and the estimated value; a list showing the names of all persons who have been employed in any capacity to aid in carrying out the provisions of this act, the service rendered by each and the amount of compensation paid to each, and a full, detailed, itemized statement showing each and every transaction of the department in the execution of the trust herein created; and immediately after the declaration of peace in the existing war the Secretary of Labor shall make a final report to Congress covering in detail all the operations and transactions of his department, under and by virtue of the terms of this act.

SEC. 7. That no work or contract done or made under or by authority of any provision of this act shall be done or made on or under a percentage or "cost-plus" basis.

SEC. 8. That for carrying out the provisions of this act and for the administration thereof the sum of $50,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that no quorum is present. Evidently there is not; and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I want to give notice that we are going to try and finish this bill to-night.

Mr. CANNON. Then there is all the more necessity for a full House.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It is only killing time.

Mr. CANNON. If I may be allowed, I want to say to the gentleman that it is not killing time. I do not know anything about the bill. For the first time I have heard the bill read, and that is the only knowledge I have of it. If it is to be finished to-night with an appropriation of $60,000,000, we ought to have a full House.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think so. I am willing to have a full House, but the bill has been printed some time.

The Clerk called the roll and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill H. R. 10265, had found itself without a quorum, that the roll had been called, and that 275 Members had answered to their names, a quorum, and he handed in the names of the absentees to be recorded in the Journal.

The committee resumed its sitting.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I want to state to the committee that I shall take but very few minutes to give a general outline of the provisions of this bill. I want to state the situation in order that Members may know just what they are doing when they pursue dilatory tactics to prevent the consideration of this bill. A rule has been reported and has been adopted by the House. That rule provides for two hours of general debate, and it also provides that those two hours shall be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the bill. Up to this time I have heard of no opposition to the bill itself, and, so far as those of us favoring the bill are concerned, we shall take but a very few minutes to submit the few remarks we may have to make in general debate. To-morrow, I understand, the Committee on Ways and Means will claim the attention of the House on a bond bill. That will take precedence of this bill, and if this bill is not passed to-night it means that it probably can not be considered again by this House under two or three weeks. That is the situation, and I want to call the attention of the committee now briefly to the provisions of the bill and ask if they will not assist us in undertaking to pass this legislation, which is so urgently necessary for the people of this country to carry on the activities which are so essential to our success in the war.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman has just stated that if the bill does not pass to-day, as the bond bill would come up to-morrow, it would take about three weeks before this bill would be again reached. Will the gentleman be kind enough to say why?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Because I understand there are a number of other preferential measures to follow the bond bill.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman does not apprehend that the bond bill will take over a day?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not know how long it will take. If the seed bill is a fair sample, it may take a week or two; but there are other bills to follow that, and I do not care to go into a general discussion. I have stated the facts as they are. If gentlemen want to pursue their dilatory tactics, they are at liberty to do so. I want the country to know who they are.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. For a question.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend that the rule under which this bill is made in order requires that general debate shall be confined to the bill?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not think the rule specifically does, but it will be so confined so far as my remarks are concerned.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. For a question. I am going to try to get through with this if I can.

Mr. CRAMTON. This bill having been before the Committee on Labor, which was ready practically to report it when the bill was taken away from it and sent to the other committee, could not this situation have been avoided by awaiting the report from the Committee on Labor and acting upon it some two or three weeks ago?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. How would they have been in any better position to dispose of it than the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. CRAMTON. For the reason that they had completed their hearings and were practically ready to report, whereas the gentleman's committee has had to hold further hearings.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. They had not completed their hearings, and I will say to the gentleman another thing—he may not appreciate it, but I do—and that is that the committees of this House are entitled to their jurisdiction, if the integrity of the House procedure is to be maintained. I do not yield to the gentleman to ask any more questions.

Mr. CRAMTON. Just simply——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not yield. I want to say this. This is a bill which the administration desires for the expeditious prosecution of the war. The bill provides for the building of houses to take care primarily of industrial workers. It also, by an amendment which we propose to offer at the proper time, proposes to take care of other Government employees who are essential to the activities of the Government in this war time. The bill provides also for the loaning of money at a reasonable rate of interest to manufacturing concerns engaged in manufacturing munitions of war or other essentials of war, to enable them to build these houses. The committee thought, as this is a new departure in Government, that it would be infinitely better to loan the money where it could be done to individuals, firms, or corporations, who would undertake on their own account to build these houses, giving the Government ample security for the return of the money and a reasonable rate of interest.

But where those arrangements could not be made and where the employees had been brought into a community where the housing was insufficient the committee thought that it was just as essential for Congress to appropriate money to build houses to take care of those workers and employees as it was essential to build manufacturing establishments and industrial concerns to manufacture munitions of war. There are thousands of employees in this country to-day in the great manufacturing centers who have been brought in there to labor for the Government who are absolutely without house room. Some of them, married men, have been carried away from their families, and it can not be expected, as patriotic as those men may be, that they will be content to live for weeks, months, and it may be for a year or more separated from their families. It is not right and the Government ought not to expect it, and we ought to make provisions to ameliorate those conditions. Another portion of this bill provides, and the committee thought it would be much better for the executors of this trust wherever it were possible to pursue that course, and it is this: Some of these plants are near large cities, where there is ample house accommodations for these workers. Where plants are located miles away outside the city, but connected by a transportation line of one sort and another, especially trolley lines, it was thought in those cases possibly it would be more economical and better serve the purposes in view to enlarge the transportation facilities by loaning the money to those operating roads or else by taking them over on the part of the Government and enlarge them so as to meet the demands for transportation. And we have thought that in those cases it would be better than building houses, if the houses are ample in the city adjacent to it, to enlarge or build transportation lines, so that the workers may go back and forth from their homes to their daily labor.

Mr. Chairman, in the discussion on the adoption of the rule the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], I think, raised one objection to the bill—one main objection, I believe—and that was the fact that the execution of this trust was placed in the hands of the Department of Labor, whereas he insisted it ought to be in the Treasury Department. Now, I want to say this matter has been discussed by the President, by the members of the Cabinet, and by those interested in it, recognizing the urgency of the situation for some time. A Cabinet meeting was held. The President was present. The Cabinet were there, and this whole question was discussed, and at that meeting it was decided that under all the existing circumstances it was better that the administration of this trust be placed in the hands of the Department of Labor. The Secretary of Labor in the hearings before this committee made this statement. Here is what the Secretary of Labor said:

> The President came to the conclusion that the proper method of administering the labor problems, either the war-emergency problems or the other labor problems, was to administer them through the Department of Labor, which had been created for the purpose of dealing with labor problems. And among the problems that were thus, by the direction of the President, headed into the Department of Labor was the housing problem.

He goes on in his statement and says—this is on page 5 of the hearings in the Secretary of Labor's statement:

When the bill had been drafted, in order that there might be no confusion or duplication in connection with it, I took the bill to the President at a Cabinet meeting for consideration, and I learned there that the Secretary of the Treasury had in contemplation the presentation of a bill proposing to create a corporation with $500,000,000 of capital, and authority to loan some billions—four billions, if I recall the figures correctly—and the Secretary of the Treasury at that time thought that possibly that corporation might be the best agency to deal with the problem of housing.

The statement of the Secretary of the Treasury so impressed the President and the members of the Cabinet at the time that the President suggested the holding of a conference, at which the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy, the chairman of the Shipping Board, and the chairman of the Senate and House committees handling the shipping bill, proposing to make appropriations for housing for shipping purposes, so that the problem might be worked out in a way where there would be no conflict of jurisdiction and no confusion flowing out of it, and asked that I get in touch with Senator FLETCHER, with a view to having the Senators defer action upon the bill until such conference could be had. I immediately got in touch with Senator FLETCHER, and the Senator advised me that just a few minutes before the bill had passed the Senate and had gone over to the House. It was later referred to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. They took the question up for consideration.

Later on he said:

Two days following the conference I have referred to was held. The President was unable to be present at the conference, because he was still laboring with a bad cold. There was no representative from the Treasury Department present. There was the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the chairman of the Shipping Board, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Mr. King, of the War Department, and Senator FLETCHER, and Congressman ALEXANDER present at the conference.

And then he goes further and says:

It was the belief at that conference that nothing should be injected that would interfere with the appropriation being made for the Shipping Board to permit it to proceed promptly to furnish the necessary housing, but that the general problem of housing should be headed up into the Department of Labor, because the housing problem and the mobilization of labor, the placement of labor, are closely related problems, and as the Department of Labor is dealing with the mobilization of labor and the placement of labor the problem of housing should be headed into the Department of Labor, and that that should be done with the ultimate object that if Congress furnished the necessary funds, when the Department of Labor had secured the funds and built the organization, and perfected its plans to the point where it could take over the housing problem of the Shipping Board and carry it on without any loss in efficiency, then that part of the housing problem should also be headed into the Department of Labor.

The conference having come to that conclusion, I asked the advisory counsel, which I had created to help me in building the organization for handling these problems, to redraft the bill with a view to making the appropriation to the Department of Labor and placing the authority in the Department of Labor for handling it. The bill was drafted in that form and it was looked upon as being a labor problem.

Showing, Mr. Chairman, that this whole matter was considered in all of its aspects, from every possible point of view, and it was decided by those gentlemen who are conducting all of our movements in this great war, those to whom we must look and whom we must absolutely trust if we are to be successful in the great contest in which we are engaged, and they decided that the Department of Labor was the proper governmental agency to administer this trust.

And I want to say that your committee, taking that view of it, left it where the bill drawn in the Department of Labor put it, but we did this, namely, we provided by an amendment that it should be the duty of the Secretary of Labor, the administrator in this instance, to use the forces of the Supervising Architect's office wherever it was possible to do so. And he intends to do that. The Treasury Department has no building organization. They have a lot of draftsmen and architects and clerks, and that is all. They do not construct buildings. They draw plans and specifications. That is all they do. And they are to help, and their services are to be given, of course, without any further cost than their regular salaries, to the Secretary of Labor in this great work.

Now, I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that we have a number of amendments which we propose to offer from the committee. One is increasing the amount by $10,000,000, so changing the verbiage of the bill as to give the Secretary of Labor the power to provide housing for the employees of any kind in the District of Columbia.

And I want to say right here that I am informed by a good lady in this city who has taken a large interest in this matter that to-day there are 2,000 girls in the city of Washington, brought here under civil-service contests to take positions to help in this war work, who are only lodging temporarily with people who were kind enough to take them in and who are without permanent place of abode. Numbers of them have gone back home rather than to submit to the conditions by which they would be environed here. These people should be provided with some decent, respectable place in which to live if they are to work for the Government; and this bill proposes to do that. And the gentlemen before the committee, giving us a statement of these facts, pointed out a number of places where the demand was urgent for housing. In Bridgeport, Conn., they needed 1,500 additional houses to take care of the overflow. At the Bath Iron Works, at Bath, Me., they are seeking relief for about 600 men engaged in the building of torpedo-boat destroyers. At Fore River, Mass., a force has been built up of from 4,000 to 11,500. At Norfolk, Va., the various Government activities, including the Army and Navy, require approximately the following: Permanent housing for 3,535 white workers, permanent housing for 2,840 colored workers, temporary accommodations for 6,000 white workers, temporary accommodations for 14,025 colored laborers. Portsmouth, N. H., has a transportation problem as well as a housing problem. Permanent housing for the Navy, amounting to about $210,000; temporary housing for the Navy, amounting to about $56,000, will be required. At Hammond, Ind., considerable housing is required. The Signal Corps reports that their demands for housing from Buffalo and Hammondsport, N. Y., Elizabeth, N. J., and Dayton, Ohio, are large. The Ordnance Department is and has been engaged in a systematic investigation of the housing conditions, the prospective housing requirements in connection with its work at Government arsenals. In Watertown, Mass.; Rock Island, Ill.; Watervliet, N. Y.; the Government proving grounds at Aberdeen, Md.—they need help, all of them.

And so on. At numbers of places workers have been brought in by the Government without any shadow of shelter, these men being paid, it is true, but just as patriotic as are the men who are in the trenches with Pershing to-day, just as patriotic as any men who follow the flag, because without them these men in France would be absolutely useless.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is one of the most urgent necessity, one of the most meritorious that has been presented to this House under color of a war measure that I have noticed since I have been in this Hall, and I trust that no gentleman will voluntarily throw anything in its way. If he wants to amend it in order to make it better, the committee welcomes that; but I ask him in behalf of these people who need the housing, in behalf of this Government, in behalf of the boys in the trenches, not to delay it and not to attempt to filibuster upon a bill of such grave importance as this.

How much time have I used, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida has used 18 minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I occupy somewhat the same position as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN], having been upon both the Committee on Labor and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds during the hearings on this important bill.

There seems to be some little disposition to question the necessity of this measure, as well as the propriety of investing the Department of Labor with the duty of carrying out its provisions. Both the Treasury Department and the Department of Labor are organized departments of the Government. The Supervising Architect's Office being under the supervision of the Treasury and the Department of Labor being complete within itself, there is no new bureau to create by assigning the administration of these activities to the Department of Labor instead of the Office of the Supervising Architect in the Treasury. There is nothing in that; and it occurs to me that the Department of Labor is the proper department that should supervise and superintend this great work. It is connected immediately with labor. There is not much of this labor that is to be done in the city of Washington. In fact, I might say that the $50,000,000 carried in the bill, as it is now presented to Congress, is for use entirely outside of the city of Washington.

Who is the man in charge who works under the Secretary of Labor and is to see to the expenditure of this money and the supervision of this work? Mr. Eidlitz, of New York City, who was written to by the President of the United States to come here and take charge of the supervision of this work. Mr. Eidlitz is one of the largest builders, contractors, and architects in the United States. He comes here—not for money and does not receive one cent of compensation—leaving a most lucrative business in the city of New York. To him has been intrusted the construction of these buildings. Somebody must do it.

It is not for putting up buildings entirely. Buildings will only be constructed in those cities where they can not be rented and, where it can be done, street cars will be run back into the cities to accommodate the workmen and no buildings will be constructed. In all instances where it can be done the construction of new buildings will be avoided and this money will be expended economically, honestly, and efficiently. Still your committee thought that for the purpose of keeping track of the project they should put in a provision requiring at every session of Congress a report to be made by the Secretary of Labor of the money expended, to whom it is paid, and for what it was expended.

I want to say a word about the necessity of this work. My colleagues, we are involved in the greatest war known to history. It is a war not of our own choosing. We were compelled to go into this war or lose our honor and, perchance, our country. This is the most honorable war, on our part, that was ever fought. There was not a principle contended for in any war fought by the United States, from the Revolutionary War down to the present time, but what is involved in this war. We either had to fight or submit to an ignominious surrender.

You may ask me the question that is frequently asked, and that is, How long will this war last? I do not know how long it will last. There is no man who knows that.

I know Germany, our enemy, the most unscrupulous, the most unprincipled, the most barbarous, the most savage, the most inhuman, and dastardly enemy that ever contended on the field of battle, was for 40 years preparing for this war. It may be 40 years after we started in before it is concluded; but, as was said by the President, not until the last drop of blood and the last dollar is gone will we surrender. [Applause.]

We can not fight this war without munitions. We can not get munitions unless they are manufactured. These great companies have put up their plants. Ford, in my own State, has put up a plant occupying many acres of land and will employ many thousands of workmen. That is a sample of the factories. But they all are not so fortunate as he, and it may be that even he will need some of this money. Shall we hesitate at this stage of the war, when our brave boys have devoted there lives and everything they have for the protection and safety of our homes and our country?

Our Nation is at stake. This matter of $50,000,000 may be only a start. It may take several hundreds of millions of dollars, as it has in England. We must not withhold our aid. The munition manufacturers are assisting and helping us to fight this battle, and if we do not win on foreign soil we must win on our own soil. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. OLNEY].

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of this committee [Mr. CLARK of Florida] has been good enough to yield to me five minutes, which I will use before I take the 5.45 train. In his remarks he mentioned the Fore River Shipbuilding Co. That happens to be in the city of Quincy; and with its three shifts of employees and the added Victory plant, a duplicate of the plant of the Fore River Co., makes this city the most important shipbuilding city in the United States. When gentlemen talk about men working in three shifts, it is an absolute fact that in the city of Quincy and for 10 miles or so around about that city the beds are actually working in three shifts. So it is most important and necessary that this bill, appropriating $50,000,000 for housing purposes, be passed as soon as possible. I trust that the advice of the chairman of the committee [Mr. CLARK of Florida] will be taken and that this bill will be passed by this House before sunup to-morrow. We can talk ships and think ships, but we must build them, and the men who work in these shipbuilding plants must work, under sanitary conditions. I have received letters showing that by the investigations of the Board of Health in Quincy it has been found that persons were sleeping in rooms at night which were occupied not only by another shift in the daytime but still a third shift. A man, his wife, and baby were found sleeping in a kitchen. Several persons were found in an attic room, and rooms generally there are working overtime. Employees who work in Quincy are going as far south as Taunton, 20 miles away, and to towns near the New Hampshire line on the north, to find sleeping accommodations. Therefore it is most important that this House pass this bill as soon as posible not only for Quincy, but with the added amendment of $10,000,000 for the thousands of girls who are coming to Washington under the civil service to work here to help win the war.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. On March 1 a bill became a law which authorized the Shipping Board to spend $50,000,000 for construction to house employees engaged in building ships for the United States. Have they done nothing for the Fore River yard?

Mr. OLNEY. Not a dollar, as I understand. That bill was reported out of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries; and, as I understand from Mr. Otto E. Eidlitz, chairman of the housing committee the money to house the employees for the Fore River shipbuilding plant is to come out of the appropriation contained in this bill reported from the Committee on Public Building and Grounds and not out of the appropriation in the bill from the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There were $50,000,000 appropriated in that bill, and this bill will make $100,000,000.

Mr. OLNEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And that other $50,000,000 has gone nobody knows where, has it?

Mr. OLNEY. The money appropriated in the bill which came out of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee is to be devoted to other purposes to which the money appropriated in this bill can not be devoted; for instance, hospital facilities for the munitions plants.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That appropriation was not for any such purpose as that.

Mr. OLNEY. Yes; according to Mr. Eidlitz, it is.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Let me make a suggestion which perhaps will help the gentleman. The appropriation of $50,000,000 that has already passed is to be used to assist in the building of ships, the most important thing next to aeroplanes that we need.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is for housing.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That $50,000,000 is to assist in the building of ships.

Mr. STAFFORD. We have appropriated $750,000,000 for ships.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the chairman of the committee [Mr. CLARK of Florida] made some remarks, the plain inference of which was that because the point of no quorum present was made by me before the discussion began on this measure, dilatory tactics were being indulged in. Now, I did not intend and do not intend to indulge in any such tactics upon this measure, because I realize the importance of some legislation being enacted; but upon the completion of the bill which preceded this a great many Members of the House left this Hall with the understanding that there would be no vote taken upon this measure to-night. I thought it only fair on this important measure, with a very important amendment involving $10,000,000 to be offered, that there should be a larger attendance in the House in Committee of the Whole. I want to assure the gentleman from Florida that it was not done with any intent to obstruct the proceedings of this measure.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am very glad to hear the gentleman say that, but the gentleman knows that it is quite unusual to demand the full reading of a bill at the opening of its consideration.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I objected to dispensing with the first reading, and as it turned out it took four minutes more of the time of the House to have the bill read. I was seconded in my objection by several other gentlemen who had not seen, read, or heard of the bill until it was brought in under a rule. I want to say that there is no intention on this side of the House, as far as I can observe, to indulge in any dilatory tactics or to do anything to give rise to the apoplectic vigor with which gentlemen have urged this measure. I do not know of any measure that ought to be considered in the absence of a quorum.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am intensely interested in this bill, as I was in the companion bill for housing the employees of the 132 shipyards of the United States. I know that the officials of this Government are exceedingly interested that this bill shall pass. I have had occasion to discuss the matter with some of them. I know that it is true of the housing committee, and I know it is true of the Chief Executive of this Nation.

I want to say that the State of Pennsylvania, which I have the honor in part to represent, is pretty liberally supplied with munition factories. The gentleman from Florida, in naming over the list needing housing facilities, unintentionally forgot to mention my home city, Erie, Pa. For diversified industries there are not more than three or four other cities in the United States exceeding it. There are 25 plants engaged in the manufacturing of munitions for the Government. The Government officials have been there and understand the situation; one is there now, or was quite recently, investigating conditions. Mr. Philip Hiss, of the Housing Division of the National Council of Defense, held a meeting the latter part of February in the interest of this housing legislation with the result that the citizens of Erie subscribed more than $700,000 to help this project along. In addition thereto, the General Electric Co. offers to put in $200,000 in cash and $200,000 in land and borrow $1,000,000 from the United States Government, and at the end of three years after the war take the property over at a valuation to be fixed by the Government itself. That is the kind of people out in that section. [Applause.]

I know that some families are leaving the city of Erie because they can not get housing. If we could construct the houses by the waving of the wand and put them there to-morrow there would be a stream of people coming into these factories aggregating 15,000 or 20,000 more. We are making cannon shells, electric motors, automobile supplies, parts for aeroplanes, tanks, boilers, engines, shafting, and other articles for the Government. The Erie Forge Co. is one of the largest contractors in the United States. It has contracts to-day involving something like $63,000,000.

I know that there must be increased housing facilities in order to get a maximum output in the shortest time. The General Electric Co. is at present constructing 700 houses. The American Brake Shoe Co. is constructing 600 or 700 houses. Several real estate firms are also building, but the demand far exceeds the supply.

I can, therefore, accept readily the wish of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] that this bill may be hastened to final completion. I am ready now to vote for the bill as it stands, notwithstanding there has been some criticism as to the department that should carry out the administrative features of the bill. That is up to them. The duty rests upon them. If they carry it out well we will be satisfied, but the Department of Labor has the right to bring into use all the facilities to be found with the Supervising Architect of the Treasury and other agencies.

That feature of the bill which gives to the Secretary of Labor authority to carry out the provisions of this proposed legislation has been the subject of careful investigation by those in high official position, by the committee in charge of the bill, and by others, and adopted—let it stand. Plans of operation have in part already been worked out; to turn the business over to new hands would neutralize what has already been accomplished, cause delay and confusion.

Now, if there were a necessity for passing a housing bill for the shipbuilding plants the necessity exists for the passing of this bill to construct houses for the munition factories in my own city, and I judge that the same condition prevails elsewhere. I know that it does at Bethlehem, Bath, Bridgeport, and Fall River, and in many other cities of the United States. We have passed a great many bills on the basis that they are war measures, and any person who has been in this House a few months understands that this is a war measure.

The United States Government would never enter into any such enterprise as furnishing money to construct houses if it were not an absolute necessity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

By unanimous consent, Mr. CLARK of Pennsylvania was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER].

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I intend to support this bill, and I am glad to do so, but through the kindness of the chairman I have been given this brief time in which to present a matter that I wish to call to the attention of the House relating to the proposed change in the draft law. As is perhaps known to the Members, a bill has passed the Senate and has been reported to the House that proposes to change vitally the basis for determining the quota of men to be drafted, changing it from population as at present to the number of men placed in class 1. I have asked the adjutant general of the State of Nebraska to furnish me the figures showing the way and the number of men who have been placed in class 1 in each county in the State of Nebraska by the draft boards, and also the total number of men registered and liable for service, and I have taken 20 representative counties out of the hundred counties and districts in Nebraska that are of nearly the same population and character of citizenship for the purpose of comparison, and I wish to put them in the RECORD in order to call the attention of the House to what will occur if quotas are determined by numbers in class 1 instead of total population or the total number of registrants, as proposed in my amendment. Gen. Crowder has said that if the proposed bill, Senate joint resolution 123, becomes a law he will draw all the men from class 1 before he invades another class, no matter if one district thereby has to furnish the quotas lacking from another because class 1 is exhausted in the latter. To take an example from the table I submit: Seward County, with total draft population of 1,287, will furnish 1,262 soldiers for the trenches, while Antelope would furnish 156 from a total draft population of 1,206. Similar conditions are shown in the other counties compared in the table.

In like manner, if the rule of basing the draft on the number in class 1 is adopted, those States that have placed a large per cent of registrants in class 1 will have to furnish those soldiers lacking from States that have placed a small number in that class. I will say that Nebraska is a representative agricultural State. We were the eleventh State in the Union to furnish the number of men required to fill our quota in the Regular Army, and we had a less percentage of delinquents at the call of the last draft than any other State in the Union except North Dakota. So the conditions in Nebraska are probably those that exist in many other States. I hope that Members will apply to their State authorities and learn how the new rule will affect them. For instance, in Chase County the total registrants classified are 361, and the total number placed in class 1 is 283. In Dundy County, an adjoining county, the total registrants numbered 375 and the total placed in class 1 was 78. In the fourth district, represented by my colleague, Mr. SLOAN, in Seward County the total registrants number 1,287, and the number placed in class 1 by the Seward County board number 1,262, while in Antelope County, with a total registrant population of 1,206, the number placed in class 1 is only 156. And so it goes through the whole State. In other words, if the quota is based upon class 1, the numbers that are to be furnished by some of these counties with similar population will be ten times as many as others.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by placing therein this table.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection

The table referred to is as follows:

Comparisons of the numbers of registrants placed in class 1 by the draft boards of counties of similar population, both as to numbers and avocations, as shown by report made by the adjutant general of Nebraska.

CONTIGUOUS COUNTIES.

County.	Total registrants in county.	Total placed in class 1.	Appealed to district boards
Chase	361	283	113
Dundy	375	78	1
Hayes	283	251	187
Perkins	295	70	1
Frontier	765	636	322
Furnas	846	88	4
CENTRAL SECTION, ONE NORTH AND ONE SOUTH OF PLATTE RIVER.
Franklin	809	445	294
Nance	751	107	54
Nuckolls	1,010	615	250
Colfax	1,011	245	28
Gosper	380	260	101
Boyd	574	75
Seward	1,287	1,262	540
Antelope	1,206	156
Gage	2,443	1,808	1,014
Buffalo	1,934	425	2
Saunders	1,697	1,327	665
Scotts Bluff	1,539	259	4
LINCOLN, CITY, COMPLETE, AND DIVISIONS 1 AND 2, OMAHA, CITY.
Omaha (divisions 1 and 2)	5,985	2,268	493
Lincoln (divisions 1 and 2)	4,732	171	13

In entire State an average of 32½ per cent of all registrants classified were placed in class 1.

It will be noted that in counties where the numbers placed in class 1 is large in proportion to the total registrants the appeals to the district board are numerous.

At the time these figures were made up a total of 6,330 appeals were pending in the entire State before the district boards in a total of 33,681 registered and liable to military service.

Nebraska was the eleventh State to furnish its quota of volunteers for the Regular Army and had the lowest per cent of draft delinquents under the previous call of any State in the Union except North Dakota.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I intend to support and vote for the pending measure because it appears to be absolutely necessary in the successful prosecution of the war. But I rose to speak in relation to another matter which in my judgment is even more important in connection with the gigantic struggle in which we are now engaged.

While in every section of our country, in every city, town, and hamlet, our people, all true Americans who honor the flag, and whose hearts are beating in anxious sympathy with the brave boys who have gone and are going to fight the battles of the Republic, to uphold its dignity and to defend its honor, and to make the world safe for America, are making noble and generous response to every call of the American Red Cross, and while the manhood, womanhood, and childhood of the Nation are giving of their time, energies, and means to the support and assistance of this the greatest and most efficient organization for relief work the world has ever known, and while letters and messages are coming daily from the boys at the front in praise of its work, yet knockers in some sections of this country are not even sparing the Red Cross, and statements are made and given circulation to the effect that the major portion of the funds contributed go for salaries and administrative expenses and the minor portion to actual relief.

Gentlemen, these reports are without foundation either in truth or in fact, and I do not propose that they shall longer go unchallenged. I am sure that the patriotic forces who are engaged in securing contributions to the Red Cross will be glad to know that not one cent collected for the Red Cross war fund is used for administrative purposes and that every dollar goes into the work of relief, and that of the immense fund contributed to and used by this organization less than 2 per cent is required for administrative purposes, and this comes out of money paid in as membership dues by members of the organization. I ask to insert in the RECORD and have printed as a portion of my remarks a letter and statement just received from the deputy comptroller of the Red Cross, which furnishes a very definite explanation as to the matters to which I have just referred.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

THE AMERICAN RED CROSS,
Washington, D. C., March 28, 1918.

Hon. RILEY J. WILSON,
House of Representatives of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. WILSON: I am very glad to receive your inquiry of the 25th instant about Red Cross funds.

Every dollar subscribed to Red Cross war fund is used for relief work made necessary by the war. All administrative expenses, as well as some relief activities, come out of the portion of membership dues paid over by the chapters to the national organization. No money is paid out of Red Cross treasury except under appropriations authorized by war council or executive committee.

Appropriations for relief activities up to date, chiefly on budgets for the period ending Apr. 30, 1918:
Out of war fund		$79,700,901.82
Out of other funds		555,265.38
Total for relief		80,256,167.20
Administrative expenses at headquarters and 14 division offices, including cost of membership campaigns, carrying on supply business, enlisting personnel of nurses, etc.:
Actual for eight months to Feb. 28, 1918	$2,806,769.50
Estimated for two months to Apr. 30, 1918	900,000.00
Total		83,962,936.70

This indicates that less than 4½ cents out of the dollar is spent for administrative expense and over 95 cents for relief. But it should be remembered that in "expenses" there are included such activities as enlisting nurses, doctors, and other workers, and especially the considerable cost of conducting a supply business which has transactions of $4,000,000 to $5,000,000 per month. Probably the actual overhead expense of management is less than 2 per cent, and, as stated above, not one penny of this comes out of the contributions for relief purposes.

From what I have said it is clear that any statement to the effect that "ninety cents out of every dollar subscribed is used for administration" is wholly without foundation. As you suggest, such reports are probably circulated with malicious intent and as part of the enemy propaganda.

A complete financial report is in preparation and will be published early in May. I will see that a copy is sent to you, and I will have additional copies sent to any persons you may care to name.

Yours, truly,

LOUIS J. HUNTER,
Deputy Comptroller.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, we have just one business as a Nation at this time and that is to win this war, and to do this we must have unity of action as well as of spirit among all patriotic citizens, and there should be no room or place anywhere for the "knocker," the obstructionist, and the disloyal who are hampering the operations of the forces and organizations whose activities are so essential to our success.

A portion of our forces are to-day in the battle line at the front and others are going gladly to join them, placing their all on the altar of liberty in our defense. The very heart of the Nation is with them. In every community loyal and patriotic men and women are giving them undivided and unfaltering support. This is no time for quiet, passive, or inactive patriotism. The only man who can classify himself as a genuine American is he who comes forth openly and aggressively into the discharge and performance of whatever duty or service he can best render to his country now. [Applause.]

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, there will soon come before this House for consideration, in connection with the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill, the regulations for grading of potatoes recently forced upon the farmers of the country generally and of Michigan particularly by arbitrary, unwise, and unwarranted action of a section of the Food Administration. The regulations in question, mandatory in their operation, have been represented by the authorities as in the interest of potato growers and satisfactory to them. Such is not the case.

During the pendency of the Agricultural appropriation bill in the Senate the following amendment was adopted, it having been presented by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], it being No. 41 of the Senate amendments to said bill:

That act No. 41, Sixty-fifth Congress, approved August 10, 1917, be amended by adding the following at the end of section 14 of said act: "Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated or any unexpended balance heretofore appropriated shall be used to defray the expenses of the Food Administration or any other department of the Government in the work of grading potatoes, and no regulation shall be made therefor: Provided further, That it shall not be lawful to grade potatoes as to size or otherwise interfere with the marketable value thereof when such products are free from blight, dry-rot, and other disease harmful to the public health."

I hope that amendment will be concurred in by the House conferees and by the House; and, as expressive of the views of the potato growers of Michigan and, I think, also of other States, I desire to call the attention of the House to the following resolutions adopted unanimously at the annual convention of Michigan potato growers held at the Michigan Agricultural College a few days ago:

Whereas the United States is engaged in the greatest war of history, involving the freedom and democracy of the world, the preservation of our Nation and the safety of our homes. We fully realize that the successful prosecution of the war and the welfare of our boys across the seas depend upon the united strength of the Nation's man power and the coordination and cooperation of all its commercial and agricultural interests. The farmers of the Nation have heeded the pleas of President Wilson that they put forth their utmost endeavors to increase the food products of the Nation that the wants of our soldiers, the allies fighting by their side, and the citizen population may be supplied; and

Whereas in complying with the pleas of the Federal Government in these respects the farmers of Michigan last spring planted the largest acreage of potatoes in their history, paid the highest prices of years for seed, labor, and fertilizer, tended the crop through a most discouraging season, and because of circumstances outside their control secured a most disappointing yield for their labor; and

Whereas when the farmers took their potatoes to market expecting that they would be graded and sold in the same manner as in previous years, they were required by the buyers to conform to a grading system which in practical operation resulted in a classification that placed in a so-called No. 2 grade having little if any market value from 25 to 35 per cent of sound edible potatoes that in previous years had found a ready market under grading rules as accepted and established by the trade; and

Whereas the grading rules so suddenly promulgated were not extended to include all potato-growing sections of the country; neither were any established rules or requirements demanded of retail dealers or distributors, thus enforcing grading rules upon the farmer without following the product to the consumer in an effort to create a demand for such grades; and

Whereas the establishment of these grades has resulted in huge financial loss to the farmers of all States, paralyzed the movement of the crop during the normal marketing season, resulted in an overabundance of potatoes at the source of supply and a shortage at the consuming markets, forced the farmers to hold their crop of No. 1 stock for much higher prices than would have been necessary to have paid the cost of production had they been able to place on the market a larger percentage of their crop as in former years; and

Whereas the lack of a market for the so-called No. 2 stock has resulted in an enormous and criminal waste of precious food, in direct contravention to the teachings and efforts of the Food Administration to conserve food products; and

Whereas the President has said, "No law can last long * * * which does not recognize and accept the principle that governments derive all their just powers from the consent of the governed"; and

Whereas the farmers of the State of Michigan have been arbitrarily compelled by virtue of the very nature of the marketing and distributing machinery of potatoes, controlled by the organized shippers of the State, to have their potatoes graded in a manner contrary to their wishes and detrimental to their interests, having had absolutely no voice in the matter whatsoever: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, loyal citizens and farmers of the State of Michigan, in convention assembled, do hereby pledge our utmost support to the prosecution of this great war for the cause of humanity, and to do all in our power to produce the greatest amount of foodstuffs required to win the war; and were the present method of grading potatoes in any manner a measure destined to assist us in our direct benefit to those most vitally concerned, the producer or consumer, we would cheerfully, gladly abide by its provisions; be it further

Resolved, That we protest against the indiscriminate waste of food resulting from the double grading of potatoes, and to request the immediate abolishment of all obnoxious rules governing the production of food that will in any way have a tendency to reduce or curtail such production, and that the Government do all in its power to assist the farmers in this effort; and be it further

Resolved, That we particularly condemn the double grading of potatoes as now being employed by the shippers of this State, and demand its immediate abolishment, in the interest of our common cause; and be it further

Resolved, That this convention of representative potato growers of Michigan go on record as favoring the principle of grading potatoes as regards to quality, which principle, in fact, has been observed for many years by the producers and by buyers in all terminal markets; but we are unalterably opposed to further interference in the matter of grades, through which neither producer nor consumer is benefited, fully believing that the discussion and determination of such regulations may, with justice to all and injury to none, be left until the close of the war.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON].

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it was not my purpose to speak on this bill when I came in this afternoon, because I did not know that this measure was to be brought in the House to-day. Within 6 miles of my home there is a shipyard that has cost the Government $14,000,000, but there are no homes there for the workmen. There will be about 4,000 to 5,000 men employed and, with their families, there will be something like 16,000 or 17,000 people. In a talk I had with one member of the Shipping Board the other day he informed me there were only 185,000 men employed in the 150 shipyards that are now under the control of the Government, and they wanted 300,000 more men in order to have three shifts of eight hours a day, and that it was impossible to obtain them, because of the lack of housing, and on the average a married man would not remain longer than five months at any shipyard without his family. At Bristol, on the Delaware, where the Shipping Board intends to expend some $2,000,000 in building homes, they will also erect hospitals as well as hotels and places of amusement.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that at Bristol they are using boats in the river in order to accommodate workmen?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. They have one large boat which was used as an excursion steamer that is tied up to the wharf, and the men are obliged to sleep on board of it in order to have a place to remain at Bristol and perform their work. The men and women who are employed in our military industries must be regarded as human beings, and their comforts be looked after, as well as those who fill high official positions. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LAZARO].

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the report of the general secretary of the Interstate Inland Waterway League on the intercoastal canal.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the report indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, how long is the report?

Mr. LAZARO. It is very short.

Mr. ELSTON. About how many words?

Mr. LAZARO. It is very short.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The report is as follows:

THE INTERCOASTAL CANAL FROM THE MISSISSIPPI TO THE RIO GRANDE.

[From the report of the general secretary Interstate Inland Waterway League at the thirteenth annual convention. Revised to Mar. 1, 1918.]

Interstate Inland Waterway League of Louisiana and Texas: C. S. E. Holland, president, Victoria, Tex.; Henri Gueydan, vice president, Gueydan, La.; G. J. Palmer, vice president and treasurer, Houston, Tex.; Leon Locke, general secretary, Lake Charles, La.; Roy Miller, assistant secretary, Corpus Christi, Tex.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The Intercoastal Canal, of Louisiana and Texas, is a part of a continuous inland waterway, already surveyed and partly constructed, reaching from Boston, Mass., along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts to the Rio Grande, Tex. The section which concerns us immediately is the Mississippi to the Rio Grande, and the Interstate Inland Waterway League was one of the first organizations to take up a plan for coast inland waterway development.

An act of Congress of March 3, 1873, ordered a survey with a view to connecting the Mississippi with the Rio Grande by cuts and canals, joining the lakes, bays, bayous, and lagunas along the margin of the Gulf of Mexico. The survey was conducted by Maj. C. W. Howell, and a report with estimates made on a cost of 25 cents a cubic yard for construction was submitted, but no appropriation was made at that time.

The project being revived by Texas and Louisiana interests, a new survey was authorized by the act of March 3, 1905, and the examination from the Mississippi River at Donaldsonville, La., to the Rio Grande was made by Maj. Edgar Jadwin, whose report is printed in House document No. 640, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session. Subsequently the Donaldsonville exit was changed to Plaquemine by reason of the locks at that place.

A general interest in waterways prompted Congress to order in the act of March 3, 1909, a survey of the entire intracoastal waterway from Boston, Mass., to the Rio Grande, Tex. To a special board of engineers composed of Lieut. Col. Lansing H. Beach, Maj. H. Jervey, Capt. J. C. Oakes, Capt. H. B. Ferguson, and Capt. A. E. Waldron was assigned the section from St. Georges Sound, Fla., to the Rio Grande, and the report of the board is printed in House document No. 610, Sixty-third Congress, second session. Location of routes and estimates are given in this report under date of January 15, 1914. No action on this report has yet been taken by Congress.

The engineers subdivide the Mississippi-Rio Grande waterway as follows: Mississippi River to Bayou Teche, Bayou Teche to Mermentau River, Mermentau River to Sabine River, Port Arthur to Galveston Bay, Galveston to Brazos River, Brazos River to Pass Cavallo, Pass Cavallo to Aransas Pass, Aransas Pass to Brazos Santiago, Brazos Santiago to Rio Grande.

Despite the efforts of the league and the attitude of the Army Engineers, Congress continues to treat each of these sections as a separate project. Recognition of the waterway in its entirety is demanded.

The section between the Mississippi River and the Sabine River embraces practically all of southern Louisiana and lies well within the region of alluvial deposit made by the Mississippi River. It consists of wide areas of marsh, numerous cypress swamps, and many lakes, which are from one-half to 30 miles in length. Many bayous, having a general north-and-south direction, intersect, and these bayous are all deep, most of them having 20 to 30 feet for miles in succession. There are no elevations, and it is possible to construct a tide-level canal across the entire section. For the purpose of preserving some fresh-water basins for irrigation, especially in the rice region, locks are located in places where the canal crosses some lake or bayou. Although the bayous are deep, the bays and lakes are usually shallow, usually from 6 to 10 feet in depth. The league, therefore, is urging a construction inland around those bays in order that a channel may be maintained and that navigation may be free from the dangers of open waters and of being left on a shoal after a prolonged blow from the north.

MISSISSIPPI TO TECHE.

This is the center of the sugar region of Louisiana and skirts the great cypress areas. The lower part, near the Gulf, has a large fish and oyster trade and is the location of many canneries. Some of the principal streams, all of which are navigable, are the Barataria, Des Allemands, Lafourche, Terrebonne, Little and Grand Caillou, Boeuf, Black, and the mighty Atchafalaya. There are also numerous lakes, among which may be named Salvador, Catouache, Des Allemands, Field, Long, Verret, Palourde, and Grand Lake, this last being a widening of the Atchafalaya. This river and lake is joined by a network of bayous and lakes with Plaquemine Bayou and connects with the Plaquemine locks, and commerce from the Atchafalaya, the Teche, and westward passes through these locks 110 miles above New Orleans.

With the construction or improvement of a short link—Lafourche, Terrebonne, Bayou Black—communication could be made with New Orleans from the west through one or both of the privately owned canals extending from the Mississippi opposite that city. The Harvey Canal connects with the river at Harvey through a lock 30 feet in width, a length of 150 feet, and a depth of 7 feet over the sills. This canal extends to Bayou Barataria and enters Lake Salvador through Bayou Villars, thence through Harvey Canal No. 2 to Bayou Lafourche. It is probably the intention of the owners of this canal to extend it still farther west, if it is not taken over by the United States to form a part of the intracoastal waterway. The other canal, known as the "Company Canal," by reason of its having been constructed about 1830 to 1850 by the Barataria & Lafourche Canal Co., is at present owned by Mr. R. R. Barrow. This canal connects with the Mississippi River at Westwego by a lock having a 25-foot width, 160-foot length, and a 6-foot depth. The route of this canal is through Bayou Segnette, Lake Salvador, and enters the Lafourche at Lockport. From this point it passes through the swamp and through Lake Field and Lake Long to Bayou Terrebonne, about 8 miles below Houma. The special board recommended a canal in this section and advised an initial appropriation of $300,000, with a view of purchasing, ultimately, one or both canals if it was found practical. These canals are extensively used.

BAYOU TECHE TO MERMENTAU RIVER.

This section is in the sugar and rice country, and provision was made for it as a project in the act of March 2, 1907, on a 5-foot depth, a bottom width of 40 feet. The route is a dredged canal, known as the Lanson Canal, which connects the Teche with the Bays of Cote Blanche and Vermilion, thence through Schooner Bayou to the canal dredged to White Lake and through three small lakes to Grand Lake. This section was completed in 1911 and is in extensive use. A lock at Schooner Bayou 36 feet wide, 300 feet long, and 9 feet in depth serves to prevent the pollution of White Lake by the salt waters of the connecting bays. This lake, being fresh, has long served as a reservoir for water used in rice irrigation, this particular district being the greatest rice-producing section in the United States. The special board has recommended a route inland around these bays and lakes to avoid the shallow waters and recommends a depth of 7 feet with an adequate bottom width, but no action on this has been taken by Congress. An alternative route in the eastern end of this section often used is from the lower Atchafalaya through Wax Bayou and to East Cote Blanche Bay around Point Chevreuil.

Appropriations made by Congress for the foregoing section total $314,203.

MERMENTAU TO SABINE.

An appropriation of $100,000 was made for this section in the act of June 25, 1910. The engineers were asked to use this money on the western end of the section lying between Calcasieu River and Sabine River, it being figured that this amount would complete that connection on the prescribed basis of 5 by 40. In order to have a direct line avoiding a tortuous bayou, thereby better serving the agricultural and other interests, a new line was surveyed, and the cost in excess of the estimate of the United States engineers was figured at $27,450, which sum was contributed by the communities asking for the new route. Of this amount $14,183.03 was returned upon completion of the work. On this stretch are located shipyards, sulphur mines, oil fields, rice plantations, and mills and lumber plants. By reason of the need for war and commerce of the enlargement of this part of the canal two wards of the parish of Calcasieu voted bonds in the amount of $250,000 and asked the United States Engineers to recommend the improvement of the stretch to a 9-foot plus depth and a 100-foot bottom width, conditioned on the community, through the bond issue mentioned, contributing one-half the cost. The recommendation was made and the act of August 8, 1917, appropriated $230,000 for the work. A modification of this section is carried in the bill pending at this time, March, 1918, to a 90-foot bottom width and such depth as the funds will secure, presumably more than 12 feet. The act of last August also contained authority to construct that part of the section between the Mermentau and Calcasieu Rivers on a 7 by 75 foot basis, provided it could be done with the funds available, which amount to about $260,000, secured by appropriations made in previous acts. Appropriations and contributions for the entire section total $898,000. Hydraulic dredges are at work in the Calcasieu-Sabine section and work in the Mermentau-Calcasieu stretch will soon begin.

SABINE RIVER TO GALVESTON BAY.

This route begins at the head of Sabine Lake and follows the Sabine-Neches Canal to Port Arthur, completed with a depth of 25 feet. From Port Arthur the route along the north shore, by way of Salt Bayou, thence to East Galveston Bay, has been approved on a basis of 9 by 100, but no appropriation has been made by Congress. This is one of the most important links of the canal, and it would be deplorable if the interested communities suffered it to be omitted from the pending bill without a vigorous protest. The same applies to the New Orleans-Morgan City section.

GALVESTON BAY TO BRAZOS RIVER.

In 1851–1853 the Galveston & Brazos Navigation Co. constructed a canal 6 feet deep and 100 feet wide between the mouth of the Brazos River and West Galveston Bay. This canal, 10 miles in length, was extensively used for many years in carrying cotton and other commodities. In 1859 the State of Texas made some improvement by dredging, but the storm of 1875 practically obliterated the channel on its old depth. The canal was taken over by the United States in 1892 at a cost of $30,000, and is now a part of the section adopted in the act of March 2, 1907. This act provided for a 5 by 40 construction, appropriating the sum of $133,829 for the waterway on the coast of Texas and authorizing the expenditure of $300,000 more, all of which has been used. Included in this were Pass Cavallo to Aransas Pass and the Guadalupe to Victoria.

BRAZOS RIVER TO PASS CAVALLO.

This section, included in the appropriations above, has been completed on a basis of 5 by 40. The only actual land dredging on the coast of Texas was the stretch between West Galveston Bay and Matagorda Bay. All the other work has been through open waters. The section between Port Arthur and Galveston Bay will pass inland, as there are no sheltering islands on that part of the coast. Another inland cut will be the Brazos Santiago to Rio Grande section, at the Brownsville end of the project. The river and harbor act of June 25, 1910, appropriated $200,000 for this stretch between the mouth of the Brazos and Matagorda Bay. The work has been completed, but, in addition to the need for a greater depth, it is essential that some work be done to provide a way of communication from the canal to points on the immediate coast. Improvements in the Brazos Channel and Harbor near Freeport, where the second great sulphur mines are located, add to the importance of the contiguous sections of the inland waterway.

PASS CAVALLO TO ARANSAS PASS.

This section of the canal passes through Espiritu Santo Bay back of Matagorda Island and connects with the Guadalupe River through San Antonio Bay. There is also connection with Port Lavaca through a channel 7 feet deep and 80 feet wide from Pass Cavallo.

ARANSAS PASS TO BRAZOS SANTIAGO.

A part of this stretch is covered by the existing project for improvement of Turtle Cove Channel between Aransas Pass and Corpus Christi, which contemplates a depth of 12 feet, the work being in progress. At present Corpus Christi is the western end of the project so far as the completed and approved sections are concerned. The remaining part of the section is through Laguna Madre, which has a varying depth of from 1 to 8 feet. The development of the southern part of Texas and of the fertile valley of the lower Rio Grande will soon compel recognition of this stretch.

BRAZOS SANTIAGO TO RIO GRANDE.

This section, 8 miles long, extending from Point Isabel has been recommended by the special board on a regulation depth of 9 feet and a bottom width of 100 feet. This is a needed improvement of itself, and the completion of the intercoastal canal will make its construction imperative. It is probable that the efforts of the people in that section will result in securing deep water to Brownsville within a very few years.

Summarizing, the status of the inland waterway is as follows: Mississippi River to Mermentau River completed with a ruling depth of 5 feet, reached either through Plaquemine Locks to the Atchafalaya, or through one of the privately-owned canals opposite New Orleans and described herein.

Mermentau River to Sabine River, work in progress; depth Mermentau-Calcasieu Stretch, 7 feet; Calcasieu-Sabine, 12 feet.

Sabine to Port Arthur and Port Sabine, 25 feet.

Sabine to Galveston, approved on a depth of 9 feet; now before Congress.

Galveston to Corpus Christi, completed on 5-foot depth.

Corpus Christi to Brownsville, not yet undertaken.

The object and advantage of the waterway becomes plain when one remembers the dangers in the open waters of the Gulf, especially to small craft. There is a dread also of tropical hurricanes.

With the completion of the canal all the markets on the Mississippi and its navigable tributaries can be reached safely and cheaply, and the communication afforded opens to the Mississippi more than a thousand miles of the navigable rivers of Louisiana and Texas. The commercial need of the waterway has been well established; its military value is obvious.

The canal will reach places in the coast country where railroad construction would be so costly that it could hardly be undertaken. The best proof of the practicability and need of the canal may be found in the fact that many private canals exist and are in constant use, serving a triple purpose—transportation, irrigation, reclamation. The last feature has been greatly stimulated by the intercoastal, and in southern Louisiana there are more than 50 extensive reclamation districts embracing a total area of over 300,000 acres.

Rights of way are furnished without cost to the United States, and these are usually obtained without much difficulty by reason of the value and use of the canal. Occasionally, however, it takes time and patience to secure a gift of a strip of land 300 feet wide, and some time to perfect the titles.

The appropriations thus far made total over $2,000,000. It is estimated that $10,000,000 will be required to complete the project on the basis urged by the league, 9 feet deep and 100 feet wide.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, as stated by the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds a few moments ago, this is a war measure. It came before that committee with the assurance that it had the approval of the President of the United States and of the entire Cabinet. It is different from the appropriation which was recently made for shipbuilding purposes. While a portion of the money will be used at the shipyards, it has other objects and other purposes in view. It also makes provision for the housing of employees of munition plants at the places where they are manufacturing the big guns, aeroplanes, engines, and everything of that kind. It also, by an amendment which will be offered at the proper time, will carry $10,000,000 for the housing of employees here in the city of Washington.

Mr. Chairman, I consider this one of the most important war measures that has been brought before the House at the present session. Our armies which we are raising and training will be of no avail to us unless we have the ships to place them upon the battle front in Europe and provide them with something to defend themselves with after they are placed there. The shipping question is the most serious proposition before us to-day, as events now going on in France demonstrate. It is more important that we get a few hundred thousand men over immediately than it is to do anything else that I can conceive of at this time. Mr. Chairman, objection has been made to this bill for the reason that it is to be handled under the Department of Labor. In my judgment that is the proper department of the Government to handle this proposition. They are in touch with the whole labor situation. They know the needs; they are familiar with every detail of it; and they have got it now at their fingers' ends and are ready to commence operations just as soon as authority is given by act of Congress. The Treasury Department, where some think the authority should have been placed, is not in a position to take immediate charge of it. The Secretary of the Treasury, with the $20,000,000,000 of railroads of the country in his hands and all the billions of bond issues, and everything of that kind, has all he can attend to just at this time. Now, these appropriations are not excessive. We have the assurance that England has expended $700,000,000 for housing purposes for the laborers at the shipping yards and munition plants. This bill and the one that has heretofore been passed both together will only aggregate a little over $100,000,000.

That is a small sum compared with the results that we hope to obtain. I will repeat that I consider this the most important war measure that has been brought before us at the present session, and I sincerely hope that the bill will be passed at the earliest possible time. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, events of the greatest moment now taking place on the battle fields in France emphasize the emergency of this proposition. Under the able and efficient management of the Secretary of War we have succeeded in building up an admirable army of a million and a half men, who have been selected, mobilized, trained, and equipped in less than 12 months from the time of the declaration of war; we have great manufacturing plants in operation hourly turning out vast quantities of munitions for ourselves and our allies; our almost boundless fields of agriculture are being planted to food-producing crops; but, Mr. Chairman, these men, these munitions, and these foods can not help us win the war unless we can reach the Continent of Europe with them in time to prevent our allies from being overwhelmed by a vastly superior force.

In northern France the destiny of the civilized world hangs suspended in the balance because of the difficulties we must encounter in order to send relief before it is too late. The cry for relief comes to us from every quarter; the shipyards and munitions plants are congested on account of the inadequacy of the housing facilities for the workmen now engaged, and many additional thousands must be employed to carry on this work; the clerical force here at the National Capital can not be suitably lodged at this time, and thousands more must come; the shipyards, the powder and gun works, the motor truck and aeroplane factories, all tell a similar tale. The labor necessary for the successful operation of all these industries can be secured as soon as suitable living quarters can be provided, but without such quarters they can not be operated to their full capacity in this most critical period. Mr. Chairman, the fate of the world and our future destiny are largely dependent upon this legislation.

I sincerely hope that it may be put through with the least possible delay. [Applause.]

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, in modern times wars are not won in a single battle or by any one line of effort. Modern warfare has developed into a science where the mobilization of men and munitions is only a part of the great game.

Industries, finances, and practically all the walks of life must be readjusted and protected from the encroachment of unusual and unnatural conditions. Other things being equal, the side wins to-day who can best and most efficiently mobilize not only its military strength and power but its natural resources and industries.

The financial strain of a modern warring nation is tremendous, and it can not be withstood if industrial life is paralyzed and the earning capacity and the means of earning the livelihood of its citizens is interfered with.

Every individual in this Republic should be busy at something; if not engaged in so-called "war activities" he should be engaged in a profit-making pursuit of some kind in order that we may make the most of our powerful industrial strength from which may be drawn the revenue to sustain the financial strain of the war.

At the outset of these remarks, Mr. Chairman, I am willing to concede that there may be a few classes of industries of the United States that could well suspend, or practically so, until the war is over. If there be such industries they are the ones whose employees can be readily set to other tasks. I find a very wide difference of opinion not only among Members of Congress but among others connected with the administration of public affairs in this country to-day as to the advisability of declaring certain industries "nonessential" to the winning of the war and discouraging them in their operation and development.

The Secretary of the Treasury, the Hon. William Gibbs McAdoo, on whose shoulders rests largely the responsibility of financing this war, on February 5, 1918, gave out the following statement:

> Because of the interest of the Treasury Department in the conservation of capital and credit during the period of the war, I have received several inquiries as to whether building operations of one kind and another should be discouraged. With regard to plans for public buildings under the control of this department, I have stopped letting contracts except in cases where they were absolutely necessary.
> Home building is an excellent thing in normal times, but at present, unless there is a real shortage of houses for war workers, I strongly advise that materials, valuable labor, and credit be not utilized for this purpose. Whether homes should be built should be determined strictly by the urgency of the need.

Also, on February 27 the same gentleman, in explanation of his statement of February 5, directed a letter to Frank W. Conner, Esq., Washington, D. C., which is as follows:

> You have asked me for an elaboration of my statement concerning the desirability of restricting at this time unnecessary building operations.
> It is only by subordinating local and personal interests to the general welfare, and by enforcing the most rigid economy in matters of public and private enterprises, as well as in matters of personal expenditure, that the United States can hope to bear its part of the financial burden of the war and to release sufficient labor and materials for war purposes without depletion of our own resources.
> It is impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule as to what every patriotic citizen should do in order to live up to his duty in this connection. Things that are necessary for the life and health of the people must, of course, be procured. So it is with the building of homes. It is obvious that it is unnecessary for me to elaborate the point that building operations absorb the very materials and the very class of labor and the very kind of money that the Government requires most urgently at this time.
> Where it is a question of building a new home simply because it would afford greater comfort, the operation should not be undertaken. Where it is a question of need—be it on account of sanitary conditions or because without such new construction other operations essential at this time for the welfare of the country would suffer—there is no doubt that the work should be undertaken. This applies equally to construction work in cities and towns and in farming districts.
> Everybody should weigh conscientiously in his own mind whether or not it is his own comfort and convenience or the national welfare that moves him in his purposes. If that is done honestly, I do not think there will be any doubt as to the proper course to be pursued in each case.

I am also informed that the Capital Issues Committee of the Federal Reserve Board, with which the Secretary of the Treasury is affiliated, advised all Federal reserve banks, as well as all banking institutions, to husband their financial resources for war credit and war purposes to the extent of discouraging loans and financial assistance for all building and other so-called "nonessential" projects.

If it is essential to the winning of this war, and if our chances of winning it would be increased by the carrying out of these suggestions, I do not think that any patriotic man or class of men should be heard to complain, because, gentlemen, we can not overlook anything that is essential to our success in this great struggle.

It is therefore not my purpose to indulge in criticism of anyone connected with the present governmental activities, but to briefly call your attention to the effect that these orders or suggestions have had upon the industrial life of the country and to especially direct your attention to their effect upon the great limestone industry of the State of Indiana, a large part of which is in the district which I have the honor to represent.

The oolitic limestone industry of Indiana is one of the great industries of this Republic, and is practically limited to the counties of Lawrence and Monroe, in the State of Indiana. In those two counties it represents a direct investment of $10,000,000 and consists of 42 firms operating quarries and mills. The annual output in normal times from these two counties alone is from 20,000 to 30,000 carloads of limestone, and they normally employ about 5,000 men.

Indiana limestone has for many years enjoyed nation-wide markets. This Government has for a generation or more favored Indiana limestone in 75 per cent of all its permanent building operations, because from long tests and actual experience it has been demonstrated that the limestone of this district is superior in quality to any competing stone, considering its availability and price.

I here desire to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a table prepared by the Government Geological Department showing the States and Territories into which the product of the quarries of this district have gone during the year 1917 and the value of such production:

	Cubic feet sold by mills (who buy rough stone).	Value.	Cubic feet sold by quarrymen (rough stone and stone milled by the quarrymen).	Value.	Total cubic feet.

From this it will be observed that there are but 7 States out of the 48 that did not use Indiana limestone during last year.

While Indiana is a great consumer of limestone, the large amount sold in Indiana, as is shown by the above table, is in part due to the fact that it was sold by quarrymen to independent mill operators within the State.

I also desire to insert as a part of my remarks another table prepared for me by the Government Geological Department, showing additional facts and figures as to the amount of limestone produced in each of the counties of Monroe and Lawrence, in the State of Indiana, in both of the years 1916 and 1917:

From this it will be observed that during the year 1917 there was a decrease in production but an increase in value over the year 1916. This condition is largely due to the increased cost of labor and machinery.

Picture, if you can, gentlemen, these 42 mammoth mills and quarries, employing their thousands of men, dotting the beautiful hillsides of this great portion of the State so wonderfully blessed by nature! Picture the thousands of happy, contented homes, where, owing to steady employment at good wages, the head of the house was enabled to not only shelter, feed, and clothe and educate his children, but to enjoy all the comforts and many of the luxuries of life, and incidentally to be able to buy liberty bonds and in a hundred ways contribute to the revenues of the Government that are required to finance this war. That was the condition in this prosperous community prior to the time that the production of stone, except in certain excepted lines, was declared as "nonessential." The business of these communities depended upon the pay rolls of the quarries and mills; the laborers built their homes in the building and loan, and I am glad to say that most of them own their own homes. A more thrifty, intelligent, industrious, and patriotic class of men never lived than the stone quarrymen of this district. They met the first calls of this Government for war purposes heroically.

To-day 2,000 men, I am informed, have left this community, trying to find work, work no doubt that they are not suited for. Many of them have spent a lifetime in becoming efficient in this particular line of duty and it is difficult for them now to be torn away from their life-long pursuits and to become accustomed to new avocations of life. Probably not more than a thousand men are now employed in the stone business in this field. The quarries and mills are probably running 20 per cent capacity. There are at least, I am informed, 2,000 idle men who refuse to leave their homes and families and go out into the world of uncertainty to start life anew. The loan associations must foreclose their mortgages, because they must pay the banks or the banks must fail; the merchant must discontinue credit to his customers who have always been able to pay. I am told that bread lines and soup houses, if not there now, are only avoided by the splendid charity of public-spirited citizens.

Some one in bitterness has said that it is apparently the intention of some men in charge of governmental affairs to-day to conscript capital by taxation and to conscript labor by starvation. I do not believe this statement; I do not think there is a man connected with this Government to-day who seriously entertains such views or would dare to even attempt to put them into practice. The high cost of living has been a terrible problem to the laboring man. I have studied his condition closely and I am one of those who rejoices to-day in the splendid patriotism and sacrifices of the toilers of the Nation. If you will give him a chance to make a living for himself and his family and "keep the wolf from the door," he will help you "whip the Kaiser"; but, frankly, I would fear the consequences if hunger were permitted to gnaw the vitals of the great laboring class who produce the wealth of this Nation.

This stone in this district is for the most part quarried and milled by hydroelectric power. Very little fuel is required in this industry. The Government is now erecting a great many permanent buildings other than post-office buildings. The manufacturers of imitation stone, terra cotta, and brick have the ear of those in charge of Federal building operations. The terra cotta fellows seem to be the favorites. Terra cotta and imitation stone require the use of a great amount of fuel, since both products are baked in ovens. The Indiana limestone mills can produce building blocks or building bricks of uniform size quicker than any of those competitors can produce either of the other products. There can be no comparison in the durability of the material and but inconsequential difference in the price.

The other day, in seeking relief for this distressed condition of the people of my district, I sought the help of Secretary McAdoo. He was patient and kind; he was, no doubt, astonished at the havoc the "nonessential" propaganda was creating in this great industrial center. Mr. McAdoo expressed his deep regret for these conditions, reexpressed his faith in the soundness of the "nonessential" principle, and at the same time expressed the hope that "the poise of industry would be maintained"; and then he asked, "What can I do to help them?" I replied that a modification of the declarations made was not only proper but absolutely essential. I do not contend that it is of first importance that jewelry shall be manufactured; that sporting goods be produced; that fancy luxuries be indulged in; or that building operations or credit essential to these luxury-making enterprises be encouraged; but I do take the position that hundreds of different building operations necessary and essential in peace times are likewise essential and important in time of war and that credit and money and labor so employed is not wasted, but, on the contrary, opens up an avenue for Federal taxation and strengthens the industrial life of the country, which I regard as essential to the winning of the war.

Yesterday I called upon the director of housing, who will probably spend the money provided for in this bill. He is now building homes for employees at Trenton, N. J., and at Hog Island, Pa. He states that they are using brick, but that they will probably use limestone from this district for the door and window sills. Now, the manufacture of ordinary brick occasions the use of fuel in great quantities, while the quarrying and sawing of stone in this district is largely done by hydroelectric power.

If this bill passes, and I hope it will, it should be seen to that Indiana limestone is used wherever it is practicable.

In the consideration of this problem it must be understood that a territory devoted to quarrying of limestone is not fitted for agriculture, and it is also true that, for the most part, the entire population of the cities of Bedford and Bloomington, which are the beautiful county seats of Lawrence and Monroe Counties, respectively, and much of the surrounding community, is absolutely dependent upon the stone industry. An expert stonecutter or quarryman, as I am informed, is rarely fitted for any other pursuit. This makes the blow fall heavily upon this community. Brick, terra cotta, and artificial stone, being manufactured products, are not limited to any particular community. It certainly should be the aim of those in charge of building activities of the Government to use the product of this quarrying district where it is at all practicable, and it is largely for the purpose of impressing this important fact upon the minds of you gentlemen and others to whom this information may go that I have spoken so much at length at this time.

In addition to my efforts in the direction spoken of, I have walked many miles through the labyrinth of corridors and oak-desked war offices in the multitude of war-activity buildings in this District trying to induce the various War Department heads to locate some kind of war activity in this stricken district or to let a contract for the making of some kind of war materials to some of the enterprising people of this community, but I have discovered that most of the war activities have gone South and the war contracts have gone South or East.

In desperation the owners of these large, idle mills, some of them nearly a thousand feet long and a hundred feet wide, equipped with derricks and cranes for moving heavy materials, have appealed to the Quartermaster General's Department and other departments for the privilege of leasing these mammoth sheds to the Government for storage purposes. I am not even hopeful that this will be done, and, in my opinion, whatever relief is to come to these people must come in the way of using Indiana limestone for Government building purposes and in the broadening of the policy of the Government with reference to a modification of its present attitude on "nonessential" industries.

I am conscious of the fact that the "nonessential" propaganda effort, if it may be so styled, has not only affected the Indiana limestone district but has paralyzed the building trades of the whole Nation. I do not have at hand the figures as to the number of men out of employment in the United States at this time, when labor is reputed as being so scarce and so valuable and high priced, but I have heard an estimate of the number so unemployed and it is truly appalling.

We are told that from actual experience abroad it has been ascertained that it requires seven persons in industry to support one soldier at the front. In the case we have a United States Military Establishment of 3,000,000 men it would mean 21,000,000 men mobilized in our industrial army. What do you intend to do with those who are so unfortunate as not to be able to participate in war activities? Will it not eventually pauperize and bankrupt the Nation? Should it be our aim to run this war on moneys already earned, or should we have as a source of revenue supply a great, active industrial army of prosperous, busy people? England and Germany have not paralyzed their industries, but are permitting them to run at full blast with labor not required for war service, and then they tax these industries to the very limit, having regard only for the continued life and tax-paying ability of these institutions.

Another view of this whole industry-destroying situation:

Some day, and we hope in the near future, this war will be over, and we will be called upon to return to the pursuits of peace. Industrial conflict and competition between the enemy and allied nations, unequaled in all history, will be the great problem of the world. What chance will we have in this conflict if our mills and factories have rotted to the ground; if their army of intelligent, skilled employees, through necessity, have wandered away from where they can give the best account of themselves? I am not contending that industries not directly connected with producing war equipment should be preferred, but it is my contention that it is essential, not only to the winning of the war but to the future welfare of our Nation, that these great wealth producers should be kept in motion.

Some days ago I received a petition signed by some of the leading and best business men of the counties of Lawrence and Monroe, representing most of the great industries affected by the present deplorable condition, and I desire at this point to make the same, together with the signatures, a part of my remarks upon this subject:

Whereas the communities of Monroe and Lawrence Counties, Ind., are in effect entirely dependent on the Indiana limestone industry so far as their existence and welfare is concerned; and
Whereas the curtailment of commercial building activities has all but annihilated the opportunities of said industry to continue its ordinary activities, thereby depriving thousands of men of their means of earning a livelihood, thus reducing to a negligible point the ability of these communities to sustain themselves; and
Whereas the labor in these communities is not generally in a position to transfer its efforts to other localities, nor the employers, merchants, and direct as well as indirect commercial establishments, as a result, in a position to guard against threatened disintegration; and
Whereas the public welfare demands that in a measure circulation in commercial channels be reestablished, which it is believed can be brought about by activities contributing to the success of our war operations: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the undersigned organizations, through their duly accredited representatives, do hereby urgently pray the Senators of the State of Indiana, the Congressmen representing Monroe and Lawrence Counties, as also the entire congressional delegation of the State of Indiana, to intercede in behalf of these communities, to the end that their needs be recognized without delay and opportunity extended either to assist in the prosecution of the war by manufacture of war supplies or by enabling the Indiana limestone industry to secure for its product a reasonable percentage of the permanent construction work for which vast sums are now being expended by practically every department of the Federal Government.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this bill is one that meets with my hearty approbation. I think, however, that there should be some changes made in it in order to accomplish a purpose that I have in mind. I understand from the chairman of this committee, in private conversation, that there is an amendment that will be offered by the committee that will no doubt include the things I have in mind.

I think the language of the bill should be broad enough to cover arsenals and other permanent plants of the United States having to do with Army and Navy activities, and I understand from the chairman of the committee that such amendments will be offered.

The reason I think this is true is on account of some personal experience I have had lately that impressed this on my mind. The district I represent lies in the western part of Illinois, along the Mississippi River. In the northern end of the district is the county of Rock Island, and in this county is located the great arsenal of Rock Island. It is one of two arsenals in the United States where small arms are made, the other one being at Springfield, Mass. This arsenal is ideally located on an island in the Mississippi River. When this war broke out we had working there about 1,600 men. As soon as the war broke out and the appropriations were made, so that the institution could develop, it began to develop.

We have appropriated in this Congress for the use of that institution over $8,000,000, and it is being used, and much of it has been expended there. We are also contemplating in the Army appropriation bill large additional sums to be expended there.

Around this island are three cities. Over in Iowa, in Mr. HULL'S district, is the city of Davenport, a city of 50,000 population. On my side are the cities of Rock Island and Moline, cities of about 25,000 inhabitants each.

Under ordinary circumstances, before the war broke out, these cities were able to house the employees that were there. They were small cities, compactly built, with adequate room for expansion, it is true, but at that time there was no particular reason for extraordinary expansion. But from the time the war broke out up to this time, gentlemen, the employees and laborers at that island have increased from 1,600 to approximately 16,000, and there are to-day on this island working from day to day something between 15,000 and 16,000 men.

There is no place to take care of them. Men come in there day after day and walk the streets trying to find some place to live in, and where they do not find some place to live they go back to the community from which they came, and immediately the word gets out that there is no place at Rock Island for these workers, and consequently the thing that the Government has tried to do is not accomplished, because you can not get these men in there on account of a lack of places in which they can live.

Now, those men have got to be taken care of. Plans are on foot now for the increase of that establishment up there until they can work on the island approximately 20,000 men. These men are making all kinds of necessary war munitions. They are making leather goods of all kinds; they are making mess kits of all kinds; they are making Springfield rifles; they are making guns for the Field Artillery; they are making projectiles for the field guns, and starting a large plant for the manufacture of small-arms ammunition. It is very essential that this institution, in the center of the country, in an ideal location for an institution of this kind, be built up, and it ought to run at full blast. As I have told you, it is one of the two places where the United States Government can make its own guns, the other being Springfield, Mass.

Now, I want to impress upon the gentlemen of this committee, if such a thing is necessary, the absolute necessity of taking care of these workmen. I am advised, and I think properly so, that arrangements have already been made by the Department of Labor for the doing to some extent of this thing that we are trying to do by this bill. In other words, the Department of Labor has plans that it has outlined and its agents have been making investigations, going around through the cities of Rock Island and Moline and Davenport getting information, trying to find out about these things, and these reports have come in to the department and the plans are perfected. That is one reason, and I think the best reason that could be advanced, why I believe the Department of Labor ought to have control of this situation. It is largely a temporary matter, and yet I want to call the attention of the committee to one fact. I do not know whether this suggestion is wise or not, but it seems to me that it may be. It seems to me it would be a good thing to amend this bill so as to include arsenals or permanent institutions of the United States, and to provide that the buildings that those places shall be permanent where the Government establishment is permanent. It seems to me that in such cases the Secretary of Labor ought to have the right to make these buildings permanent, so that they may be used by the Government in the future. Take the case of the arsenal at Rock Island. There is not a single housing place on the island, which consists of about 1,000 acres. There is no place there for the housing of employees.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state that the bill does provide for the construction of permanent buildings where the community is a permanent one.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Perhaps that language has escaped my notice. I observed particularly the language that the buildings should be temporary. If the bill is broad enough, so that the buildings may be made permanent where the establishment is permanent, then my criticism is unfounded. As a matter of fact, the Secretary of Labor ought to have the power to use his judgment about that sort of thing. He can conserve the financial part of it by making the buildings permanent in places where they ought to be permanent, as, for instance, at Rock Island. There are a few barracks for soldiers there, but in ordinary times there are only 100 or 200 soldiers there, while now there are several thousand of them, besides all these employees working there.

To illustrate the hardships that are entailed by this influx of men who are trying to work there, where they have not adequate housing facilities and where they can not get back and forth, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] recently mentioned on the floor of the House the situation that had arisen concerning the means of transportation, where the Army had used a large number of the cars in getting the employees back and forth to and from the island. Of course, they all have to go on street cars or jitney busses in getting back and forth.

The Navy, in order to take care of the employees of an institution that is making guns at East Moline, came in and requisitioned a large number of the cars, and took possession of them. As a consequence there was a great conflict of authority, and nobody knew from day to day how the men were to get back and forth. That is all occasioned by this condition of congestion that I speak of.

I suggest that buildings ought to be put up there to take care of these men, so that they can be housed when they come, and so that they will come there. The principal trouble is that they will not come when they learn that there are no facilities there for taking care of them. We could get plenty of men there to work in the manufacture of these necessary things if we had some place to take care of them. I know that propositions have been made by our chambers of commerce in those towns to the Government departments that the people there will even pay a part of the expense of the housing in those communities, if the Government will take hold of the thing promptly and appropriate the necessary balance.

Now, I do not want to weary the House, I have stated what I wanted to say about it in as few words as I could. I want to impress on the committee the necessity and importance of hurrying up this thing and doing something about it and doing it soon. Instead of spending two days haggling over a seed bill, which, if it passes, may be too late to do any good, you ought to do something of this kind which is important, something that will help win the war instead of wasting our time on trivialities. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, how much time has been used on both sides?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has 23 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Florida 28 minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the committee rose and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10265, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately on the passage of the bond bill this bill (H. R. 10265) be taken up and be made a continuing order until disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the bond bill this bill be taken up and made a continuing order until completed. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. Reserving the right to object, may I inquire what the purpose of the gentleman is? Is it to take up this bill to-morrow or Monday?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I understand that the bond bill will be taken up to-morrow and possibly be disposed of to-morrow, and this bill will follow that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

THIRD LIBERTY LOAN.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to file the report of the Ways and Means Committee on what is known as the third liberty bond authorization by 12 o'clock to-night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to file the report on the bond bill by 12 o'clock to-night. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the bill to be reported by the committee available to Members at the present time?

Mr. KITCHIN. It will be at 9 o'clock to-morrow morning. It is an amendment to the present bond act.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any objection to incorporating the bill with the report in the RECORD, so that Members may have it before them?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; and I will ask unanimous consent to do that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to file his report by midnight. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The second request of the gentleman is that the bond bill with the report may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

A bill (H. R. 11123) to amend an act approved September 24, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes."

Be it enacted, etc., That the first section of the act approved September 24, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes," be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized to borrow, from time to time, on the credit of the United States for the purposes of this act, and to meet expenditures authorized for the national security and defense and other public purposes authorized by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $12,000,000,000, and to issue therefor bonds of the United States, in addition to the $2,000,000,000 bonds already issued or offered for subscription under authority of the act approved April 24, 1917, entitled 'An act to authorize an issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes': Provided, That of this sum of $3,063,945,460 shall be in lieu of that amount of the unissued bonds authorized by sections 1 and 4 of the act approved April 24, 1917, $225,000,000 shall be in lieu of that amount of the unissued bonds authorized by section 39 of the act approved August 5, 1909, $150,000,000 shall be in lieu of the unissued bonds authorized by the joint resolution approved March 4, 1917, and $100,000,000 shall be in lieu of the unissued bonds authorized by section 400 of the act approved March 3, 1917.

"The bonds herein authorized shall be in such form or forms and denomination or denominations and subject to such terms and conditions of issue conversion, redemption, maturities, payment, and rate or rates of interest, not exceeding 4¼ per cent per annum, and time or times of payment of interest, as the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time at or before the issue thereof may prescribe. The principal and interest thereof shall be payable in United States gold coin of the present standard of value.

"The bonds herein authorized shall from time to time first be offered at not less than par as a popular loan, under such regulations, prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time, as will in his opinion give the people of the United States as nearly as may be an equal opportunity to participate therein, but he may make allotment in full upon application for smaller amounts of bonds in advance of any date which he may set for the closing of subscriptions and may reject or reduce allotments upon later applications and applications for larger amounts, and may reject or reduce allotments upon applications from incorporated banks and trust companies for their own account and make allotment in full or larger allotments to others, and may establish a graduated scale of allotments, and may from time to time adopt any or all of said methods, should any such action be deemed by him to be in the public interest: Provided That such reduction or increase of allotments of such bonds shall be made under general rules to be prescribed by said Secretary and shall apply to all subscribers similarly situated. And any portion of the bonds so offered and not taken may be otherwise disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury in such manner and at such price or prices, not less than par, as he may determine. The Secretary may make special arrangements for subscriptions at not less than par from persons in the military or naval forces of the United States, but any bonds issued to such persons shall be in all respects the same as other bonds of the same issue."

SEC. 2. That the last sentence of section 2 of said act approved September 24, 1917, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"For the purposes of this section there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,500,000,000, and in addition thereto the unexpended balance of the appropriations made by section 2 of said act approved April 24, 1917, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the authority granted by this section to the Secretary of the Treasury to establish credits for foreign Governments, as aforesaid, shall cease upon the termination of the war between the United States and the Imperial German Government."

SEC. 3. That section 4 of said act approved September 24, 1917, is hereby amended by adding two new paragraphs, as follows:

"That holders of bonds bearing interest at a higher rate than 4 per cent per annum, whether issued (a) under section 1, or (b) upon conversion of 4 per cent bonds issued under section 1, or (c) upon conversion of 3½ per cent bonds issued under said act approved April 24, 1917, or (d) upon conversion of 4 per cent bonds issued upon conversion of such 3½ per cent bonds, shall not be entitled to any privilege of conversion under or pursuant to this section or otherwise. The provisions of section 7 shall extend to all such bonds.

"If bonds bearing interest at a higher rate than 4 per cent per annum shall be issued before July 1, 1918, then any bonds bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum which shall, after July 1, 1918, and before the expiration of the conversion period prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, be presented for conversion into bonds bearing interest at such higher rate, shall be deemed to have been converted on the dates for the payment of the semiannual interest on the respective bonds so presented for conversion, last preceding the date of such presentation, and no adjustment of accrued interest shall be made in respect thereof."

SEC. 4. That the last sentence of section 5 of said act approved September 24, 1917, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"The sum of such certificates outstanding hereunder and under section 6 of said act approved April 24, 1917, shall not at any one time exceed in the aggregate $8,000,000,000."

SEC. 5. That section 7 of said act approved September 24, 1917, be, and is hereby, amended, by adding two new paragraphs, to read as follows:

"In determining the value of the shares of any national bank, State bank, trust company, or other banking institution, for the purpose of taxation by any State, or any of the possessions of the United States, or any local taxing authority, the par amount of any bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of the United States owned by such bank, trust company, or banking institution shall be deducted from its assets.

"If any part of this section shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder of this section but shall be confined in its operation to the part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered."

SEC. 6. That section 8 of said act approved September 24, 1917, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. That the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, is hereby authorized to deposit, in such incorporated banks and trust companies as he may designate, the proceeds, or any part thereof, arising from the sale of the bonds and certificates of indebtedness and war-savings certificates authorized by this act, and arising from the payment of income and excess-profits taxes, and such deposits shall bear such rate or rates of interest, and shall be secured in such manner, and shall be made upon and subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time prescribe: Provided, That the provisions of section 5191 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the Federal reserve act, and the amendments thereof, with reference to the reserves required to be kept by national banking associations and other member banks of the Federal Reserve System, shall not apply to deposits of public moneys by the United States in designated depositaries. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to designate depositaries in foreign countries with which shall be deposited all public money which it may be necessary or desirable to have on deposit in such countries to provide for current disbursements to the military and naval forces of the United States and to the diplomatic and consular and other representatives of the United States in and about such countries until six months after the termination of the war between the United States and the Imperial German Government, and to prescribe the terms and condition of such deposits."

SEC. 7. That said act approved September 24, 1917, is hereby amended by adding three new sections, to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. That any bonds of the United States bearing interest at a higher rate than 4 per cent per annum (whether issued under section 1 of this act or upon conversion of bonds issued under this act or under said act approved Apr. 24, 1917), which have been owned by any person continuously for at least six months prior to the date of his death, and which upon such date constitute part of his estate, shall, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, be receivable by the United States at par and accrued interest in payment of any estate or inheritance taxes imposed by the United States, under or by virtue of any present or future law, upon such estate or the inheritance thereof.

"SEC. 15. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, from time to time, until the expiration of one year after the termination of the war, to purchase bonds issued under authority of this act, including bonds issued upon conversion of bonds issued under this act or said act approved April 24 1917, at such prices and upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe. The par amount of bonds of any series issued before April 1, 1918, which may be purchased in the 12 months' period beginning April 1, 1918, and in each 12 months' period thereafter, shall not exceed one-twentieth of the amount of bonds of such series outstanding at the beginning of such 12 months' period. In the case of any series of bonds issued after April 1, 1918, the par amount of bonds of such series which may be purchased in the 12 months' period beginning on the date of such issue, and in each twelve months' period thereafter shall not exceed one-twentieth of the amount of the bonds of such series outstanding at the beginning of such 12 months' period. The average cost of the bonds of any series purchased in any such 12 months' period shall not exceed par and accrued interest.

"For the purposes of this section the Secretary of the Treasury shall set aside, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum not exceeding one-twentieth of the amount of such bonds issued before April 1, 1918 and as and when any more such bonds are issued he shall set aside a sum not exceeding one-twentieth thereof. Whenever, by reason of purchases of bonds, as provided in this section, the amount so set aside falls below the sum which he deems necessary for the purposes of this section, the Secretary of the Treasury shall set aside such amount as he shall deem necessary, but not more than enough to bring the entire amount so set aside at such time up to one-twentieth of the amount of such bonds then outstanding. The amount so set aside by the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby appropriated for the purposes of this section, to be available until the expiration of one year after the termination of the war.

"The Secretary of the Treasury shall make to Congress at the beginning of each regular session a report including a detailed statement of the operations under this section.

"SEC. 16. That any of the bonds or certificates of indebtedness authorized by this act may be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury payable, principal and interest, in any foreign money or foreign moneys, as expressed in such bonds or certificates, but not also in United States gold coin, and he may dispose of such bonds or certificates in such manner and at such prices, not less than par, as he may determine, without compliance with the provisions of the third paragraph of section 1. In determining the amount of bonds and certificates issuable under this act the dollar equivalent of the amount of any bonds or certificates payable in foreign money or foreign moneys shall be determined by the par of exchange at the date of issue thereof, as estimated by the Director of the Mint and proclaimed by the Secretary of the Treasury, in pursuance of the provisions of section 25 of the act approved August 27, 1894, entitled 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.' The Secretary of the Treasury may designate depositaries in foreign countries with which may be deposited, as he may determine, all or any part of the proceeds of any bonds or certificates authorized by this act, payable in foreign money or foreign moneys."

SEC. 8. That the short title of this act shall be "Third liberty bond act."

[House Rept. No. 428, 65th Cong., 2d sess.]

Mr. KITCHIN, from the Committee on Ways and Means, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11123) to amend an act approved September 24, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign Governments, and for other purposes," having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House without amendment and recommend that the bill do pass.

At the present time our expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, are estimated to be $16,116,591,347.72 and our estimated receipts for the like period from all sources now provided by law are estimated to be $12,549,539,022, thus leaving a deficit at the close of the fiscal year of $3,567,052,325.72. It is also deemed necessary to provide for additional credit to our allies of $1,500,000,000 to enable the Government to extend them credit at the rate of $500,000,000 per month during the months of July, August, and September of the next fiscal year. There will therefore be required an additional bond authorization of $5,067,052,325.72, if the expenditures for the fiscal year 1918 are as great as the estimates and if we provide for the additional credit of $1,500,000,000 for our allies during the first three months of the next fiscal year, which seems necessary.

Your committee believes that the additional bond authorization of $4,461,054,540 carried by this bill, together with the authority granted the Secretary of the Treasury to issue short-term certificates of indebtedness, will be sufficient to provide the necessary funds for the present fiscal year and to extend credit to our allies as above indicated.

THE PROPOSED BOND BILL.

SECTION 1.—BOND AUTHORIZATION.

This section amends section 1 of the bond act of September 24, 1917, to increase the bond authorization under that act from $7,538,945,460 to $12,000,000,000. In other words, this proposed bill provides an additional authorization of $4,461,054,540. There are $3,666,233,850 of bonds authorized and available to be issued during the fiscal year 1918, under the authorization of September 24, 1917, so that the total amount of bonds available to be issued during the fiscal year 1918, under the act of September 24, 1917, as amended by this bill will be $8,127,288,390. It must be borne in mind that this amount does not include $63,945,460 of bonds authorized to be issued and applied in the fiscal year 1919 to redeem the loan of 1908–1918.

The act of April 24, 1917, as amended by the act of September 24, 1917, authorized the issue of $2,000,000,000 of bonds. The act of September 24, 1917, authorized the issue of $7,538,945,460 of bonds, in addition to the $2,000,000,000 authorized by the act of April 24, 1917.

The proposed bill authorizes the issue of $4,461,054,540 of bonds. If this bill becomes a law in its present form, the total bond authorizations since the declaration of war will amount to $14,000,000,000.

Under the act of April 24, 1917, $1,986,615,316.81 of bonds have been issued, and under the act of September 24, 1917, $3,808,766,150 of bonds have been sold. Of this amount $3,807,724,858.73 had been paid into the Treasury on March 27, 1918. The total bonds sold to date, under the acts of April 24, 1917, and September 24, 1917, aggregate $5,795,381,466.81.

Section 1 of the proposed bill amends section 1 of the bond act of September 24, 1917, as follows:

1. By increasing the bond authorization from $7,538,945,460 to $12,000,000,000, or $4,461,054,540. For the third liberty loan the Secretary of the Treasury proposes to issue $3,000,000,000 of bonds, reserving the right to allot oversubscriptions. The proposed increase in the issue will make it possible to allot all subscriptions in full upon the third liberty loan and leave a substantial margin of bonds for a future issue.

2. By increasing the maximum interest upon the bonds to 4¼ per cent.

SECTION 2.—CREDITS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

This section amends the last sentence of section 2 of the bond act of September 24, 1917, by increasing the appropriation for loans to the allies from $4,000,000,000 to $5,500,000,000, or $1,500,000,000.

The existing appropriation of $4,000,000,000, together with the appropriation of $3,000,000,000 in the act of April 24, 1917, was calculated to provide the requirements of the allies in this country to the end of the current fiscal year; that is, the year ending June 30, 1918. Such requirements of the allies will be within the estimates. The proposed additional appropriation would provide for their requirements at the same rate for the months of July, August, and September.

In the acts of April 24, 1917, and September 24, 1917, we appropriated $7,000,000,000 for loans to the allies, and this bill proposes to add to that amount $1,500,000,000, thus authorizing total loans to the allies amounting to $8,500,000,000.

The following table shows the credits and loans made to foreign countries to and including March 26, 1918:

Loans to foreign Governments to and including Mar. 26, 1918.

[Acts of Apr. 24, 1917, and Sept. 24, 1917.]

Country.	Credits established.	Loans made.	Balances under established credits.
Belgium	$104,600,000	$85,900,000	$18,700,000
Cuba	15,000,000		15,000,000
France	1,440,000,000	1,405,000,000	35,000,000
Great Britain	2,520,000,000	2,480,000,000	40,000,000
Italy	550,000,000	480,000,000	70,000,000
Russia	325,000,000	187,729,750	137,270,250
Serbia	6,000,000	4,200,000	1,800,000
Total	4,960,600,000	4,642,829,750	317,770,250

NOTE.—In addition to the above, a credit of 250,000,000 francs or approximately $44,000,000 in favor of the Greek Government has been agreed to but not yet formally established, and a credit of $8,663,666 was arranged in favor of the Roumanian Government, the precise status of which and the drafts thereunder is not definitely determined.

SECTION 3.—BOND CONVERSION.

This section amends section 4 of the bond act of September 24, 1917, by adding two new paragraphs which provide that the holders of bonds bearing interest at a higher rate than 4 per cent shall not have the privilege of conversion, but that the provisions of section 7 of the act of September 24, 1917, relating to tax exemption shall extend to them.

In order to prevent trouble in connection with the conversions which will result from the issue of 4¼ per cent bonds, and because of the impossibility of making these conversions promptly at the date of the issue of the new bonds of the third liberty loan, it is proposed in this section to treat all conversions made within the six months' period prescribed for conversions by the Secretary of the Treasury as though they had been made on May 15 in the case of the bonds of the second liberty loan or on June 15 in the case of the conversion bonds of the first liberty loan. Inasmuch as the holders of the bonds of both of these issues have everything to gain and nothing to lose by the conversion, it may be assumed that all of them will wish to make the conversion and to make it promptly. By virtue of this section they would lose nothing by waiting a month or two to present their bonds for conversion. This provision will greatly relieve the burden that would be thrown upon the banks and trust companies of the country, the Treasury Department, and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing if all conversions had to be made contemporaneously with the issue of the bonds of the new loan.

There are out now more than 20,000,000 separate bonds, and one can imagine what the conversion of those into the new issue will mean, and therefore it is deemed important not to restrict the Secretary of the Treasury in such a way that those conversions must be placed upon a given day or within a limited period of time.

The 4 per cent bonds are now convertible into a subsequent issue bearing a higher rate, and the 3½ per cent are also convertible. This proposed 4¼ per cent bond will not be convertible.

SECTION 4.—THE ISSUE OF CERTIFICATES OF INDEBTEDNESS.

This section amends the last sentence of section 5 of the bond act of September 24, 1917, by increasing the limit upon the amount of certificates of indebtedness that may be outstanding at any one time from $4,000,000,000 to $8,000,000,000.

The amount of Treasury certificates now outstanding is about $3,200,000,000. The existing authorization of $4,000,000,000 will, therefore, be exhausted by the middle of April. While there is no reason to anticipate that so large an amount as $8,000,000,000 of Treasury certificates will be required to provide for the necessities of the Government before another loan can be advantageously offered, nevertheless it is apparent that the Treasury ought to be placed in a position where it can provide for the current needs of the Government from month to month for a reasonable period in advance. These certificates can not run for more than a year, and the money raised by the issue of them can not be spent except for purposes approved by Congress.

These certificates of indebtedness are issued only to bridge over the interval between the liberty loans, and as soon as the liberty loan is placed Treasury certificates are retired, or they are issued in anticipation of taxes which are payable in June, and the moment the taxes are paid in, these certificates are retired, so that they are not an outstanding indebtedness all the time; they are merely means employed, and an essential means, of temporarily financing the needs of the Treasury.

In view of the above it is evident that in speaking of our authorized bonded debt, it is not proper to add to the $14,000,000,000 of bonds authorized since the declaration of war, the certificates of indebtedness authorized, since they can not be issued for a longer period than one year, and since the only purpose that they serve is to bridge over the periods between liberty loans or the payment of income and excess-profits taxes.

SECTION 5.—INDIRECT TAXATION BY STATES OF LIBERTY BONDS.

All the liberty-bond acts have provided that the bonds shall be exempt from State and local taxation. Your committee is advised that notwithstanding this provision certain States are indirectly taxing these bonds by including the value of such bonds in determining the value of the capital stock for taxation purposes. This condition raises a very serious question, because if the States are permitted to tax Government bonds, when the Federal Government can not tax municipal and State bonds, the Federal Government will soon be placed in a position where it can not provide the necessary money to finance this war.

It has been suggested that States ought not to be deprived of taxes they are enjoying on Government bonds already issued. As a matter of fact, the States have not had that source of revenue heretofore, and it has never been supposed they would get anything from the taxation of Government bonds, and they are not being deprived of anything to which they are entitled. Your committee believes that we ought to make it perfectly clear that the States must not begin to derive revenue from the taxation of Government bonds or certificates of indebtedness in order that there will be no difficulty in the future about it.

To meet this situation this section amends section 7 of the bond act of September 24, 1917, by adding the following paragraph:

"In determining the value of the shares of any national bank, State bank, trust company, or other banking institution for the purpose of taxation by any State, or any of the possessions of the United States, or any local taxing authority, the par amount of any bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of the United States owned by such bank, trust company, or banking institution, shall be deducted from its assets.

SECTION 6.—PERMISSION TO DEPOSIT INCOME AND EXCESS-PROFITS TAXES WITH QUALIFIED DEPOSITARY BANKS AND TRUST COMPANIES.

This section amends section 8 of the bond act of September 24, 1917, to provide for the deposit of the income and excess-profits taxes with qualified depositary banks and trust companies in the same manner as the proceeds of liberty bonds. Your committee believes that the enactment of this provision will go a long way toward relieving the fear of a money disturbance which the banks feel in connection with the large payments of these taxes, which must be made on or about June 15. The machinery for dealing with the deposit of liberty-bond payments has been completed, and about 4,000 banks and trust companies have qualified as depositaries.

SECTION 7.—ESTATE TAXES PAYABLE WITH 4½ PER CENT BONDS.

This section provides that a new section 14 shall be added to the act of September 24, 1917, so that 4½ per cent bonds shall be acceptable in payment of United States estate or inheritance taxes at par and accrued interest, if owned by a decedent, for at least six months prior to the date of his death. Your committee believes that this provision will be a very substantial attraction to induce the purchase of these bonds, and that it will give assurance to every bondholder that in case of his death his estate will contain assets which the United States will accept at par, whatever be the market conditions at the time, in payment of the taxes upon the estate.

Your committee believes that this provision will also have a very beneficial effect upon the general market for Government bonds, because it will then keep in the market a constant demand for them.

SECTION 7.—TO STABILIZE THE MARKET FOR GOVERNMENT BONDS.

This section also provides for the addition of another new section (sec. 15) to the act of September 24, 1917, to provide a means to create a sinking fund to buy Government bonds issued or converted since September 24, 1917, in order to stabilize the market for Government bonds. Your committee believes that this Government must do what each of the warring countries have done in one form or another, and prepare itself to support the market for its bonds.

This new section provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall set aside, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum not exceeding one-twentieth of the amount of bonds issued or converted since September 24, 1917, and before April 1, 1918, and as and when any more bonds are issued that he shall set aside a sum not exceeding one-twentieth of the amount of such bonds issued.

This section further provides that whenever by reason of purchases of bonds the amount so set aside falls below the sum which the Secretary of the Treasury deems necessary, that he may set aside such amount as he shall deem necessary, but not more than enough to bring the entire amount so set aside at such time up to one-twentieth of the amount of bonds issued or converted since September 24, 1917.

This section appropriates the amount so set aside for this purpose, to be available until the expiration of one year after the termination of the war.

This section also provides that the par amount of bonds of any series issued before April 1, 1918, which may be purchased in the 12 months' period beginning April 1, 1918, and in each 12 months' period thereafter, shall not exceed one-twentieth of the amount of bonds of such series outstanding at the beginning of such 12 months' period, and that in the case of any series of bonds issued after April 1, 1918, the par amount of bonds of such series which may be purchased in the 12 months' period beginning on the date of such issue, and in each 12 months' period thereafter, shall not exceed one-twentieth of the amount of the bonds of such series outstanding at the beginning of such 12 months' period. The average cost of the bonds of any series purchased in any such 12 months' period can not exceed par and accrued interest.

If all the 3½ per cent bonds were converted to 4s as the 3½ and 4 per cent bonds now sold aggregate $5,796,000,000, the most that could be set aside for the purpose of this sinking fund at the present time would be $289,800,000.

SECTION 7.—PERMISSION TO ISSUE BONDS AND CERTIFICATES OF INDEBTEDNESS IN FOREIGN MONEYS.

This section also provides for the addition of another new section (sec. 16) to the act of September 24, 1917, to permit the issue of bonds payable in foreign moneys. This provision, it is believed, will make it possible for the Secretary of the Treasury to take steps to rectify the position of dollar exchange in those neutral countries where the dollar is at a disadvantage to-day.

The theory is that if we can sell some Government bonds in foreign countries, especially in those neutral countries where the balance is against us and where our exchange position is disadvantageous, we may be able to correct it or modify it to our advantage.

This section also permits the Secretary of the Treasury to sell bonds or certificates of indebtedness payable in foreign moneys without offering them as a popular loan in the United States and to deposit in foreign countries with depositaries the proceeds from any such bonds or certificates. Your committee believe that this provision will greatly facilitate the negotiations which the Treasury Department must enter into in order to relieve foreign exchange problems.

SECTION 8.—SHORT TITLE OF THE ACT.

This section provides that the short title of the act shall be "third liberty bond act."

[1] Includes payments from allotments from "National security and defense."
[2] The balance of the appropriation of $100,000,000 for "National security and defense" has been allotted to other departments and bureaus; expenditures from allotments are included in the expenditures of the various departments and offices.
[3] This appropriation was allotted to departments and offices, and is included in their estimated expenditures.
[4] This figure includes the estimated expense of loans authorized but not yet issued, but does not include the cost of any issues yet to be authorized.

NOTE.—In certain cases where the estimated expenditure exceeds the total estimated appropriations, the difference is due to expected payments from balances of appropriation brought forward from prior years.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 23, 1918.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I have been requested by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] to state that he is detained at home by important war work; that if he had been here to-day when the so-called Baer bill was under consideration he would have voted for the bill.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 133. Joint resolution authorizing the granting of insurance under the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended by the act approved October 6, 1917, on application by a person other than the person to be insured.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, March 30, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. KITCHIN, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11123) to amend an act approved September 24, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign Governments, and for other purposes," reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 428), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1218) for the relief of Alfred E. Lewis, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 425), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4057) for the relief of Edward Johnson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 426), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3682) for the relief of Asbury Scrivener, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 427), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MONTAGUE: A bill (H. R. 11121) to reimburse the city of Richmond, Va., for expenditures incurred in the preparation and equipment of grounds for the mobilization and encampment of certain organizations of the National Guard of Virginia in pursuance of the order of the Secretary of War, and for housing and caring for certain soldiers or troops of the United States; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. JONES of Texas: A bill (H. R. 11122) to amend section 4 of the act to regulate commerce, passed February 4, 1887, and subsequent amendments thereof; and to abolish what it known as water-competition rates; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. KITCHIN: A bill (H. R. 11123) to amend an act approved September 24, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign Governments, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. TREADWAY: Resolution (H. Res. 296) requesting certain information from the Postmaster General; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. PRICE: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 272) authorizing and directing the President of the United States to so amend the selective-service regulations as to place in a deferred classification all registrants who are bona-fide farmers or farm laborers, including owners and managers of farms and overseers of farm operations and laborers regularly employed thereunder, and to formulate regulations for special "food-producing classification lists" by the local boards and prescribing that the classification of such registrant shall not be changed so long as he shall be engaged in such occupation, except that so long as he remains on the "food-producing classification list," he shall be regarded as not available for military service, and in all respects as though he stood classified in class five; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BARNHART: A bill (H. R. 11124) granting a pension to Emma Chandonia; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 11125) granting an increase of pension to William D. McLaughlin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CANTRILL: A bill (H. R. 11126) granting a pension to Ella Forbes; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11127) granting an increase of pension to John T. Burton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 11128) granting an increase of pension to Jesse Hallcome; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11129) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Thacker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RANDALL: A bill (H. R. 11130) granting a pension to Thomas G. Cockings; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. VARE: A bill (H. R. 11131) granting an increase of pension to Dennis P. Parker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11132) granting an increase of pension to Christopher C. Olewiler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WINGO: A bill (H. R. 11133) granting an increase of pension to James A. Brown; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. EMERSON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 271) to pay damages to Roberta McKenzie Osborne; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerks' desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of International Association of Fire Fighters, indorsing all efforts to further democracy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Methodist Episcopal Church of O'Fallon, Mo.; members of Red Cross of Kirkman, Iowa; and Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Wright City, Mo., favoring war prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also (by request), petition of Narrow Grove Cooperative Farm Club of Gorin, Mo., and members of Walker Farm Club, of Macon County, Mo., against lowering the price of corn; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. CARY: Resolution of the Wisconsin Furniture Dealers' Association, protesting against the passage of House bill 9683; to the Committee on Labor.

Also, petition of the Wisconsin Conservation Commission, favoring the passage of the Graham bill to prohibit the sale of game in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. TEMPLE: Petition of Madison Avenue Christian Church, of New Castle, Pa., for war prohibition as a military necessity; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of J. A. Katzenmeyer and the Standard Engineering Co., opposing House bill 2878; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 30, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Father in heaven, for the blessed hope, the glorious anticipation, confirmed by the resurrection of Christ, in the unbroken continuity of life, which promises the adjustment of all wrongs, the clearing up of all misunderstandings, the union of all hearts, and the growth of our spiritual being. For it is written: "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him."

May the Easter Sunday bring solace to the thousands who are mourning the loss of their dear ones on the field of carnage. Help them to look forward to that day when God shall wipe away all tears from all faces.

May we live this day and through all the days to follow, that we shall be prepared for the change which waits upon us all, in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 9504) to amend section 4067 of the Revised Statutes by extending its scope to include women, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had just passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 124. Joint resolution providing for the registration for military service of all male persons citizens of the United States or residing in the United States who have, since the 5th day of June, 1917, and on or before the day set for the registration by proclamation by the President, attained the age of 21 years, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe under the terms of the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States."

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 3426. An act to empower the President to requisition for war purposes timber and timber products, rights of way and logging equipment, to construct and operate logging roads and sawmills, and fixing a penalty for the violation thereof; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 5351. An act providing for the disposal of certain lands in block 32 in the city of Port Angeles, State of Washington.

AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, I read in yesterday's newspapers the statement that Gen. Pershing had placed the entire American Army in France at the military disposition of that brilliant French strategist, Gen. Foch, and that he made the request in his own name and in the name of the American people that their services be utilized in the present battle. I understand that that action was taken by direction of the President of the United States. I rise, Mr. Speaker, to express my personal appreciation of the splendid patriotism of that action. [Applause.] I believe it reflects not only the sentiment and wishes of the American Army in France, but of every loyal American father, of every loyal American mother, who has a boy in that Army. Our sole regret is that we have not ten times as many American soldiers in France to help win this great battle for human liberty and for human rights. [Applause.]

PAY OF RETIRED WARRANT OFFICERS.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the table the bill (S. 3400) to regulate the pay of retired warrant officers and warrant officers on active duty, with the House amendment, and to further insist upon the House amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 3400, with a House amendment, to further insist on the House amendment, and to agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. PADGETT, Mr. TALBOTT, and Mr. BUTLER.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 9054), with Senate amendments, disagree to all of the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Agricultural appropriation bill, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to all of the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. The Senate amendment No. 40, on page 100, increases the guaranteed price for wheat at the local elevators to $2.50 a bushel. The House never having had any opportunity to pass upon that question, we would like to know whether the managers on the part of the House would be able to give to the House assurance that before the matter is disposed of, after they have compromised their differences with the Senate managers, they will bring it back to the House for a decision upon the merits, instead of disposing of it in the conference report?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the gentleman's question, it is this, that unless the conferees can reach a satisfactory agreement among themselves, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] would desire that the whole matter in its present form be brought back to the House for a separate vote.

Mr. STEENERSON. Of course, we are under this difficulty here. The House never having passed upon it, I presume that without any instructions the managers on the part of the House would act upon the theory that it was their duty to oppose everything that the Senate had proposed. There is a very large number in the House here who believe that the guaranteed price of wheat now existing is unjust and that it tends to decrease the spring-wheat crop, especially because the seeding is now about to begin, and judging from the numerous protests coming in from the farmers I believe that there is quite a sentiment in the House that there is merit in that claim. I do not expect that the conferees will be able to say now just what they favor, but I think that the friends of a higher guaranteed price of wheat ought to have an opportunity to present the matter to the House. Of course, I would be entitled now, if I withdrew this reservation of objection, to present a motion to instruct the conferees to agree to the Senate amendment. I believe that would be in order. The gentleman concedes that?

Mr. LEVER. No; I do not.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, what the gentleman desires, I think, is this, that unless the Senate amendment can be agreed to, as it has not been considered by the House, the House shall have an opportunity, if it so desires, to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. LEVER. I thought the gentleman's question did not quite go to that extent.

Mr. STEENERSON. That expresses it.

Mr. LEVER. I thought the gentleman's question involved this, that if the conferees of the two bodies can not agree either upon this proposition as the Senate has written it, or upon some compromise proposition, we will give opportunity to the House to vote upon whatever proposition was agreed upon, in a separate vote.

Mr. CANNON. But it seems to me the House ought to have the right, not having considered it, at some stage to consider it. It will be in order to move to instruct the committee when it comes before the House, if there is no unanimous consent, that the House concur in that amendment, but it seems to me the House ought to have the privilege unless it is agreed to.

Mr. LEVER. I do not hesitate to say to the gentleman from Minnesota, the gentleman from Illinois, and the gentleman from Oklahoma, all three of whom have shown a good deal of interest in this matter, if we may go to conference uninstructed, unhampered, that, as far as I am concerned, and I think as far as our conferees are concerned, I am perfectly willing to bring the matter back to the House and have a separate vote on this proposition.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me that is what you desire.

Mr. LEVER. And have a separate vote on the Senate proposition.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I wanted in a very brief way to indicate to the House and the conferees that so far as I am individually concerned I would prefer the proposition that I advocated before the committee; that is, the $2.75 price at the terminal markets as prescribed by law now. This Senate amendment provides for fixing the price at the various local elevators, which would bring a differential between North Dakota and New York of 25 cents, so $2.75 would not be any more under the present law at the interior final market as provided by law than the Senate amendment, and I was simply going to call the attention of the conferees and the House to that change because unquestionably the Senate amendment does increase the guaranteed price.

Mr. LEVER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. STEENERSON. And we wanted to have the assurance that the chairman now gives.

While the Senate amendment on its face increases the guaranteed price fixed by the President from $2.20 to $2.50, it bases it on No. 2 instead of No. 1, which means 3 cents additional, and on the local instead of "the principal interior primary markets," which would add the cost of transportation. My idea is that we should increase the price to $2.75, but keep No. 1 and the principal interior primary market as the basis. I would propose this amendment to the Senate provision—Gore amendment.

Strike out that part of lines 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25, on page 100, which reads as follows:

> The guaranteed prices for the several standard grades of wheat for the crop of 1918 shall be based upon No. 2 northern spring or its equivalent at not less than $2.50 per bushel at the local elevator or the local railway market where such wheat is delivered from the farm where produced.

And insert in lieu thereof the following words:

> The guaranteed prices for the several standard grades of wheat for the crop of 1918 shall be based upon No. 1 northern spring or its equivalent at not less than $2.75 per bushel at the principal interior primary markets.

This would not increase the Senate figure, so far as the region west of Minnesota is concerned.

Mr. Datus C. Smith, one of the leading wheat growers of the West, sent me the following suggestion, which I submit is a very moderate one:

> Permit me to suggest for your consideration the following change in your proposed amendment:
> In view of the great extent of misapprehension as to the added cost of a barrel of flour under the Gore resolution, as it stands, as compared with the present price of wheat, I would favor making the price $2.67 per bushel for No. 2 wheat, with the use of the primary markets now established, as you proposed. The reason I suggest $2.67 is that this gives the farmer just 50 cents advance over the present price for No. 2 wheat, allowing 3 cents deduction per bushel for the difference between No. 1 and No. 2.
> Now, this rate of $2.67, which provides an actual increase of 50 cents per bushel to the farmer, instead of making an added cost of $3 or $4 per barrel of flour, as has been so freely stated in the press, would amount to just $2.16. I figure this as follows: Two hundred and sixty-four pounds of wheat are required by the rules to make a barrel of flour of 196 pounds, leaving 68 pounds for by-products. The 264 pounds of wheat at 50 cents per bushel extra cost would be $2.16. The by-products, at the established prices, would be worth 4 cents, giving the net added cost of a barrel of flour $2.12.
> I do not see, Mr. STEENERSON, how they can possibly get around these figures, because they eliminate every consideration, as I see it, except the simple cost of 50 cents a bushel added to the price.
> DATUS C. SMITH,
> Blanchard, N. Dak.

The Food Administration has been carrying on an extensive propaganda against any increase in the price of wheat and have employed two arguments: One is that it would unreasonably increase the price of bread and the other that it would help speculators who might buy up present stocks.

Mr. Smith shows that under present conditions a 50-cent increase in wheat means only $2.16 added to the price of a barrel of flour, less than two thirds of a cent per day for a year. Now, Government employees who receive, say, $1,000 are to be increased 20 per cent, or $200 per annum. The pay roll of the railroads for their employees is $1,400,000,000, and the average per annum will be about $800. The President and Mr. McAdoo have appointed a commission which proposes, according to reports, to increase the pay roll by $375,000,000 per annum, which is 25 per cent.

So a railroad employee who receives $800 will get $200 increase. The wage earners in all employments have been given increases, in some cases greater than these. Now, if a laborer, if you please, or a Government clerk, receives $200 additional yearly wage, should he object to allowing the farmer a little more for his wheat?

The per capita consumption of wheat in normal times is about 5 bushels, but now Hoover cuts it by substitutes to one-half of that. A family of five will consume 12½ bushels in a year, on which it will pay, say, $12.50 more than before the war. Would it be unreasonable to require the man whose yearly wage has been increased $200 to pay $12.50 or even $15 more to the farmer who furnishes his principal food? Is it not because of the increased cost of living that wages are increased? Should not, therefore, the man who furnishes the "living" have an increase also?

I refuse to believe that either organized or unorganized labor, or those engaged in gainful employment outside of agriculture, will seriously demand that their wage shall be increased but deny a proportionate increase to the men and women on the farm who toil to supply them with the food they eat. Even flour at $14.60 a barrel and consumption unrestricted by wheatless days would only cost 4 cents per day to each individual.

One nickel cigar a day costs more than all the wheat flour a grown man consumes in a year. We should be fair. The farmer who produces the wheat has to pay more for everything now. Not only that, but he has to pay in taxes the salary increases soon to be made to Government employees and increased rates to the railroad workers. In England the Government used to pay market price for wheat and sell it at a loss so as to guarantee a cheap loaf. They expended $400,000,000 this way until Hoover came along and saddled the loss on the American wheat growers. The same can be said of the other allies.

Are not our allies fighting for us all? Why, then, should the burden of furnishing a cheap loaf to their people be thrown upon the American wheat farmer alone? But that is not all. They are not only required to do this, but, in addition thereto, to bear the burden of furnishing a cheap loaf to our own people, also, who charge them extra wages because of the high price of living. Are not the growers of wheat as meritorious as the planters of cotton, for instance, who are now enjoying a free market and receiving 35 cents per pound for their product, as against 8 or 10 cents before the war? There is no answer to these questions except that you want to single out the man who produces the staff of life as a special object for injustice. Such a course is absolutely indefensible.

The argument that a higher guaranteed price for the 1918 wheat crop might benefit speculators, who would buy up and hold present stocks, is untenable, because such a proceeding would be illegal and punishable as a crime under present laws. Besides, the proclamation of the President fixing the price of the 1918 crop contains this language:

> Upon condition that said wheat is harvested in the United States during the year 1918 and offered for sale before the first day of June, 1919, to such agent or employee of the United States or other person as may be hereafter designated.

A similar provision may be added to this clause in the Senate amendment and severe penalties prescribed for its violation.

Such an amendment to the Senate provision would be a complete answer to argument referred to.

I submit that in all fairness the injustice that has been done to our farmers by forced price of wheat should be speedily righted.

Mr. LEVER. I would be very glad to assure the House I will be pleased to have the House take a separate vote on this proposition at the proper time.

The SPEAKER. Has anybody got any suggestion to offer?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a few questions. In addition to the suggestions already made there is one which I think is very important. As suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] this is a new amendment added to this bill in the Senate. The House never has considered it. The House has never considered the proposition of fixing a definite price for wheat. When the food-control bill went through the House last summer we did not discuss the question of price. The price provision was put on in the Senate and discussed there for weeks. Now, when the Agricultural appropriation bill went through the House there was no provision in it relative to the price of wheat. When the bill passed the Senate it contained a provision increasing the guaranteed price of wheat from $2 to $2.50 per bushel. The Senate had a prolonged and thorough discussion——

Mr. LEVER. Long, I will admit that, but not the other proposition.

Mr. MORGAN. And finally put on this amendment. Now, the House has never had an opportunity to discuss this question, and in view of the national importance of this question, and especially the possible effect which an increase in the price of wheat may have in stimulating increased production of wheat, and also taking in consideration the financial interest the wheat growers and the people generally of the wheat-growing sections of the United States have in this amendment, I feel that the gentleman ought to give us some assurance that we shall have ample time and opportunity not only to vote separately upon this proposition but that we shall have ample time to discuss it.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from Oklahoma I recognize the importance of this amendment, and as far as I am concerned I can assure the gentleman I will be perfectly willing to agree to a reasonable time.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman suggest what he thinks will be a reasonable time on this great question?

Mr. LEVER. Well, I would not want to do that——

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I shall ask for the regular order, if the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture is compelled to declare himself——

Mr. MORGAN. I have the floor.

Mr. DYER. But I can ask for the regular order.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman from South Carolina has agreed to everything.

Mr. MORGAN. I object.

Mr. LEVER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request.

The SPEAKER. The bill is referred automatically to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to extend my remarks.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the demand for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma withdraw his objection? The gentleman from Missouri has withdrawn the demand for the regular order.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I was cut off——

Mr. LEVER. I did not cut the gentleman off.

Mr. MORGAN. I know you did not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri withdraws his demand for the regular order. Does the gentleman withdraw his objection?

Mr. MORGAN. I withdraw my objection for the time being.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Nebraska rise?

Mr. SLOAN. I desire to reserve the right to object. There are other amendments——

Mr. CANNON. I would like to finish my inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma has the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, just a word to the gentleman from South Carolina. He says he will give a reasonable time. I think we ought to know what that reasonable time is.

Mr. LEVER. What does the gentleman think would be a reasonable time?

Mr. MORGAN. In view of the importance of this question to the Nation and to the wheat sections, and the fact that this question has never been discussed in the House and that we are dealing with an entirely new question, I think we ought to have six hours' debate on this proposition.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman is going to make that kind of a request, I will call for the regular order.

Mr. FOSTER. Why not make it three weeks?

Mr. LEVER. I can say to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] that I do not want to bind myself absolutely to hours, but I think the gentleman knows me well enough to know that when I say "reasonable" I mean a reasonable time.

Mr. MORGAN. Do you think that four hours would be reasonable?

Mr. LEVER. I do not like to bind myself absolutely.

Mr. MORGAN. What is the impression of the gentleman as to what the committee would agree to?

Mr. DYER. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his request, and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] is the regular order.

THIRD LIBERTY LOAN.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11123, known as the third liberty bond authorization bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11123.

Mr. KITCHIN. And pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be confined to one hour, half an hour to be controlled by myself and half an hour by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY]. I will say in that connection that there is no disputed point so far as the committee goes, and the bill itself is an amendment of the act of September 24, 1917, and that act is amended in about five particulars. I shall call attention to them briefly in my statement. So all the arguments that were used for and against that act need not be repeated as to this bill. I am very anxious to get the bill through to-day, because it is necessary for it to become a law, I would say, at least, by the 4th of April. The liberty-bond campaign begins April 6. The Treasury Department must have the act before it can get out the necessary literature. Some is printed except leaving blank places in which to insert the terms of the bonds according to the bill.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. KITCHIN. Certainly.

Mr. GILLETT. If any point should come up unexpectedly that will require debate, I suppose the gentleman would be liberal under the five-minute rule?

Mr. KITCHIN. Under the five-minute rule; yes.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that general debate be confined to one hour, and that he control half of it and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] the other half. Is there objection?

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, there are some gentlemen near me here who have suggested that we make the time one hour and a half. Whatever time we use in general debate will shorten the time under the five-minute rule. Will the gentleman extend the time to one hour and a half?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will agree to that, and I will modify my motion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11123.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11123, with Mr. ALEXANDER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11123, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11123) to amend an act approved September 24, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the further reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, this bill is very simple in its terms. We need not argue the necessity for it. We all know it. We need not discuss whether or not the amount of taxes bears the proper relation to the amount of bonds, because we need this money before we can possibly have another tax bill, even if the House was inclined to write another one at this session.

This bill is simply an amendment of the bond act of September 24, 1917, and if gentlemen will take the bill and follow me I will point out the differences section by section. With the exception of such differences the sections of the bill are in the exact language of the bond act of September 24, 1917. In section 1 there are only two changes made. One appears on page 2, line 6. We strike out of the section, in the act of September 24, the figures $7,538,945,460 and substitute $12,000,000,000. We authorized by that act an issue of bonds of $7,538,945,460. It is necessary to increase the authorization $4,461,054,540, so we make the total authorization $12,000,000,000 instead of $7,538,000,000. The other change in this section will be found on page 3, line 7. We change the interest rate from "not exceeding 4 per cent" to "not exceeding 4¼ per cent."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is the $7,000,000,000 included in the $12,000,000,000.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. Instead of seven we make it twelve.

In section 2 of this bill we increase the appropriations made in the act of September 24, 1917, from $4,000,000,000 to $5,500,000,000.

In other words, we increase the appropriation to loan to the allies $1,500,000,000, and it is for this purpose that we increase it: The $4,000,000,000 appropriation will carry the loans to the allies throughout this fiscal year and the $1,500,000,000 will carry the allies for the months of July, August, and September of the next fiscal year. The loan requirements of the allies are at the rate of $500,000,000 a month. Congress will not be in session then, perhaps, and we will have to make this appropriation now for the next fiscal year.

That is the only change in that section. Section 3 is entirely a new section. All the language is new. It relates to the convertibility feature of the bonds. We provide in this bill that all bonds issued under the bond acts of April 24, 1917, and September 24, 1917, may be converted into the 4¼ per cent bonds provided in this bill, but we provide that bonds bearing 4¼ per cent shall not be convertible. That is, this is the last act that will contain the convertibility feature. The 3½ per cent bonds, the converted fours, and the fours issued under the bond act of September 24, 1917, may be converted into four-and-a-fourths, but, excepting the three-and-a-halfs, lose the convertibility feature thereafter, and the 4¼ per cent bonds will have no convertibility privilege.

It will be remembered that the 3½ per cent bonds issued under the act of April 24, 1917, contain a contract with the holders of those bonds to the effect that they shall be converted at all time thereafter during this war into bonds bearing a higher rate of interest, if bonds bearing a higher rate of interest are issued, so we can not, therefore, take the convertible feature away from the bonds bearing 3½ per cent. The act of September 24, 1917, contained a provision to the effect that if before the termination of the war bonds bearing a higher rate of interest should be issued that such bonds should be convertible into bonds bearing that higher rate. The act of September 24, 1917, further provided that if the privilege of conversion so conferred should once arise and should not be exercised with respect to any convertible bonds within the period prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, then such privilege should terminate as to such bonds and should not arise again, though again thereafter bonds be issued bearing interest at a higher rate or rates.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman prefer to yield to me now or later?

Mr. KITCHIN. I would prefer to answer the gentleman's question now.

Mr. GILLETT. I understand the gentleman to say that this bill provides that if during the war we should issue bonds at a higher rate, these bonds would not be convertible into those bonds?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. I understood as to the last issue that the position which the committee took was that it was only fair that the men who took Government bonds then at the low rate should, if the Government issued bonds afterwards at a higher rate, be on an equality with the men who had withheld their subscription until it was attractive and who got those high rates; that it was only fair that those who bought them early should stand on the same footing as those who subscribed later at the higher rate. That is the way I understood it was written. I wondered if the gentleman could explain why it was changed, or if I had misunderstood the original argument.

Mr. KITCHIN. No; the gentleman did not misunderstand the original argument.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will answer the gentleman from Illinois just as soon as I have answered the other gentleman. We did make that argument, as the gentleman from Massachusetts stated. We provided in the bill, however, that that convertibility feature should cease even as to those bonds if the privilege of conversion should once arise and not be availed of.

Now, the reason why we think that the time has come when we should put this nonconvertibility feature into the bill is that we shall have out, when these bonds are sold, $14,000,000,000 of bonds, and if we continue this convertibility feature in them individuals and corporations holding the $14,000,000,000 worth of bonds will be interested, with the other investors who want a higher rate, in piking the rate and holding the Government up to a higher rate at every authorization, because if the higher rate is given to the next issue of bonds the interest rate on the $14,000,000,000 will automatically go up. They will be interested in bearing the market on the bonds and pushing the bonds down below par in order to force the Government to issue bonds at a higher rate. We therefore thought we had better take a stand now and cut out the privilege of conversion hereafter.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Has it been the purpose in making this feature to prevent future bond issues at a higher rate?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. We thought—and I believe and you gentlemen and every other patriotic man in the United States who has any confidence in this Government believes—that a Government bond bearing 4¼ per cent interest is worth par and always will be actually worth par, though manipulation may some time depress the market value below par. It is a splendid, safe, gilt-edged investment.

Mr. GARLAND and Mr. BRITTEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will yield first to the gentleman from Illinois, as he asked me to yield a moment ago and I could not at that time; then to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BRITTEN. Just along that line, does not the repurchase provision in the bill protect the early patriotic purchaser? Having the repurchase provision in the bill, that sets aside a fund?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. The gentleman is correct. Now I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GARLAND. Perhaps that is the same question that I wanted to ask in another form.

Mr. KITCHIN. We have a sinking fund to protect the holders of those bonds, which we hope will keep them at par in the market all the time.

Mr. BRITTEN. I was saying that the patriotic fellow of today who buys his bonds is protected in any future issues, because he may sell back his holdings to the Government and repurchase at a higher rate?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; to the extent of the sinking fund.

Mr. GARLAND. There are those who bought the 3½ per cent bonds who later converted them into 4 per cent bonds. Now, then, although they are converted into 4 per cent bonds, if bonds were issued bearing a higher rate than 4¼ per cent would they still be admissible to further conversion into future issues of bonds?

Mr. KITCHIN. The persons who bought the 3½ per cent bonds and who have already converted them into fours would not be able to convert the fours into bonds bearing a higher rate than 4¼ per cent; but if bonds bearing more than 4¼ per cent should be issued, those holding 3½ per cent bonds would be able to convert them into the bonds bearing the higher rate. That is put into the contract.

Mr. GARLAND. He can not convert those converted three-and-a-halfs into higher rates?

Mr. KITCHIN. They have already been converted into fours, and such fours can be converted into the 4¼ bonds provided for in this bill, but not into other bonds bearing a higher rate.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. I noticed a difference in the quotations of the first issue and second fours. What is the explanation of that? In other words, the 3½ per cent bonds that have been converted into fours are called what?

Mr. KITCHIN. They are "converted fours."

Mr. DENISON. There is a difference in the market value of the ones that were converted from three-and-a-halfs into fours and the fours.

Mr. KITCHIN. I did not know of that.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Is there not some question as to what the rates of the three-and-a-halfs may be with reference to future conversion? What the gentleman is talking about is the original fours and the three-and-a-halfs that were converted into fours. Those he speaks of as being of a different market value. I think there has been some discussion throughout this country as to whether the holders of the first 3½ per cent bonds, having the right to convert to any future issue at a higher rate, may not still have that right, whereas the holders of the second fours have the right to only one conversion.

Mr. KITCHIN. I had not heard that discussed at all. I can see no good reason why there should be a difference.

Mr. DENISON. I can not either.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am glad the gentleman called my attention to that. I will look into the question.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. WALSH. I call the gentleman's attention to the statement he made in the debate on April 13, 1917, when we were considering the first liberty loan, in the discussion of which he stated:

> It it provided further that if before December 31, 1918, Congress should authorize an issue of bonds with a greater rate of interest than 3½ per cent, then the Secretary of the Treasury, at the option of the holder, can convert the bonds already issued under this act into bonds bearing a higher rate of interest.

Now, if we should have another bond issue in September or October of this year and the bill which is now under consideration passes in its present form, the 3½ per cent bonds could not be substituted for the later issue, as I understand the gentleman?

Mr. KITCHIN. Referring to the statement which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has quoted, the bill as first presented to the House which I was then discussing did provide that any series of bonds issued under authority of sections 1 and 4 of this act may, under such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, be convertible into bonds bearing a higher rate of interest than the rate at which the same were issued if any subsequent series of bonds shall be issued at a higher rate of interest on or before December 31, 1918.

Mr. SNYDER. I should like to say that the purchasers of the 3½ per cent bonds claim that they will have the right to convert to a higher issue at any time.

Mr. KITCHIN. They have.

Mr. SNYDER. They have the right to convert the original 3½ per cent bonds at any time that some other bond is issued at a higher rate.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is as I stated at first. The statement to which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] called attention was made by me in discussing the bill as it was introduced in the House before it went to the Senate. As the bill became a law it provided that any series of bonds issued under authority of sections 1 and 4 of this act may, under such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, be convertible into bonds bearing a higher rate of interest than the rate at which the same were issued if any subsequent series of bonds shall be issued at a higher rate of interest before the termination of the war between the United States and the Imperial German Government, the date of such termination to be fixed by a proclamation of the President of the United States.

Mr. SNYDER. Personally, I believe the holders of the 3½ per cent bonds have the right to convert into a higher rate at any time.

Mr. KITCHIN. They have that right.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I call the attention of gentlemen to page 3 of the report? If they will look at that, I think the whole matter may be cleared up.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say again, the 3½ per cent bonds have no limitation as to conversion, and can be converted into any bonds issued during the war bearing a higher rate.

Mr. ALMON. The gentleman does not think the fact that a 3½ per cent bond has been converted into a 4 per cent bond would have any effect on the right to future conversion, does he?

Mr. KITCHIN. The 4 per cent bond could not be converted except into the bonds authorized by the pending bill should it become law, but the 3½ per cent bond could be converted into bonds of any higher rate that may be issued during the war.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Is the gentleman now discussing the bill by sections?

Mr. KITCHIN. I am discussing it by sections; yes. This matter arose under section 3.

Mr. DENISON. If the gentleman can answer this question I would like to ask him, if a man who held the first 3½ per cent bonds has converted them into fours of the second issue, can those fours then be again converted into the subsequent issues?

Mr. KITCHIN. According to this bill here only into the 4¼ per cent issue, but not thereafter.

Mr. ALMON. The gentleman does not think any action of Congress now could affect the vested rights of the first bondholders?

Mr. KITCHIN. Not of the holders of the 3½ per cents.

Section 4 makes this change in the act of September 24, 1917. In that act we provided for an amount not to exceed $4,000,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness to be outstanding at any one time, and to be payable not more than one year from the date of issue. We have increased that limit from $4,000,000,000 to $8,000,000,000. It sounds like a mighty big increase, but we did that in order to avoid a larger authorization of bonds at this time, and therefore the sale of a larger amount of bonds at one time. The certificates of indebtedness under the $4,000,000,000 limit will become exhausted before the fiscal year is out. In fact, we have now outstanding of these certificates of indebtedness in round number $3,200,000,000, and we will have to go over the $4,000,000,000 mark before the present fiscal year expires.

We use this provision to furnish money to tide the Government over until the excess-profit and income taxes are payable, and also during the periods between the sales of bonds. When the taxes are paid and the bonds are sold these certificates of indebtedness are taken up, but others must at once, from time to time, be issued.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What rate of interest will the certificates of indebtedness draw, and how long will they run?

Mr. KITCHIN. No certificate of indebtedness can have a maturity more than one year after the date of issue, and under this bill not more than $8,000,000,000 can be outstanding at any one time.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And what will be the interest rate?

Mr. KITCHIN. There is no limit on the interest rate on the certificates of indebtedness. Such a provision is in the act of September 24, 1917. We discussed that on the floor of the House when that bill was under consideration. On these short-time loans sometimes they may have to pay a little more than on longer time loans. The Secretary of the Treasury paid as high as 4½ per cent and as low as 3½ per cent. It depends on the condition of the money market at the time when the money is borrowed on the certificates. When they issue certificates of indebtedness they need the money to expend in order to meet the appropriations. While this seems to be a large amount, we must understand that there is in a way a legal limit; that is, the Secretary of the Treasury can not expend a dollar more of the receipts from these certificates, or from bonds, or from any other sources, than Congress appropriates. So he is kept, of course, within the appropriations.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Can the gentleman give us any idea how many of the bonds heretofore authorized are still unsold in the hands of the Government and how many have been taken up?

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman means how many under the existing law the Government is authorized to issue?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Three billion six hundred and sixty-six million dollars, plus the $63,000,000 to take up the bonds that will become due in the next fiscal year.

That $63,000,000 is an old bond issue of 1908. The proceeds from the $63,000,000 of bonds must be used to retire the loan of 1908–1918, which becomes due in the fiscal year 1919. In addition to the $63,000,000, we now have authority to sell for war purposes to meet public expenditures, as I stated, $3,666,000,000 of bonds.

Mr. DILLON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. DILLON. Can the gentleman tell us what the total expenditures of all the departments of the Government, including the loans to the allies, will amount to for the fiscal year ending June, 1918?

Mr. KITCHIN. Sixteen billion one hundred and sixteen million dollars.

Mr. DILLON. That does not include the loans to the allies?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; it does.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. What is the interest on the certificates of indebtedness?

Mr. KITCHIN. Some have been issued bearing 4½ per cent, but more have been issued bearing a lower rate.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. What is the expense for the fiscal year for carrying on the war, exclusive of loans to the allies, expected to be?

Mr. KITCHIN. During the fiscal year 1917 we loaned the allies $885,000,000. This fiscal year we expect to loan them $6,115,000,000. Deducting $6,115,000,000 from the $16,116,000,000 will give you what it is.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The statement was made last year when we were considering the war-tax bill that it was expected to pay by taxation substantially one-half of the expenses of the war. Has that idea been abandoned?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman that that statement was made when we were considering the first bond bill of April 24, 1917. Of course, the administration and the departments did not dream that the demands on the part of the allies or the demands on the part of this Government for the prosecution of the war would be anything like the amount that we now know we will have to have.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. What part of the war expense do we now expect to pay by taxation and what part by bond issues?

Mr. KITCHIN. The administration started out with an idea of 50-50—that is, 50 per cent taxation and 50 per cent bonds—but the expenditures on our part on account of the war and the loans to the allies grew so enormously that they have abandoned that suggestion as being impracticable, if not impossible.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. What is the present idea?

Mr. KITCHIN. Of the administration?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Of the administration and of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not know what the present idea of the administration is, and I would not like to say definitely what my idea is now, but I will say to the gentleman that it will become absolutely necessary for us to have a good deal larger collection from taxes if the bond issues continue, and in all probability they will. I hope at a later and more proper time to give to the House my mature and definite opinion with respect to the raising of revenue by taxation and bond issues.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. When may we expect the increase in the taxes?

Mr. KITCHIN. I can not give the gentleman any definite time. It depends on the situation. Personally I feel that we ought to raise more taxes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. There are a few Members of the House who want to support the Government in all necessary ways, but who are unwilling to vote for bond issue after bond issue indefinitely when the rate of taxation is much lower than it might well be and much lower than it is in foreign countries that are carrying on the war. Speaking as one of those I would like to know how much longer I am expected to vote for bond issues. I am willing to vote to give the Government all the money that it needs, but I am unwilling to burden future generations by these bond issues and leave rich men of the present generation to enjoy many advantages with but little suffering from the pains of the war.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am in sympathy with the idea that we should fasten as little burden as possible on future generations and raise as much now by taxation as is reasonably possible, considering the necessities for keeping the industries going and not seriously crippling them.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. We are sorely burdened by the tremendous increase of prices of articles of all kinds and by an artificial and unnecessary stimulation of business. All this has been greatly aggravated by the constant bond issues. A higher rate of taxation would act as a curb on these prices.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am going to give the gentleman some facts here that may for the moment satisfy him to some extent. Exclusive of the loans we make to the allies, after we shall have issued the total amount of bonds authorized in this bill, to wit, $12,000,000,000, adding to that the $2,000,000,000 that we have sold and issued, we shall by taxation raise more than 50 per cent of the total bond issues which this Government has used for its own expenses. In other words, this bill authorizes $12,000,000,000.

We have already authorized and sold in round numbers under the first bond act $2,000,000,000. To be more exact, it is one billion nine hundred and eighty-six million, but call it two billion. Thus the total, after every dollar of bonds authorized under this act is sold and the bonds sold heretofore, we shall have issued $14,000,000,000 in bonds. Eight billion and a half dollars worth of bonds are provided for loans to the allies, upon the assumption that their bonds are as good as ours and that they will pay them back. That leaves five billion and a half dollars worth of bonds that we have issued for the expenditures of our Government, and we will collect in taxes this year over three and one-half billion dollars.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Three billion eight hundred million dollars and odd.

Mr. KITCHIN. It may possibly reach those figures; but to be safe, I put it at three and a half billions in taxes, so that on this basis for all our expenditures we are collecting nearly 40 per cent in taxes.

Mr. SNYDER. Is it not fair to assume that in view of the taxes that have been received so far the estimate of the tax to be collected is a good deal too small? I believe it will run far over $3,800,000,000.

Mr. KITCHIN. Some say so, but I fear they are mistaken. The Treasury Department has had some few returns in, and I think the experts there estimate that our excess-profits tax will yield about the same that we estimated it was going to raise when I presented the conference report. They tell me that they do not believe that it is going to vary substantially at all from our estimates made beforehand, and the same may be said in regard to the income tax.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask how much increase would there be in tax collections if we levied the same rate on profits as the English are levying?

Mr. KITCHIN. If we levied the same rate on excess profits that Great Britain does and had our provisions in the present bill and levied the same normal income tax as Great Britain does, keeping our surtaxes the same as we have on incomes of $200,000 and up, we would raise some two and a half or three billion dollars more.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; but I would state in that connection that while Great Britain does levy some few local taxes, it has nothing like the enormous tax levies of our States, counties, and municipalities. The taxes that our people pay in the States, and the local tax subdivisions, road districts and school districts, and so forth, I would say, but it is almost a guess, are five or six times more. We must take that into consideration, of course, when we compare the English rate with our rate.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does the gentleman mean to say that the profits taxes in England are not 30 or 40 per cent greater than in this country? We levy taxes in this country on real estate and various other subjects.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. The excess-profits tax in Great Britain is that much greater than the excess-profits tax in the United States. But when we consider this and other Federal taxes and the State and local taxes that one here must pay, the amount of the taxes paid by one in England is not so much larger than that paid by one here. Her national tax or tax rate is higher than ours; her local tax or tax rate is much smaller than here.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. But as I understand it, the English rate reaches about 80 per cent of excess profits.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; it is 80 per cent.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. There is nothing like that in this country.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the statement of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] as to the proportion of taxes as compared with bonds in foreign countries is entirely erroneous, not, of course, intentionally so.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I did not make any statement on that subject.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman said that we were raising much more by bonds than foreign countries were.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Oh, no; I did not say that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I so understood the gentleman.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think we ought to raise more taxes than we are now when our incomes and profits are so much larger than ever before and much larger than they will be after the war, but this is not the time to increase them. That is a matter that will come up in the future, probably not at this session, and possibly not at this term of Congress, but it is bound to face us. We can not continue to go on making enormous, fabulous profits, three or four times—and in many cases ten times—more than before the war, even after deducting the present income and excess-profits taxes, and levy no more taxes but continue the tremendous bond issues to fasten on future generations to pay.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Assuming that we shall loan all these other amounts to the allies this fiscal year, we will be raising by taxes as compared by bonds more than 30 per cent of the total cost. Now, that is a very much larger proportion than any of the foreign governments raise.

Mr. KITCHIN. No; not quite that per cent. Our total expenditures for this fiscal year, including loans to allies, are estimated at $16,116,000,000. Thirty per cent of that would be $4,834,000,000, while we will collect, in round numbers, from taxes $3,500,000,000. This is less than 25 per cent of our total expenditures for this fiscal year, including loans to allies.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If this report is correct, and we are to raise and expend $12,000,000,000, we are raising $3,800,000,000.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; but the expenditures will be $16,000,000,000. The gentleman, perhaps, is thinking of the amount of bond issues. We are raising by taxation an amount equal to 30 per cent of the amount of bonds. His figure is substantially correct in this view.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I have only 10 minutes; but I yield.

Mr. DYER. Just upon the question of whether or not the present generation are paying sufficient taxes at this time I want to ask the gentleman if the committee or the gentleman himself has at any time given consideration to preparing a statement showing where the taxes really are paid at the present—from what section of the country—and whether it is not a serious burden upon business and industries which are paying the taxes and that are compelled to buy the bonds also?

Mr. KITCHIN. I would say the committee has all those facts and the gentleman ought to have, too. I suggest to the gentleman that if he will just write to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue he will send him a printed statement giving every one of those facts.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman object to putting that in his statement?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I have only 10 minutes, but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KINCHELOE. It is in regard to the 3½ per cent convertibility bonds, and the question I desired to ask was: Suppose a man had $100,000 that he had carried six months and collected 3½ per cent interest and later on he desired to convert them into the 4½ per cent bonds. Could he go back and collect the difference?

Mr. KITCHIN. No.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Can not go back and collect a dollar of it?

Mr. KITCHIN. Only from the time of the payment of the semiannual interest. That is, if the semiannual interest was payable on June 1 and the bond is converted in August, under the provisions of this bill he would receive interest from June 1.

Mr. KINCHELOE. As I understood the gentleman in his opening statement, I understood him to say you could convert the 3½ interest bond into a 4 per cent, but that you could not convert that into a higher rate of any subsequent rate?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; he can convert the converted 4 per cent into 4½ per cent, as provided in this bill, but not into a bond of higher rate. The holder of a 3½ per cent bond can convert into the higher-rate bond if issued during the war, as I have before explained.

Mr. KINCHELOE. That is the gentleman's opinion. Is not there a mooted question? Is not there a difference of opinion?

Mr. KITCHIN. I should not think so. If there is a mooted question about it, the moot part of the question is in order to bear down the bonds. I do not think there should be any difference of opinion.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I meant by people who are supposed to be experts on the question.

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I have not heard of it.

Mr. HILLIARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. HILLIARD. As I understand, the original plan was to make it fifty-fifty.

Mr. KITCHIN. It was not presumed or believed then, when we first entered the war, that our expenditures would even approach the staggering figures they now reach. You will recall when I presented the first bond bill, appropriating $3,000,000,000 for our allies and $2,000,000,000 for our expenditures, that, in my opinion, instead of $2,000,000,000, we would require over $5,000,000,000 before the end of this fiscal year. I said I thought the departments had underestimated by many times the cost of the expenditures that we would have to incur on account of the war. Gentlemen now know how true was that prediction.

Mr. HILLIARD. I remember the gentleman said that. But the fifty-fifty meant that every time you borrowed a dollar you should raise a dollar by taxes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. HILLIARD. It did not mean, as I infer is the view of some gentlemen who have been interrogating the gentleman from North Carolina, that we would raise some indefinite sum by bond issues and then collect through taxation a sum equal to 50 per cent of such bond issues.

Mr. KITCHIN. No. It did not mean that. One thing is certain, that the larger our bond issue, the longer must the war-tax legislation remain on the statutes. War taxes will not stop when the war stops. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will bear me out when I say that from the tax measures during the Civil War for the prosecution of the war, a larger part was raised for the period of three years after the war than for a period of three years during the war.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, the result of it was to inflate prices tremendously and to make the war cost more by the consequent inflation of prices.

Mr. KITCHIN. There was too little being taxed during the war.

Mr. SHERLEY. Too much borrowed and too little taxed.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman is right. The point I wanted to make is that when we levy these taxes we do not expect them to end just as soon as the war terminates. If we do not collect more by taxation now when the people from their enormous profits and incomes are more able to pay, but continue to issue bonds, piling up hundreds of millions—and it will reach a billion or more—of interest to be paid yearly by taxes, the tax rate on incomes and profits and other property will have to be increased to produce sufficient revenue to take care of current expenses and the annual interest charge at a time when the amount of incomes and profits will necessarily decrease.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Is not the Civil War pointed to as a "horrible example" of failure in war financing?

Mr. KITCHIN. I have studied the financing by the Government for the prosecution of the Civil War, and I believe that up to that time it adopted the wisest methods that could be adopted. I think there is a better method now, because we are more enlightened upon economics; we are more enlightened as to where to put the money burden and how to get it.

Mr. KEATING. How are you going to tax war profits unless you tax them now? How can you wait until after the war in order to tax war profits?

Mr. KITCHIN. We are now taxing excess profits—which include, of course, war profits—to the amount of about one and a quarter billions. There will be two or three years after the war when there will be large profits.

Mr. KEATING. But that will not be from profits out of this war.

Mr. KITCHIN. They will be excess profits, whether war or other kinds of profits. The actual war industries—the powder makers, the shell makers, the shipbuilders for the war—I do not imagine will have profits equally as large after the war as they have now. But, as I have said frequently before, we must have more collections from incomes and excess profits.

Mr. OSBORNE. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there has been a great deal of uneasiness throughout the country due to the discounting of the former bond issues, and I wish to inquire if the provision in section 15 is intended to stabilize prices?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is the purpose of it; yes, sir.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would like to ask just one question.

Mr. KITCHIN. All right.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Has the gentleman any idea of what influence it was that depreciated the value of these 3½ per cent bonds?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think there were several influences that combined to do it. I think a part of it and a large part of it was manipulated in order to force the Government to a higher rate of interest.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Has the gentleman the slightest doubt it was manipulation in order to force the Government to the higher rate?

Mr. KITCHIN. That, in my opinion, as it is the opinion of the gentleman, is the principal factor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman from Michigan give me 10 minutes more?

Mr. FORDNEY. I can not do it on account of the demand for time.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from North Carolina be extended for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from North Carolina be extended 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KITCHIN. The next provision, section 5, is a new provision entirely. This provision prevents the State from taxing, indirectly, the bonds of the Government held by the State banks and national banks. In the national banking act of 1864, now section 5219 of the Revised Statutes, the States were given the right to tax the shares of national-bank stock, part of whose value was represented by the value of the bonds the bank owned. This gave the States the right to tax indirectly Government bonds in the hands of such banks. This was a discrimination against banks. We desire to prevent this indirect tax on Government bonds—the liberty bonds. We provide, therefore—and as an inducement for the banks to take the liberty bonds—that, in the States where they tax shares of stock, either in State or national banks, in determining the value of such shares they shall deduct from the assets of the bank the amount of Government bonds owned by the bank.

In other words, that proportion of the value of the share of stock in a national or State bank which is represented by or given to it by the amount of bonds it owns shall not be taxed, but the proportion of the value of the share of stock represented by or given to it by its assets other than Government bonds will still remain subject to State taxation.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I can not yield right now. I wish I had the time. As the Secretary of the Treasury said, all the liberty-bond acts have provided that the bonds shall be exempt from State and local taxation. Notwithstanding this provision, certain States are indirectly taxing these bonds by including the value of such bonds in determining the value of the capital stock for taxation purpose. This condition raises a very serious question, because if the States are permitted to tax Government bonds, when the Federal Government can not tax municipal and State bonds, the Federal Government will soon be placed in a position where it can not provide the necessary money to finance this war.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose the stock of a national bank is $1,000,000 and the surplus is $1,000,000, that is subject to tax?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; that is, the value of the shares is taxed.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose they have $1,000,000 of these bonds, would that million be deducted from the $2,000,000?

Mr. KITCHIN. Some might construe the letter of this provision that way, but it is not the proper construction. We propose to exempt from the tax only that proportion of the value of the share of stock given to it by the amount of bonds it owns.

Mr. DOMINICK. I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] if there were any extended hearings held on this section?

Mr. KITCHIN. No, sir. The Secretary of the Treasury fully went into the matter before us, and the committee gave most careful consideration to it.

Mr. DOMINICK. Can you tell us about the amount of liberty bonds and United States bonds that are now owned by these banks and trust companies?

Mr. KITCHIN. No. But I would, if I was going to make a guess about it, guess that more of them were owned by State banks and trust companies and savings banks than by what we call national banks.

Mr. DOMINICK. You think there are more?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. DOMINICK. Just at this point——

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman is going to have time, and I will see that he gets it, and I had rather not yield further at this time, as I am anxious to conclude my remarks in the time allotted to me.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Let us get some extension of time in which to discuss this, because every Member, when he goes to his district, will have to meet the question of State taxation. They are going to ask about it, and we need the details from the chairman.

Mr. DOMINICK. Will the gentleman yield for just a moment?

Mr. KITCHIN. Not unless I can get time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not decline if I can have more time.

Mr. DOMINICK. My question is just this, Mr. Chairman, and that is that this section in this proposed bill is one that changes the law that has been in effect almost since the national-banking act was instituted, and since then, and it is really to that extent probably the most important section of this bill. The other matters that have been discussed here are matters that were included in the other bond act, but this is an entirely different matter, and I think it ought to be fully discussed. I would like to hear the gentleman on that section.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman is quite right. It should be fairly and fully discussed. We can do this under the five-minute rule. It is very important to the sale of the bonds and also to the States, as the gentleman says. I do think the States should not have the right to tax these liberty bonds, directly or indirectly. The question has been raised whether Congress has the power to prevent the States taxing indirectly, as through the tax on the value of shares of stock, United States bonds held by State banks as a part of their assets.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Not now. Unless the Supreme Court has squarely met the case and decided to the contrary—and I do not recall such a case—I would give the decided opinion that Congress undoubtedly has that right. This provision is in the interest, first, of selling these bonds and getting the banks, State and National, to take as many of them as possible, and, second, in including the State banks within the provision, they are put on an equality with national banks in the purchase of liberty bonds. If we left the State banks out and put the national banks in, the national banks would have a great advantage in the purchase and ownership of liberty bonds, and it would be a favoritism to them.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I can not yield unless my time is extended.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Just a moment. I will ask that the gentleman's time be extended. I concede that the point that the gentleman makes is well taken, but suppose an individual has property valued at $25,000, on which he can borrow $10,000, and he invests that $10,000 in municipal bonds. The State and county and municipality are going to tax the bonds just the same.

Mr. KITCHIN. A State generally exempts from taxation its bonds, and some of the States exempt the bonds of their municipalities. But we will concede what the gentleman says.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. He could not get any deduction on the $10,000.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman will recall that the bonds of States, counties, and municipalities are exempt from all Federal taxes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. But the question I raised is why should not the same protection be given to the holder of that $10,000 municipal bond?

Mr. KITCHIN. He has the same protection, so far as the Federal Government is concerned. His municipal bonds are exempt entirely, and there is neither a direct nor an indirect tax upon them

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Does the gentleman say that the national banks are exempt now in the amount of Government bonds they hold?

Mr. KITCHIN. No. They are not exempt under existing law from the indirect taxation, which I have explained. By this section we prevent the State from imposing the indirect tax on bonds permissible under the act of 1864 as amended. The States, by virtue of that specific act, have the right to tax shares of stock part of whose value is represented by Government bonds. The States by that specific provision of the act of 1864 can by increasing the tax on shares in banks, if they desire to do so, drive every liberty bond out of the national banks and make it so unprofitable that no bank could buy any liberty bonds. If we provide that bonds can not be taxed indirectly when held by the national banks and do not make the provision apply to State banks, the State could tax State banks so high that the State banks could not deal in liberty bonds. And in any event State banks would be discriminated against in favor of national banks in the purchase and holding of liberty bonds.

Mr. McFADDEN. I understand from the gentleman's statement that it will deprive the State of Pennsylvania of $3,000,000 annual income?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not know about that; I am confident that it would not approach anything like such a figure; in fact, if we confine the exemption section to liberty bonds, and it should be so amended as to apply only to bonds issued during the war, the State of Pennsylvania would lose nothing, as it has never collected, indirectly or directly, any tax on liberty bonds. Without this section it would stand to make money out of the millions of liberty bonds we must issue, as it could and no doubt would levy this indirect tax on all the bonds held by the banks. We wish to prevent that.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. DOMINICK. Is it not a fact that in case of bonds now being held by the banks under the national-bank act those bonds now are actually exempted?

Mr. KITCHIN. No. They are not exempt from the indirect tax if held by banks.

Mr. DOMINICK. They are taxed to the shareholders according to the value of their shares, but as to the capital stock of the bank they are not taxed?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; the value of the shares is taxed though a part of that value is given to it by Government bonds. The States know that they can not tax the bonds directly, but they tax the value of the shares, and part of that value is represented by the amount of bonds the banks have. If you tax the value of shares and part of that value is of Government bonds then the bonds are in reality taxed.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit one question?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; one short question. I must make haste. I have a conference on the war finance corporation bill which I must attend.

Mr. PLATT. Should not this be amended by putting in the bill, on page 7, line 2, after the word "States," the words "during the present war"? There is no reason why they should be allowed to deduct the value of the 2 per cent bonds held for circulation.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman refers to interest-bearing obligations owned by such banks?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Does he mean to confine it to the bonds held by the bank and issued since April 24, 1917, and during the war?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; that should be done. That was the intention of the committee. If the gentleman will offer such an amendment we will accept it, or we will offer it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Issued during the period of the war?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. The gentleman means bonds issued during the period of the war?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Section 6 is only changed in this respect: We permitted the Secretary of the Treasury under the act of September 24, 1917, to deposit the proceeds of liberty bonds in banks throughout the country, regardless of whether they were members of the Reserve System or national banks or State banks or trust companies. We simply add to that provision "proceeds arising from the payment of income and excess-profit taxes." We permit the Secretary to deposit that money in the same way as he is permitted to deposit the proceeds from the sale of bonds. A good many of us are interested in the extension of the payment of the income and excess-profits tax beyond June 15 on the installment plan. This provision put in the bill will to a large extent enable citizens and corporations throughout the United States to make better arrangements with the banks in their own communities for such relief. Instead of getting the money and sending it to the Government, to be deposited in the Treasury or special depositories, as now, the banks will be more ready and will be more able to serve them if they felt that the money so loaned to pay taxes will be deposited for the most part with them. This will amount practically to a transfer of credit. More than 4,000 banks throughout the United States, State as well as National, receive deposits of proceeds of liberty bonds—a bank in almost every community in the United States. These and more will also receive under this provision proceeds of collections from income and excess-profits taxes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has again expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let me have two minutes more, as I wish to take up the other differences.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. That will not take any of the time on the other side. Section 7 adds three new sections to the act of September 24, 1917, numbered 14, 15, and 16, respectively. Section 14 added to such act provides that if a person owns the 4¼ per cent United States liberty bonds six months prior to his death, his estate taxes after his death can be paid in those bonds. That will be a great inducement for the rich to invest in these bonds, because when they die, instead of having their assets sold and converted into money or having to hoard up large amounts of money to meet such taxes—and some of them will have to pay estate taxes amounting to many million dollars—they will buy these bonds from time to time and keep the bonds on hand, drawing interest, and after they die their estate taxes can be paid in these bonds without liquidating other assets. I think we will all agree that that is a very wise provision.

Section 15 added to such act provides that there shall be a sinking fund of not to exceed an amount equal to 5 per cent of the outstanding bonds issued or converted since September 24, 1917, to assist in stabilizing the market for outstanding liberty bonds. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] will explain that provision when we get under the five-minute rule, because I must conclude my remarks and go to the conference.

Section 16 permits the Secretary of the Treasury to issue these bonds to be sold in foreign countries, expressible in foreign money. That is to help bring up our parity of exchange and may, to a large extent, help generally our foreign commerce.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Of course, this provision for paying estate taxes in bonds owned for six months prior to a person's death will discourage the desire to die for six months after anyone purchases these bonds.

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, yes; it will tend to prolong human life. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUSSELL. One short question.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. The bill we passed before provided that the bonds up to $5,000 held by any one person would be exempt from taxes. Is that provision of the law still preserved?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; that applies to bonds authorized by this bill. We make no change in that. In fact, the whole act of September 24, 1917, remains intact, with the exception of these amendments to which I have referred.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Can the gentleman tell how many bonds issued by the Government remain unsold at the present time?

Mr. KITCHIN. Under the act of September 24, 1917, $3,808,766,150 of bonds have been sold. Of this amount $3,807,724,858.73 had been paid into the Treasury on March 27, 1918.

Mr. WALDOW. The gentleman, in speaking about the first issue of bonds, said that these bonds "shall be converted." What the gentleman meant was that they may be converted, was it not?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; at the discretion of the holder.

Now, gentlemen, the House conferees on the War Finance Corporation bill have to meet and straighten out the odds and ends. We have practically agreed, and I am going to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] to take charge of this bill in my absense. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I hope the House will be as generous to our side as it has been to my good friend from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN]. He has occupied one hour and five minutes, although the total time allotted to each side was 45 minutes. So please do not call time on us at the end of 45 minutes. I am not finding fault with the gentleman from North Carolina at all.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will not even let the gentleman have the appearance of finding fault. The gentleman knows I would have gotten through in 15 minutes, if gentlemen had not asked me so many questions.

Mr. FORDNEY. I know that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan ask unanimous consent that his time be extended?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; I do not ask that. I am going to try to conclude. I have five requests from our side, besides my own speech, and I will try to finish within the time limit. It has been stated by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] that the amount of money raised by direct taxes in proportion to our total expenditures this year is not greater than the amount raised by other countries. He is in error in that respect. If the gentleman's statement is correct that the profits of the people during this war are two, three, and four times as great as heretofore, the money that will be raised by taxes this year under existing law will reach $5,000,000,000 or more; because the taxes to be collected this year has been estimated on a comparison based on normal conditions before war was declared, that the amount of money to be raised this year by direct taxes will amount to more than $4,300,000,000, out of a total expenditure of something over $12,000,000,000. Last fall I obtained information as to the percentage of money raised in Great Britain by direct taxes in proportion to the amount of money spent. Out of a total expenditure of $23,000,000,000 the sum of $4,000,000,000 had been raised by direct taxes, or 17.8 per cent of their total expenditure, the balance by borrowed money. The money raised by the United States Government this year by direct taxes will exceed 30 per cent of our expenditures, the greatest amount ever raised by any country in the world in time of war from direct taxes in proportion to the total expenditure. During the Civil War for every dollar raised by direct taxation we provided $5.09 raised from loans; that is, money borrowed on Government bonds. The gentleman states that there was a greater amount of money raised in the two or three years after the Civil War than had been raised during the time of the war. That is true, for this reason: Until the Congress of the United States began repealing the revenue laws after the Civil War, the country being in a more prosperous condition, and the receipts from internal revenue taxes being larger, there was a greater amount of money raised, because of the prosperity of the country after the war. Again, some of the tariff laws were not enacted until about the middle of the Civil War, and our imports during the war were not as great as they were a little later. Consequently a greater sum of money was raised in that way immediately after the Civil War. That is why the tax receipts were greater after the war than during the Civil War. Internal taxes doubled up.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. While the gentleman is on that subject, can he state why he thinks it would not be better to raise 50 per cent of our expenditures by direct taxes?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. I have been asked that question several times. The good Speaker of the House interrupted me in my remarks on this floor on a previous occasion and said, "Would you send the boys to the trenches and have them fight the battles of this war and then come back home and help pay the taxes?" and there was great applause on the Democratic side of the House.

I say yes; I do not want the boys to go to the trenches and fight the battles of this country and pay taxes at the same time, because, after this war is over, these long-time bonds that are to be issued for 30 or 40 years will come due when the population of this country has 200,000,000 people who will pay these taxes as against 100,000,000 at a time when we are carrying on the greatest war that the world has ever known. I say it is not just to the people at the present time to exact from them such heavy taxes at a time when people are called upon to meet the high cost of living as they never were before.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will yield, does not the gentleman realize that the more you borrow the more you add to the high cost of everything? That is the history the world over.

Mr. FORDNEY. That is true, too, but when you have two people to pay the debt where you only have one now, the burden will be lightened.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the high cost of living is at the present.

Mr. FORDNEY. It is going to last as long as unsettled conditions continue.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the point is the more you borrow the more you inflate prices, and the history of the world shows it.

Mr. FORDNEY. The interest account amounts to a great deal of money. Now, wait a minute. I do not agree with the gentleman from Kentucky. The interest account adds to the public debt, but when the time comes you have two people to pay the debt as against one now, and there is no comparison as to the percentage of cost per capita.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I am not talking about interest cost; I am talking about what every student of finance knows, that when you add to the amount of the bonded indebtedness of the Nation you help to inflate values.

Mr. FORDNEY. Only, my good friend, to the extent of the amount of interest that that indebtedness draws. If you draw all the money in the country to pay taxes each year, what will our industries do for money?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. FORDNEY. It may be that I am, but I do not think so.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman says he does not want the boys who are going to the trenches to do the fighting and then come back here and pay the expenses of the war.

Mr. FORDNEY. Not to pay them now, I say.

Mr. NORTON. I agree with the gentleman; but does not the gentleman think that the boys who have gone to the war and are fighting are the ones who are the owners of the property in this country who will pay the taxes?

Mr. FORDNEY. There is just as great a percentage of rich boys in the war as there are poor boys, and no man has a right to make a statement to the contrary, because it is not true. No man is exempt; every man in the war must pay taxes. Only last evening I was in consultation with some gentlemen now in the war who have already paid their taxes. Everybody in the war and out of the war are called upon to pay taxes now—no exemptions—and they are paying them cheerfully when they have the money, and if they do not have an income they do not pay any tax.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman think that the present taxes being levied are burdensome on the part of the population that have an income of over $500,000 a year?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; it would be silly to claim anything of that kind. A man with an income of half a million dollars a year can pay taxes; but the income tax, gentlemen, has this in its favor, that unless you have the income you do not pay a tax, and if you do have the income you have the money to pay it and do pay it.

A man came to me a few days ago and asked me how much tax he would have to pay. He said, "I am president of a corporation with a capital of $25,000, and my firm made $125,000 during 1917." I said to him, "My friend, the law intends to tax heavily war profits. What business were you in?" He replied, "I was building cantonments for the Government on a cost-plus-profit basis. I received 7 per cent above cost and did $2,000,000 worth of business. We made $140,000 and had to spend about $15,000, leaving $125,000 profit." I asked, "Would you have been in the business, and could you have engaged in any other business, if it had not been for the war, on which you could make 500 per cent profit on your capital?" He answered, "No." "Then you go home and pay your taxes and do not complain. You will have 200 per cent left on your capital after you have paid your tax." He bade me good-by, and said, "I will go home and pay the taxes and say nothing more about it." His taxes are about $75,000, and they ought to be.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That ought to be well known, that if they make large profits on cost-plus contracts they will have to pay high war taxes.

Mr. FORDNEY. Here is a cost-plus contract. It applies to Hog Island. You have heard something about Hog Island before, I believe. [Laughter.] Here are the cost-plus charges. I received this from a man engaged there—received it at first hand:

Hauling 7 pieces of timber, 10 by 16 inches square, 32 feet long, one-half a mile, $98.

On that they received 10 per cent plus the cost. That charge did not include overhead expenses.

Here is the detail: Thirteen men employed at $4.20 each in hauling the timber—3,000 feet board measure of lumber in these seven sticks—half a mile, and the charge is $98.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. When a good team could easily have hauled it at one load.

Mr. FORDNEY. Two checkers, two timekeepers, at $4.20 each, $8.40. They were timekeepers of the men that were hauling the sticks. One auto and a truck trailer, $35, for hauling 3,000 feet of lumber half a mile. Here is another one at Hog Island: Hauled 16 loads of gravel, about 10 cubic yards, at a cost of $106, or $10.60 per cubic yard for hauling the gravel one-half mile—a plus-cost contract. Here is the best part of it: Twenty laborers employed, 7 foremen over those 20 men; 1 laborer employed, 1 foreman over this one man; 14 laborers employed, 11 foremen. There is a total of 35 men employed and 19 foremen over those 35 men—a plus-cost contract.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, that means that these payments are made to subcontractors; they get that money, any old amount, and the fellow with the cost-plus contract gets his profit on the amount paid them; so that the more of this stuff, the more plus there is to it; and that is the plus subject to war tax, while the loose expenditure is all along the line.

Mr. FORDNEY. It means this, that the taxpayers of this country are called upon to pay that money into the Treasury of the United States, and that those cost-plus contracts are robbing the taxpayer beyond all expression.

Mr. FOCHT. Who is responsible for all of that?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I know that my friend from Michigan will permit me to say that the conditions at Hog Island are very much improved.

Mr. FORDNEY. I hope they are since the investigations, but I have seen no report of either one of the investigations. God knows if the conditions at Hog Island do not improve, and the Government goes on paying such penalties as I have mentioned, we will not only be called upon to tax the people from twelve to fifteen billion dollars a year, but every taxpayer in the country will be robbed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. How can the condition improve under the cost-plus system?

Mr. FORDNEY. It can not, for the reason that every man engaged in producing something for the Government on a cost-plus contract is making that contract cost just as much as he can, because the greater the cost the greater his profit.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. It is highway robbery. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. SLOAN. Speaking of Hog Island, is that the original name of the place, or has the name been applied to it on account of the reputation which it has recently earned?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I will answer that if the gentleman from Michigan will permit. The name has been there since the forefathers of the gentleman from Nebraska left Pennsylvania to go out into the wild and woolly west.

Mr. FORDNEY. You tell me when a pig becomes a hog and I can tell you how many thieves there are at Hog Island. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But they are cleaned out now. We have no more thieves there, if there ever were any.

Mr. FORDNEY. I am not casting any reflections upon Pennsylvania. I presume that some of the men employed at Hog Island came from Texas or some other great State in the Southwest.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The cost-plus system came from some other point than Philadelphia, and the contractors are from elsewhere. I shall not reflect upon any other part of my glorious country by referring to the place whence they came.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman speaks of the cost-plus system as being a system of highway robbery. Does not the gentleman think that the Government, by putting a maximum fee that could be earned by these contractors, put a safety valve on the system? For instance, for the entire 16 cantonments constructed in the United States the average profit was 2.6 per cent to the contractor by the actual statistics presented by the War Department.

Mr. SEARS. From actual or inflated cost?

Mr. HOWARD. I am talking about the expenditures, the cost of construction. They netted the contractors 2.6 per cent. That is the testimony before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Is that official?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not know about these things, but I do know that I have a letter in my possession, and that I afterwards interviewed the gentleman, who had been at Hattiesburg, Miss., and he stated that, in the construction of camps there, for every 10 men employed there was 1 timekeeper who received $5 a day. In the business in which I am engaged 1 timekeeper keeps the time of 400 men, and keeps it correctly.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. HENSLEY. What does the gentleman think of the loyalty of any man or set of men who will take advantage of the Government under such circumstances and in that fashion? Does the gentleman think there is any loyalty in those fellows?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; loyalty does not enter into their system.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is it not a fact that the record shows that the cost of construction at Hattiesburg camp was less than at any other camp?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not know that, but I know the statement of the gentleman that was there, who was engaged there. He wrote me a letter, and I afterwards saw him and interviewed him. He said he was there and investigated, and there was 1 timekeeper for every 10 men employed, and that the timekeeper received $5 a day.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in that, because I know that no such practice was carried on at the cantonment that was constructed in my district. Would the gentleman mind putting the name of this informant into the RECORD so that we could run that down?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; I would rather not.

Mr. HOWARD. Because fugitive statements made by men who are not responsible, or who are talking to hear themselves blow off, do a great deal of harm at this time, and I think if such practices were carried on we ought to know it, and we ought to know the authority for the information. It is due to these officers.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman permit me to say——

Mr. HOWARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. FORDNEY. I ask him to take my word upon my honor. I am not in the habit of blowing off——

Mr. HOWARD. I know the gentleman is not. If the gentleman makes this statement on his own responsibility, I accept it.

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman who gave me the information is a high-class gentleman whom I know very well, and I believe what he told me, and I ask the gentleman to accept it.

Mr. HOWARD. That a timekeeper was paid $5 a day for keeping the time on 10 men at the Hattiesburg job?

Mr. FORDNEY. For every 10 men employed there was a timekeeper.

Mr. HOWARD. At $5 a day. I understand it.

Mr. FORDNEY. Now, gentlemen, much has been said, and let me divert for a minute, about the collection of money throughout the country for these income taxes; that being all collected in June it is going to be a very great burden upon the people to pay all this money at that time, because there will be, in round numbers, $3,000,000,000 of internal revenue taxes paid this year during June. That will equal one-half of all the money in circulation in the United States, and to take that money out of the banks and deposit it in the Treasury of the United States is going to lessen the amount of money in the country to be loaned to the great industries of the country; yet that situation has been and is being somewhat relieved. For instance, the Government will now accept from anybody who wishes to pay taxes their money at a discount of 3 per cent. Further, anyone who wishes to pay their taxes and knows about how much those taxes are going to be can go to the Treasury of the United States and purchase a certificate of indebtedness due on the 25th of June and receive 4½ per cent interest upon that certificate from the time of its purchase until the 25th of June. Already there has been sold, to be redeemed in taxes, in round numbers, one and a quarter billion dollars of certificates of indebtedness, so that the situation is being relieved as much as possible.

My friends, all I have to say is this: Of late I have been greatly concerned about the success of the American boys in France. Since Russia withdrew from the battle I have been alarmed that England, France, and the United States could not withstand the battering ram of Germany on the battle field of France, but of late I have been encouraged. This great battle that is going on over there now is the supreme test, in my opinion, and if Germany does not break through the lines of the English, French, and American soldiers in this battle, the Germans, beyond a doubt, are whipped. [Applause.] They have reached their maximum of strength. We have not; we are only getting ready to fight. To-day the Government is doing everything, I believe, in its power to send men and supplies over there to aid our allies. We are greatly handicapped in many ways, especially in our ships on the high seas. We have been greatly handicapped for supplies, but only yesterday I obtained from the Pacific coast this information, that the Government wants this year, in round numbers, 60,000,000 feet of spruce timber to construct aeroplanes.

The demand upon the lumbermen of this country has been made, and they are responding to the extent that to-day the lumber concerns of the Pacific coast have produced more than 30,000,000 feet of the lumber needed this year, and it is estimated that the total 60,000,000 feet of spruce lumber will be furnished to the Government by July 1. Two thousand feet of spruce lumber is required in the construction of one aeroplane; therefore 60,000,000 feet of spruce lumber will enable this Government to construct 30,000 aeroplanes of the largest and most efficient size. So that we are coming to the front in furnishing supplies and building ships. Every sawmill in this country is running to its fullest capacity to supply to the Government every stick of timber or lumber requested by the Government, and that to their fullest capacity, both the mills on the Pacific coast and in the South. Shipping timber is demanded from Douglas fir, found only on the Pacific coast, in the States of Oregon and Washington and in British Columbia, and the long-leafed pine from the South, found in many of the Southern States. I say the mills all over the country are running to the utmost to supply the Government, as also the manufactories of ammunition and guns are running to their fullest capacity. The labor question is a very troublesome one to-day, and the Government is sending to the lumber camps of the Pacific coast, in the States of Washington and Oregon, about 10,000 men, who have been distributed among the lumber camps aiding the proprietors in getting out spruce lumber. The coming of the soldier in soldier's uniform has made the I. W. W. flee like fleas from a dog when you pour tobacco juice on him. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have been asked a great many times about the pay that these soldiers in the lumber camps receive. While he is on the subject, will not the gentleman say that they receive their pay from the lumbermen?

Mr. FORDNEY. The soldiers in the lumber camps and in the sawmills on the Pacific coast are paid the wages paid to other men for that class of work. The wages in the lumber camps—and I speak advisedly—to-day range from $4 to $7 a day. One dollar of the soldier's wages is paid by the proprietor to the Government, and in turn paid by the Government back to the soldier, and the remainder of his daily pay is paid by the man for whom he works.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. FORDNEY. And they are most efficient. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I would like to say, inasmuch as the gentleman has mentioned the great activity in the north Pacific coast States in the way of obtaining spruce and ship timbers, that our people out there, and especially the people of the district which I have the honor to represent, will greatly appreciate the statement he has just made. Our people have prosecuted the work on a large scale, with fast work and good organization. The millmen and the timbermen have placed themselves and their plants absolutely at the disposal of the Government. All have shown, just as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] has shown in his large plant out in my district, that they are in the great work to win and not to embarrass the Government in any way. [Applause.] I can say one thing more, if the House will induge me. I would like to say that among the thousands of soldiers who have been sent into the woods is the son and namesake of the distinguished gentleman from Michigan. That boy enlisted as a private, and after seeing some service in the ranks was sent where his ability counts as that of a dozen men. [Applause.] And so every soldier does his bit. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Now, gentlemen, I have taken entirely too much time, more than I intended; but let me say, in conclusion, that the expense of the United States Government to-day in equipping and supplying our Army, including our loans to our allies in Europe, is more than $30,000,000 per day. Our actual cost, my good friends, at the present time is, in round numbers, $25,000,000 a day, and we have only about 1,500,000 men under arms and in training. But we are spending large sums of money in other ways—in the purchase of supplies, in the building of ships, and so on; and the people of this country ought to feel encouraged with the bravery displayed by our beloved sons now in the trenches in France, and every man should to his full capacity, physically, financially, mentally, contribute his utmost to the success of this great war [applause], and after this war is over settle our financial and our political differences here. But now it is our duty as a unit—Republicans, Democrats, Socialists, Progressives, or whatever you may call them—to march up like men and do our utmost to aid this administration and to aid our Army on the battle field in the success of this great war. I thank you. [Applause.]

I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I shall use little of the committee's time. Nearly all of it is exhausted now. I shall discuss one feature of the bill in which I am interested. That is the nonconvertibility feature of this bill. I have some little personal satisfaction in that departure. I am not gloating over it when I mention it. From the beginning, in committee and on the floor of the House, I opposed the convertibility feature of the former bond bills. I regarded it as a mistaken policy from the beginning. The trouble was that our financiers adopted the convertibility theory right off the bat when England started to try it. Before we got it into operation Great Britain had discarded it. Notwithstanding that fact, which I brought before the committee on several occasions, and on every bond discussion we have had here, it has been adhered to up to this time. I am very much pleased that we have gotten back to what is a sound and proper policy.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand that while we put this provision as to nonconvertibility in subsequent Congresses can repeal that?

Mr. SLOAN. They can, and I am glad the committee has done what it has. It is a matter of gratification so well as vindication to me. The following is taken from the debate on the last bond issue, on September 5, 1917, which, considered with this measure and to-day's debate, is interesting:

"Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

"The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

"The Clerk read as follows:

"Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, throughout this bill in various sections there are references to the conversion or the convertibility of the low-rate interest bonds into higher rate of interest bonds. Section 4 being entirely related to that subject, I move to strike it out, and I desire to give the reasons. This provision following the law of April 24 is that in the issuing of bonds for war purposes that those issued at a low rate of interest when it came time to issue another series of bonds and that series should bear a higher rate of interest, then automatically the bonds issued at the lower rate would become convertible into the later bonds issued at the higher rate. Now that was an entirely new proposition in American finance; it was an entirely new proposition in world finance. The first we heard about it was when it was sought to issue a set of bonds amounting to about $150,000,000 in the latter part of the last session of the last Congress. The reason given by the Secretary of the Treasury at that time and by those favoring the proposition was that it was the system which Great Britain and Canada had found absolutely necessary in order to float their bonds and finance their war. That was defeated by the Committee on Ways and Means, and that defeat was concurred in by the House, it having been passed with the convertibility feature in the Senate. Now, as I stated, the reason given for it was that it was found necessary by Great Britain and Canada to adopt it. The facts were at that time and the history of the transaction now is that at that time Great Britain had itself rejected the conversion system. For the first period of the war this system was not adopted by Great Britain, but it was later adopted by that country, and issues of bonds at a lower rate were made convertible into those bearing a higher rate of interest.

"But whatever may have been their experience, the last issue of bonds by Great Britain—which were issued, I think, in February, 1917; in fact, a little before this first discussion came up—the bond-issuing authorities abandoned the conversion system and the last issue of bonds were not sold with the convertible feature therein. I am informed that Canada has done the same thing. I am not certain about that, but inquiring from those better informed than myself I am convinced of that fact.

"Now, the importance of this will be readily understood, especially when Members of this House recall that but an hour or two ago an amendment was voted down which sought reasonably to limit the time for which any bond should run. I submitted it for 30 years when as a matter of fact under the bill they may be issued for 50 years or 100 years, but in any event the longer the limit possible left in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury, whoever he may be, the greater may be the loss.

"Now, while I move to strike out this section, I in no wise would interfere with the convertible feature of the $2,000,000,000 of bonds that have been issued and sold, because the law of April 24 takes care of those bonds and they are convertible. Assuming that this bill should pass with section 4 stricken out, there would be still in force a provision of the act of April 24, which provides the two billion of bonds already sold to the American people could be converted at the option of the holders into these 4 per cent bonds.

"Now, then, we will just see what the effect of that convertibility has been. Assuming that 30 years will be the period, and that is the lowest probably thought about, it makes a difference on those $2,000,000,000 of one-half per cent a year. For the 30 years which the bonds were to run it would make a difference of 15 per cent of the principal. Fifteen per cent of $2,000,000,000 is $300,000,000. That convertibility, which added perhaps nothing, or not very much, to induce the sales, has saddled upon the American people for the next 30 years on the first issue of bonds an additional tax burden of $300,000,000.

"Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

"Mr. SLOAN. I will.

"Mr. MADDEN. Does not the gentleman in making that statement forget that the bonds which we propose to issue under the authority of this bill are to carry surtaxes and excess-profits taxes and war taxes, while the other bonds will not carry any taxes except the estate taxes?

"Mr. SLOAN. I will say to the gentleman I did not forget that, and I am pleased to have him suggest it, in order that I may explain it. It is not within reason that this war will last more than a year or two years, or, say, three. It is within reason to presume that when this war closes these surtaxes, excess-profits taxes, and war taxes will all be repealed, so that there will not be even one-tenth of the bond period within which the exception to which the gentleman refers to may obtain. Now, let us see what effect it would have on the $7,000,000,000. We are talking about issuing these bonds at 4 per cent instead of 3½ per cent. Why are we doing so? The Secretary could not give us any tangible reason, only his judgment, which was based on general observation. I suppose his judgment is good, but the only tangible proof before the American people is the sale of these 3½ per cent bonds. Where were they sold?

"Just a few of them have been sold in the last few weeks in New York. And sold by whom to whom? Nobody knows here, at least. But they were depressed below the 100 per cent. Why? We have been expecting a new bond issue in this country. Bond-holder A of this country could very easily sell a little block of bonds to B, and B sell a little block of bonds at 99½ per cent, and that being the only market established, the Secretary of the Treasury would be compelled to say, 'I can not issue a new or other set of bonds at 3½ per cent. I must increase it to 4 per cent.' Which is precisely what he proposes to do. More than that, every bondholder in the United States would be interested at this time. We are all patriotic, it is true, but we are all somewhat given to gain and desirous of increasing our stores wherever we can and would desire to obtain a higher rate of interest on our holdings. How could they get it? By allowing the quotations to go out to the country of under 100 per cent. And here and now before their bonds are issued to them or come into their hands, they can come up and say, and have a right to say, and all the purchasers of the bonds, and perhaps every man on this floor will, as he has a right to, go up and say, 'I want new 4 per cent bonds.'

"The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

"Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

"The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

"There was no objection.

"Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit one question?

"Mr. SLOAN. I shall be pleased to do so.

"Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Speaking of that depreciation of 3½ per cent bonds on the New York Stock Exchange, was there anything in the financial condition of this Republic, anything in the outlook anywhere, which would account for that depreciation of those bonds of a country so financially strong as this, except deliberate bond manipulation for bond purposes?

"Mr. SLOAN. I should not like to say that that was the only reason, but it is sufficient reason for me to urge that we do not allow the American people to become its victims. [Applause.]

"Now, what effect would it have on the $7,000,000,000? If the $7,000,000,000 should be issued at 4 per cent and we include the $2,000,000,000 being converted, 10 months from now, at the end of the fiscal year for which we are providing in this bill—and it is not pretended we are providing for any later period—another bond issue will be necessary. The same power, the same conditions, the same manipulation, followed by the same necessary judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, would say that the new bonds probably would have to bear 4½ per cent before they would sell. What would be the effect? The new bonds would bear 4½ per cent, and under this the old bonds, $7,000,000,000 of them, would be entitled to bear 4½ per cent. What would that amount to? Assuming that they would be given a period of life of 30 years, it would amount to, for $7,000,000,000, one-half per cent per annum for 30 years on $7,000,000,000. That one-half per cent for 30 years on $7,000,000,000 of bonds would amount to an additional burden on the American people of $1,050,000,000 in interest.

"Now, then, we adopted this system—new and strange—for the sole reason that we were profiting by the mistakes of Great Britain and Canada. When this bond issue was up that finally ripened in the act of April 24 there was a statement made that it was necessary for this to be done. The statement was made by several eminent financial authorities among the Members of this body. I then challenged the correctness of the statement that it was Great Britain's policy and Canada's policy. After a fine lifting of the superior eyebrows, it was indicated that I was almost in contempt of court and guilty of lese majeste for questioning it. Just recently, in the Committee on Ways and Means, one of the eminent members of that committee, Judge HULL, who, perhaps, makes as close if not a closer investigation of these particular facts than any other Member of the House, called it to the attention of the committee, citing the authority upon which I based in part my remarks.

"Now, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if we follow Great Britain and Canada off in their error it would be perfectly safe for us to correct our course. It seems to me that, by starting out and saying that this Secretary of the Treasury or his successor shall have the right to issue bonds at 10, 20, 30, 50, or 100 years with this convertibility feature in it during the life of the probable bonds we will have to issue, we will be placing an unnecessary burden of from one to two billion dollars in interest charges upon the American people. I think we ought to strike out this section. It will not deprive those purchasers of the first $2,000,000,000 of bonds of the right of conversion which it secured them.

"We do not repeal the act of April 24, 1917. We have made a contract, so far as the $2,000,000,000 of bonds are concerned. We ought to, and would be, compelled to live up to it. But, under the circumstances, now I think we should abandon the convertibility theory of these bonds.

"The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

"Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I trust the gentleman's amendment will not prevail. I am confident, and I believe the business men of this House—I am not a business man myself, however—will agree with me and with the Secretary of the Treasury and many of the experts of the Treasury Department and others outside of the Treasury Department who assisted in the sale of the last bonds in the opinion, that if we do not put the convertibility feature into the bonds we shall never be able to sell the $7,000,000,000, or even $3,000,000,000, of the bonds. The conversion theory is that the man who now comes forward willingly and readily at the first demand of the Government and puts his money into these bonds, to help the Government out, ought to get the same rate of interest that is paid by the Government to the financial slacker who will hold back until the Government in its distress is forced to issue bonds bearing a higher rate of interest and then buys at such higher rate. Now, the proposition in the bill is to give the man who puts his money in at first at the lower rate the right to convert his bond into a bond bearing as high a rate as the bond issued to the man who comes in last. The gentleman's amendment denies him that right.

"Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

"Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

"Mr. SLOAN. Is it not a fact that Great Britain in its last issue of $5,000,000,000 bonds successfully sold that issue without the convertibility feature in it?

"Mr. KITCHIN. But she raised the rate of interest to 5½ or 5½ per cent. We could sell these bonds at 5½ or 5 per cent easily without the convertibility feature. But the Government should not give such a high rate. We can not sell this 4 per cent bond, subject to the estate and inheritance tax and subject to the supertaxes and excess-profits or war-profits taxes without this conversion privilege.

"I believe it is right to pay me the higher rate if I now put my money into bonds at 4 per cent in order to help the Government out in its war struggle if the Government hereafter issues bonds at 5 per cent to Tom, Dick, and Harry, who are unwilling now to put up their money to help it but hold back waiting for the Government to be forced to issue bonds at 5 per cent. It seems only just that I should have my 4 per cent bond converted into the 5 per cent bond which the financial slackers get. If we do not put this conversion privilege into the act, thousands who are able to take these bonds would hold back in the hope that the Government would get into more stringent financial circumstances and would be forced to pay a higher rate of interest on bonds hereafter issued. With the conversion privilege in it, everyone would know that whatever may be the rate in the bond purchased he would have the right of converting it into a bond of the higher rate if the Government should thereafter issue bonds of a higher rate, and there would be no incentive to hold back.

"I realize that there is much force in the argument of the gentleman and much reason to sustain his position, but he is basing his argument and his position upon the theory that the Secretary of the Treasury has the right hereafter to make the rate of interest higher than that carried in this bill. The Secretary is given no such authority.

"There can be no rate higher than 4 per cent, the rate carried in this bill, unless Congress hereafter, when it authorizes other issue of bonds, shall authorize a higher rate. The right and opportunity will be given then to defeat any effort to make a higher rate. It is not in the discretion or power of the Secretary of the Treasury, or of the President, or anyone to allow on any bond authorized in this bill a higher rate than 4 per cent. It is in the discretion only of Congress; and before any of these bonds can be converted into bonds bearing a higher rate than 4 per cent, as carried by this bill, Congress must pass an act making the rate higher than 4 per cent. I myself can not conceive how this great Government, with its untold billions of wealth and resources, can ever be compelled to pay a higher rate than 4 per cent. I can not conceive how a patriotic people like the American people will ever force its Government to sell its bonds at a higher rate than 4 per cent; and I believe that if this war lasts two years or three years or five years or more it will never be necessary for the United States to issue bonds at a rate higher than 4 per cent. Why? The millions of people of small, modest incomes, not large enough to pay supertaxes, will consider 4 per cent, free of all State, county, and municipal taxes, and free of all other taxes except estate taxes, and supertaxes and excess profits, which they will not have to pay because their incomes are not large enough, a splendid investment. They will get a larger net return for such investment than they do in loaning out their money on other security, but subject to all taxes of all kinds—Federal, State, county, and city. Take my State, for instance, where the 6 per cent interest rate prevails. A person living in any city or town in my State who loans out his money at 6 per cent only gets a net return of 3¼ or 3½ per cent. He can put his money in a Government bond, now or hereafter at 4 per cent, and receive larger net return than he can by loaning it out at 6 per cent.

"They say the wealthy man will not take these 4 per cent bonds if they be made subject to the estate tax, supertax, or excess-profits tax. If I were Secretary of the Treasury, I would know how to make him take his share of bonds.

"I would go to the big, rich man who refuses to put his money into 4 per cent bonds when the Government needs the money to defend its life in this war, and I would say to him, 'We can raise the money to finance this war, to continue this struggle to ultimate triumph, in only two ways, one by taxation and the other by the issuance of bonds. If you invest your money in these bonds, we will give you an opportunity to get back all you put in with interest at 4 per cent; but if you refuse to help your Government out in this way and force it to raise the money by taxation, we will see to it that it forces you to pay these taxes out of your incomes and profits, and you will get nothing in return.' [Applause.] If we take that position, no bond will ever be issued at more than 4 per cent, and the rates which the gentleman anticipates will never be authorized. I do not believe the Secretary of the Treasury or Congress will ever be forced to that position, because I am confident that there are patriotic men among the wealthy who will readily respond to the needs of the Government.

"But remember, if the rate on the bonds issued under this bill is made more than 4 per cent, Congress will have to do it. If such an attempt shall ever be made here, we and you will have an opportunity to oppose it then. [Applause.]

"The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

"The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SLOAN) there were—ayes 11 and noes 70.

"So the amendment was rejected."

Now to-day, March 30, 1918, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee stood on the floor and plead for the passage of this bill with the convertibility feature stricken out. He used precisely the same arguments I used less than seven months ago, the only difference of importance worth mentioning being that he used better language, and the result was a unanimous vote to keep out the convertibility feature, or, rather, it passed that way without objection.

Note, the chairman said: "If we take that position no bond will ever be issued at more than 4 per cent. * * * I do not believe the Secretary of the Treasury will ever be forced to that position." Well, the present bill calls for bonds at 4¼ per cent.

I mention these facts that the history of this war-bond policy may be "kept on straight," not for any victory to myself, because I am convinced that it was the experience of the Treasury Department which brought conviction, and not my arguments. I shall present one other feature of this bill, not so much of what is in the bill, but the manner in which this bill is presented to the House and to the country. You know that I am a pretty good partisan myself, and under almost any circumstances good, healthy partisanship especially appeals to me. Strong, responsible partisanship in time of peace is good for the public, and moderate partisanship constructively conducted in ordinary war times is wholesome and the country is better for it. But there are brief periods in the history of our country when partisanship should be absolutely eliminated. Such a period we have just had during the last nine days, while there has been waged the great unnamed battle, a battle to be named only when its full scope, magnitude, and final results shall suggest to philosopher or poet an expressive title. This period has been one when men have usually ignored the smaller considerations of life to think large and do large acts. Real nobility is apt to be revealed in such a crisis; the lack of it is quite as liable to be discovered.

The presentation of this measure, supported by every member of the Ways and Means Committee, to the House of Representatives, there to receive the vote of every Member is a fact worthy of a place in history when the world is dealing only in superlatives. The measure comes from the committee after vigorous though not acrimonious discussion. Out of that discussion came many safeguards to the colossal fund we hereby draw upon the American future. If there is faction or partisanship in this country, they had no access to our committee.

This procedure represents one of the best phases of our national life. The bill comes forward when the progressive forces of civilization are in death grapple with the enraged might of modern barbarism on the fields of France. The superb form, clean-limbed, bright-eyed, quick-brained American nobility are there in time to stem the Hun tide of savagery. They bring their militant manhood to aid the stubborn, resistant Briton and headlong, valorous Gaul. Together they constitute a wall of civilization against which the hordes of animated cupidity, hate, cruelty, and crime led by inordinate ambition will beat and break and beat and break again until in billows of their own dark blood they shall be swept back to redden the Rhine. [Applause.]

The multiplied American thousands moving majestically to victory or death are entitled to believe that the united prayers of their 100,000,000 countrymen are invoking the god of battles to their aid. They have a right to believe that in the camp, on the march, upon the sea, under its waters, or yet in the upper air, wherever war-clad Americans are, their eyes are turned toward France and their hearts follow their vision. [Applause.]

They are entitled to know that in this hour those who toil with hand or brain shall object to neither hours or wage; that wealth shall not stickle for profit nor struggle to save capital; and that all our resources—industrial, financial, and martial—shall mobilize with power, precision, and dispatch.

They have a right to know that the American people are whole heartedly for St. George and against the Dragon; for the cross and against the crescent; for Pershing and against Hindenburg. [Applause.]

They have a right to know just now, when the British Empire is menaced, the French Republic is battling for existence, and America is threatened, that those who sit in either Chamber of deliberation in this great Republic as well as those who execute the laws and direct our armed forces shall speak words of zeal to inspire, confidence to unify, and authority to command, that the people's purpose may be united, courage steeled, and arms strengthened. [Applause.] They have a right to know that no note of discord shall be sounded and no partisan word uttered to weaken our national will or reduce our power.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I would like to inquire whether or not it is not as essential for the people that are behind the Army to furnish the incentive and sinews of war as it is for the people that are fighting the battles, inasmuch as they are engaged in the same work and should be as much interested and absorbed for that purpose?

Mr. SLOAN. There is but one answer, and that is the universal American "aye."

These are our battling brothers' rights. They should have them in bounteous measure while they undergo their acid test. No true test was ever based upon promise or profession. It is reserved for performance and execution. [Applause.]

To the chairman and members of the Ways and Means Committee, dismissing my own small part in the several days of deliberation and deliverance, let me say you have done well.

To the American people you have shown how patriots should proceed under the spell of the mightiest martial event of all time. Let mankind know that we provide fifteen hundred millions of the peoples' credits to further finance the war, and to aid the allied powers and sustain their battling hosts—fifteen hundred million more. Let our enemies read in the unity and harmony with which this measure is presented our determination for victory. [Applause.]

To me it shows that when our national life is reduced to its primal elements and they swell into gigantic proportions, the voice of the House of Representatives is the true voice of the Republic.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOSTER). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been fixed by the House.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The other side had twice as much time as this side.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, what is the Chair's interpretation of the question of time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] used 1 hour and 5 minutes, 20 minutes more than the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] had.

Mr. JUUL. I am sure the Members would like to hear the balance of the speech of the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understand the Chair to hold that there are 20 minutes remaining at the disposal of this side?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the Chair will so hold.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska five additional minutes, or so much thereof as he may need.

Mr. SLOAN. I thank the gentleman.

It should be a proud fact that during this great "battle of the ages" no voice in authority in this House has uttered a partisan charge and no discordant note has been sounded. It is gratifying to recall that this, the first division of the three divisions of our Government formed by the great convention to make or execute our laws, in this crisis takes and deserves its true station. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it is necessary that this bill should be passed, and doubtless it will be passed with such modifications as to details as the House might, in its judgment, see fit to make. The Secretary of the Treasury has submitted a report from which it appears that the estimated disbursements for this fiscal year, including the loans to allies, are something over $16,000,000,000. You will understand, of course, that the appropriations are much larger, but all of the appropriations in certain lines will not be spent. It is expected that the Treasury will acquire from what is called "ordinary receipts," which is largely made up of customs and taxes, $3,856,800,000. The receipts for the bonds sold, savings certificates, and so forth, will bring the grand total of receipts to a little over twelve and a half billions. To keep a balance in the Treasury of five hundred millions as is necessary in war time, and provide a billion and a half to loan to our allies, it is considered necessary to authorize three billions of additional bonds. As we have failed to raise the money by taxation, it is plain that there is nothing left but another bond issue. It has been thought best to provide for this by increasing the amount of the bonds now authorized by the act of September 24, 1917, to $12,000,000,000. This, with the $2,000,000,000 of the first liberty loan, would make the total bond authorizations since the declaration of war $14,000,000,000. It is somewhat singular that upon the occasion of consideration of a bill authorizing the issuance of four and a half billions of bonds the attendance of Members should be so light, and when the bill providing for the expenditure of about $10,000,000 to furnish seed and credit to the farmers the attendance should have been so full. Either Members do not understand the importance of these bond bills, or else they imagine that their attendance is unnecessary because the bills will in any event pass.

It is true that we have passed all bond bills and appropriation bills by a nearly unanimous vote. It is also true that revenue bills—that is, bills which levied taxes to pay for the war—have met with strenuous opposition in some quarters. Many seem to have considered that it was sufficient evidence of their patriotism that they should vote bonds, forgetting that the money must be paid some time and overlooking the dangers of relying too largely on the credit system.

Of course it is easy to pass bond bills. They go through with a hurrah every time. It is difficult to pass bills levying heavy taxes, and a chorus of protests against them rises the moment they are presented. It is popular to favor bond bills. It is unpopular to press tax measures to a conclusion, but in this respect I am compelled to take the unpopular side. The task of the Ways and Means Committee in financing the war increases every day, and every bond bill we pass adds to its difficulties. No one seems to stop for a moment to consider anything but supplying the immediate needs of the Government. The future is not considered at all. There was a time when, like the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON], I was anxious on account of the tremendous burden we were laying upon succeeding generations. Serious as this thought was and is, there are more serious matters about which we should now be anxious. Gentlemen of the House, we are traveling in a vicious circle. Each one of these huge bond issues causes an inflation of credit, which in turn brings about an inflation of prices. With each issue the cost of living rises; next there is a demand for an increase of wages in proportion. As wages increase the cost of production increases; prices again rise and we again make the rounds of the circle. Nor is this all. As prices continue to rise the Government is compelled to pay double and even treble the prices which prevailed before the war for material necessary to carry it on, and this rise in prices, in fact, causes our bonds to be issued at a heavy discount, and this increases the burden of the future.

These are matters to be seriously considered, but in this terrible crisis of our affairs, when the greatest battle ever known in history is now raging; when in that valley of destruction across the sea the shadow of death passes over a hundred thousand men every day; when we observe our allies, battling desperately and valiantly, compelled each day to yield to the enemy, there are other matters far more important. It is time we realized that we can not win this war simply by passing bond bills and making appropriations. We have been spending money recklessly, so recklessly that in many instances it seems as if department officials put no check upon waste or extravagance. We have satisfied our patriotism by paying the cost without complaint and have deceived ourselves into thinking that we were winning the war by making prodigious appropriations, when in fact we have so far made no impression on it. Although we have been in the war more than a year, we have not yet made our efforts felt.

Mr. Chairman, the war can not be won without money, but war can not be won with money alone. If the money is used to no good purpose it is worse than wasted. When this war began Congress pledged to its support all of the resources of this country, and its resources included not merely money but the service and labor of the citizens. We have not used a tithe of our resources. If we had we would not now be destitute of ships, of artillery, of airplanes, of material in hundreds of other respects; nor are these deficiencies entirely due to mismanagement. Instead of devoting our strength and our power to meet the exigencies of this mighty conflict we have attempted to do everything the easiest way, to try and live in ease and comfort, to make profits, to continue all the luxuries which we have heretofore enjoyed. Every day we are told by some one who is thoughtfully considering the future that the Nation must work and economize, abandon luxury and unnecessary production, and devote all its strength to those things which are needed to win the war. Is anybody doing it? Have the expenses for luxuries decreased? Have unnecessary industries been abandoned? Everyone knows they have not. Nor has there been, so far as I can see, any attempt to economize on the direct expenditures of the war. We appropriate fifty millions one day, five hundred the next, and perhaps a billion the next, without any real, substantial, or determined effort to obtain the same or better results with less money.

As to labor, the situation is perhaps worst of all. With hundreds of thousands of men idle simply from choice, there are localities where work halts because of want of workmen and the construction of our ships has repeatedly been delayed by strikes. It is intolerable where success in the war depends so much on ships that we have not got them and are not finding a way to produce them. The plain fact is that we are using only half of our resources and not half of our man power, yet we are in danger of losing the war for want of materials and workers. In the meantime the fate of nations trembles in the balance. Too late the allies have always been; too late, as I have said before, in Belgium; too late in Serbia; too late in Roumania; too late at the Dardanelles. To-day we are too late to cooperate in any extensive manner in what may be the decisive battle of the war. If this crisis should be passed so that another opportunity should be given us, it is not merely folly but it is criminal to proceed as we have been doing. Every day that the war is prolonged will cost us thousands of lives and millions of money. Every day that it is prolonged increases the chances that a decision may be against us. We are contending with an enemy that stops at nothing. With untiring energy, with unexampled efficiency, with remorseless criminality, it has been pressing the war and devoting to it every resource. Willingly or unwillingly, the German people make every sacrifice in support of the war, and an inflexible despotism has brought their labor to the highest state of efficiency.

I can not believe that the American people are incapable of sacrifices that are necessary or that their patriotism is not of the loftiest order. They do not realize the necessities of the hour and that only by the use of the sternest of measures can we be saved from the German yoke. They are not aware of the peril that confronts us, while waste and extravagance are unchecked, and inefficiency presents our sending aid to our hard-pressed allies. It is time they were told the truth and roused to exertions that will meet real conditions, lest this Nation perish from the earth. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bond measure, and intend to vote for it, as I have voted for all war measures, and intend to vote for all measures that are necessary for the successful prosecution of this war.

As sure as war follows peace, peace will follow war. I have introduced a resolution providing for a commission of three Democrats and three Republicans to study these questions and recommend to Congress at its next session proper legislation to bring about the passage of this country from a state of war to a state of peace with the least disturbance to business and the least inconvenience to this country.

Since the Civil War this country has devoted its time exclusively to the making of money, forgetful of the great lesson of unpreparedness taught us by that great war. Even after the outbreak of this great war we dreamed on and made no preparation for the great war into which we eventually were drawn.

Are we going to dream through this war and be unprepared for peace, when peace comes, as we were unprepared for war? I am for preparedness, whether it means preparedness for peace or for war.

Thousands of lives will be lost in this great war, and billions of dollars' worth of property has been diverted from the paths of industry to the pursuits of war. There will be a great readjustment when peace comes. What preparation are we making for this readjustment? We should be prepared for it so that we can pass from a state of war to a state of peace with the least disturbance to business and the least inconvenience to the people of this country and to the industries of this country.

While we are fighting to make the world safe for democracy, some of the other countries are fighting to make the commerce of the world safe for themselves. We are now manufacturing millions of dollars' worth of articles that we never manufactured before the war. Why can not we manufacture them after the war?

If we get prepared for peace, we will not have to go through a long period of business disturbance, reconstruction, and readjustment after the war is over. It is costing us billions of dollars to prepare for war, because we were not prepared before the war, and made no effort to prepare. It is possible, if we had been prepared for war, we may not have gotten into the war. It pays always to be prepared, either for peace or war, for twice armed is he who is prepared.

I believe in the great toast proposed by Commodore Decatur, "My country, may she always be right; but right or wrong, my country." I stood for preparedness for war before this war began. I am now going to stand for preparedness for peace, for I know peace will follow war as sure as night follows day and day follows night.

After the war this country will be so greatly in debt that we will have to tax all the industries of this country to pay the interest on this debt and create a reserve fund to pay off the principal. We should encourage industry; we should encourage manufacturing; we should encourage labor; we should encourage commerce. We will have thousands of tons of shipping after the close of this war. What use can be made of it? We may have thousands of crippled soldiers after this war. What can they best do to help their country in times of peace? And what will we do to help them take their stations in life?

How are we going to care for the widows and orphans? This question and many others must be met and we should prepare to meet them now. What are we doing to prepare for these conditions that will certainly arise after this war is over? All manufacturing, agriculture, mining, and other industries must be encouraged so that the greatest efficiency in production will prevail.

If we do not do this, we may suffer an awful panic in business, an awful disturbance in financial conditions, and great suffering among the people. Let us draw wisdom from past experiences and prepare ourselves for peace. Other countries are preparing themselves for peace. Japan is doing it; France is making ready for peace; and Great Britain is always preparing to extend her commerce. The South American countries are now studying these problems of peace. Why should this country not profit by their examples and not be found soundly sleeping at the switch when peace comes? I want to see my country prepared at all times for any emergency that may arise. I ask you to pass this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of this bill, as I have been of all measures for the prosecution of the war. I merely want to talk about two possible amendments to the bill.

As to one of them the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, has already indicated that he would have no objection to it. That is an amendment to section 5 which provides for a deduction of the value of United States bonds in exempting bank stock from State taxation. That section should be amended, I think, surely, so that only bonds issued during the present war should be deducted. The national banks have long had bonds to secure circulation, and it certainly would not help the sale of liberty bonds any to let them deduct for purposes of State taxation the value of the 2 per cent bonds they have had for many years in their vaults. If they were allowed to deduct those bonds, no State taxes at all would be paid on their stock in many cases and the States would lose a considerable revenue.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. I will for a question, but not for a speech.

Mr. DOMINICK. I do not propose to make a speech at this time. Is the gentleman a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. PLATT. I am.

Mr. DOMINICK. I would like to ask if this same proposition has not been pending before the Committee on Banking and Currency, and have not hearings been had on it a couple of times, and has not the committee refused to report the bill to the House?

Mr. PLATT. A similar proposition was before the Committee on Banking and Currency, and we had the Comptroller of the Currency before us. He explained his reason for wanting it adopted. The committee twice postponed action on it, and finally decided not to report it; but I think I violate no confidence in saying that the committee suggested to the Comptroller of the Currency that it ought to be in this bill rather than a separate national-bank bill.

Mr. McFADDEN. I simply want to remind the gentleman that the bill the Banking and Currency Committee considered applied only to exempting national banks, while this bill includes State banks as well.

Mr. PLATT. Yes. Now, one other matter, and that is in regard to the Federal taxation of liberty bonds. The present law provides that $5,000 of the 4 per cent bonds can be owned by an individual or association free of any tax. They are only subject to surtaxes, anyway.

It seems to me that section 7 of the act of September 24, 1917, might well be amended to read something like this: "But any individual, partnership, association, or corporation may own, free of all taxes, an amount of bonds the interest on which does not exceed the minimum sum exempted from income tax under section 3 of the act of October 3, 1917, entitled 'An act to provide revenues and defray war expenses, and for other purposes.'"

Under such a provision, if the rate of interest were 4 per cent, an individual or partnership or association could own $25,000 worth of bonds. If it were 4¼ per cent, such a party could own $23,529. If it were 4½ per cent, the amount that could be owned would be $22,222. If it were 5 per cent, $20,000. So that as the rate rises the amount that could be held would be less. The Government will lose very little revenue from such an amendment, but the psychological affect would be great, especially among the small taxpayers who pay only small surtaxes, and it would very greatly promote the sale of the bonds, in my opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, do I understand we have six minutes remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 12 minutes remaining.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, it is true that a bill providing for practically the same thing as section 5 of this bill was considered by the Banking and Currency Committee. This provision was sent up to that committee by the Secretary of the Treasury, and the committee, after considering the provisions of it, refused to report the bill, notwithstanding the fact that the Comptroller of the Currency appeared and urged that it be favorably reported out of committee——

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Did you have a vote on it in your committee?

Mr. McFADDEN. I think we did; yes.

Mr. GARNER. That is not my understanding.

Mr. McFADDEN. We usually do. We have to put the Democrats on record sometimes.

Mr. GARNER. I should like to see the record of that vote.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say to the gentleman that I voted against the measure, if that is what he is driving at.

Mr. DYER. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Texas is out of order, and so is the gentleman from Pennsylvania, in revealing what took place in the committee. Surely the gentleman from Texas, who is one of the most able and distinguished parliamentarians in this body, is very familiar with that rule.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman will permit, "the gentleman from Texas" did not ask him anything about that. He asked merely if they had a vote in the committee. The gentleman from Pennsylvania had already said that the committee declined to report the bill, and I made the inquiry whether there was a vote in the committee. I do not think that is unparliamentary.

Mr. McFADDEN. I want to direct my special attention to this section of the bill—section 5—and to point out some things in regard to it that seem to me to be a little unjust. I do not want to belittle the effect that this provision is going to have in the way of stimulating the sale of liberty bonds. I am not saying what I have to say in the way of criticizing at all, but I want to point out, if I can, in these few minutes just what this section means to the various States in loss of taxes.

Now, section 5 of this bill provides in a practical, working way for the exemption from taxation of National and State banks by the various States. For instance, take either one of these classes of banks in the State of Pennsylvania, with a capital, we will say, of $500,000 and a surplus of $250,000 and total assets of $10,000,000. An institution of this kind is exercising the various functions which are given to that bank through its charter, granted by the State.

Mr. SNYDER. I should like to ask the gentleman if he believes, as a banker and a member of this Banking Committee, that if this bill could be amended in such a way as to embody the features of the bill that the gentleman has presented with regard to deferring payments of taxes on incomes and corporation excess-profits taxes it would assist in this liberty bond sale that is now facing us?

Mr. McFADDEN. I think it would, very materially; yes.

Mr. SNYDER. As a member of that committee, does the gentleman think that this bill could be amended so as to include something like the bill that he presented?

Mr. McFADDEN. It could be.

Mr. SNYDER. I want to ask a further question. If it is found that that can not be done, would it not assist the sale of liberty bonds, and would it not assist the banks of this country greatly if the bill should be amended so that the Secretary of the Treasury could order checks drawn on banks which now have a Government credit to be returned immediately to those banks for deposit in the banks in which the Government now has a regular Government deposit?

Mr. McFADDEN. There is such a limited provision in the bill. I think it would be very helpful to the banks and would encourage the sale of these bonds.

Mr. SNYDER. If there is any way in which this bill can be amended so as to embody your measure, it should be done, not only in the interest of the banks but of all of the people of the country who have to pay these taxes.

Mr. McFADDEN. I thank the gentleman for that favorable reference to my bill.

Now, I say a bank in Pennsylvania with a capital of $500,000 and a surplus of $250,000 and total assets of $10,000,000, exercising all the various functions which its charter gives it, will by investing $750,000 in United States bonds, or the value of its shares, be exempt from State taxation, or under this section the States will be deprived of the right to tax these banks. Pennsylvania will be deprived of at least $2,000.000 annual income and the banks, or their stockholders, will be saved this amount of taxes. Looking at this as a stimulant for the sale of liberty bonds it is fine; but from the standpoint of the State's revenue it is a serious question. I can see also where the banks, or their shareholders, more properly, would be relieved of large taxes; but the question of providing the losses in State revenue would then fall upon the entire people or the remaining taxing resources of the State. The United States would be the gainer to the extent of finding in these banks a market for the sale of liberty bonds to the extent of the market value of all shares of the National and State banks—less the amount of the present holdings of United States bonds. The capital and surplus of national banks alone last June 20, 1917, was over $2,300,000,000. I have not the figures for the State banks.

On the other hand, the States would be out the amount of money or taxes that these banks would be relieved of the payment of, and would have to curtail the State's expenses this amount or collect from the taxpayers the amount that would otherwise be collected from that well-to-do class of bank-stock holders. I also seriously question the right of Congress to take away the power from the States to tax their own chartered institutions, to say nothing about the right given them by this Congress in 1864 to tax the value of stock in national banks, which has never been questioned till now.

I do not want it understood that I would in any way interfere with the source of a sale of liberty bonds, but I would point out that the banks are not seeking this legislation, but it is insisted upon by the Secretary of the Treasury as an inducement to the banks to buy liberty bonds. I want to show you what you already know—that the National and State banks need no "hypodermic." They have proven their patriotism in the matter of the sale and purchase of these liberty bonds and certificates, including war savings stamps, and will continue to make good in the future each time their country is in need of the kind of service they know so well how to render whether this section is left in or out.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I should like to put into the RECORD a few facts with regard to this bill, tending to show what the United States has thus far done in a financial way in support of the war, aside from levying taxes directly upon the people.

We hear a great deal about what the other countries are doing, and sometimes it is said the United States should do more than it has done up to the present time. We have been in this war approximately one year, and the Secretary of the Treasury has happily selected the anniversary of our entrance into the war, April 6 next, as the time for starting the third liberty loan drive. That brings up anew the question of our finances. Why should there be a third drive to sell liberty loan bonds? The answer is patent to anyone who sits for a few minutes with the Commitee on Ways and Means and observes the income and outgo of the Government resources. The fact is we are up against the necessity of raising more funds to support our war program. What have we done since our entrance into the war, April 6, 1917? To begin with we issued $2,000.000,000 of bonds. The act of April 24, 1917, authorized that issue.

The act of September 24, 1917, authorized an issue of $7,538,945,460. The present bill brings forward all bond issues heretofore made and groups the preceding laws authorizing bonds for war purposes and raises the limit of bonds issued and to be issued to the staggering aggregate of $14,000,000,000.

That does not include the authorized issue of $2,000,000,000 of thrift stamps. Including the thrift stamps, our total bond obligations, if this bill passes, will mount up to $16,000,000,000. Apart from the bonds already issued, and to be authorized by this bill aggregating a total of $16,000,000,000, we have authorized and will authorize by this bill an issue of certificates of indebtedness, which are short-term loans, to an aggregate of $8,000,000,000. It may not be necessary to issue so many; but, in the opinion of the committee, it was deemed wise to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to make an issue of that amount if he deemed it necessary in the national interest.

That makes the stupendous total of $24,000,000,000 for which the Government of the United States has thus far, or will by the passage of this bill, involve itself this year for the purpose of supporting the war, sustaining our armies abroad, and assisting the allies. Not all of that money is applied to the purposes of the United States exclusively. A large proportion of it is loaned to our allies. We have provided thus far for an issue of bonds amounting to $7,000,000,000 to be loaned to our allies. Thus far we have loaned to them—and they include Belgium, Cuba, France, Great Britain, Russia, and Serbia—a total of $4,960,600,000, and we are providing here for additional loans to them. That is an answer to the question, What has the United States thus far done to support the war? We have not only levied taxes upon our people to an enormous extent, piling up excess taxes upon normal taxes; we are not only prepared to go still further and pile up these taxes directly upon the people, but we have made provision up to this time, and will have made provision by the passage of this bill, for raising by loans and certificates of indebtedness the aggregate of $24,000,000,000, of which seven billions and more are to go to our friends across the water before the coming winter. That seems to me to be doing pretty well to date.

Mr. Chairman, to show more accurately the situation, I insert here an extract from the testimony of the Secretary of the Treasury before the Ways and Means Committee in answer to some questions by myself (pages 31 to 33 of the hearings):

Q. I want to cover the bond-issue transactions for the purpose of the record. The act of April 24, 1917, authorized an issue of $2,000,000,000 of bonds; the act of September 24, 1917, authorized the issue of $7,538,945,460. This bill would increase the issue $4,461,054,540, making a total issue of $14,000,000,000. That is correct?—A. Including the $2,000,000,000 that was issued under the first law.

Q. That includes all. Everything is brought up to date and covered by the $14,000,000,000 that would be authorized, if this bill should pass?—A. Precisely.

Q. That does not include the $2,000,000,000 of thrift stamps authorized?—A. No.

Q. That would make $16,000,000,000 altogether?—A. Yes.

Q. That does not include the certificates of indebtedness authorized up to date to the extent of $4,000,000,000 and by this bill increased to $8,000,000,000?—A. No.

Q. There have been sold of the bonds thus far authorized, under the act of April 24, 1917, $1,986,774,655.19, and under the act of September 24, 1917, $3,808,766,150, making a total bond issue up to date of $5,795,540,805.19, leaving available for issue within the discretion of the Secretary, if this bill passes, a total of $8,204,459,194.81.—A. That is substantially correct.

Q. Now, as to our foreign loans, how much has been loaned thus far to the allies? We authorized, I understand, $7,000,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. If you have a list there, Mr. Secretary, put it in the record.

Secretary MCADOO. We have been authorized to loan to the foreign countries, as you know, a total of $7,000,000,000—$3,000,000,000 under the first act and $4,000,000,000 under the second. Up to date credits have been established aggregating for all the allied governments a total of $4,960,000,000. I shall put this in the record.

Q. Is that a statement of your transactions with the allies?—A. Yes; each Government is indicated here. I will give you the total, and shall put this in the record. The credits established were $4,960,000,000; the loans actually made were $4,642,829,750. The balance under established credits, the balance to their credit now, is $317,770,250.

Q. Will you put the date in?—A. This is to March 26, 1918.

Q. A day or two ago?—A. Yes. That may be put in the record.

The matter referred to is here printed in full, as follows:

Loans to foreign Governments to and including Mar. 26, 1918.

[Acts of Apr. 24, 1917, and Sept. 24, 1917.]

Country.	Credits established.	Loans made.	Balances under established credits.
Belgium	$104,600,000	$85,900,000	$18,700,000
Cuba	15,000,000		15,000,000
France	1,440,000,000	1,405,000,000	35,000,000
Great Britain	2,520,000,000	2,480,000,000	40,000,000
Italy	550,000,000	480,000,000	70,000,000
Russia	325,000,000	187,729,750	137,270,250
Serbia	6,000,000	4,200,000	1,800,000
Total	4,960,600,000	4,642,829,750	317,770,250

NOTE.—In addition to the above, a credit of 250,000,000 francs, or approximately $44,000,000, in favor of the Greek Government has been agreed to, but not yet formally established, and a credit of $6,666,666 was arranged in favor of the Roumanian Government, the precise status of which and the drafts thereunder is not definitely determined.

Q. You now have available to loan how much?—A. We have about $2,000,000,000 of authorized credits that are still available.

Q. And you expect that to carry them how far, Mr. Secretary?—A. That, we figure, would carry them to the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and the billion and a half we are proposing to have made available under this bill for extension of credits to the allies would carry them until the 1st of October, at the estimated rate of $500,000,000 per month.

Q. You would be in position to take care of them until that time?—A. Until the 1st of October, if this bill passes.

Q. I want to get in this question. These figures you have just quoted are up to and including the end of the fiscal year 1918?—A. Yes. I have given you the actual established credits up to March 26, 1918, and from that date the estimated amounts carry us to the end of the fiscal year 1918, and with an authorization of the one and a half billions, as proposed in this bill for foreign credits, that will carry us, at the present estimated rate, to the 1st of October, 1918.

Q. All that as to foreign loans?—A. Yes; as to foreign loans.

Q. As to the increased amount asked for in this bill, bringing the total of bond issues or money to be derived therefrom up to $14,000,000,000 plus, how far is that going to carry us, on the estimated expenditures of the Government?—A. That will carry us for all the estimated expenditures of the Government for the remainder of this fiscal year.

Q. Only?—A. Only. That is based on the estimates of the other departments to the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, it will carry us up to the end of the fiscal year, and the one and a half billions will carry us for three months longer for foreign loans?

Secretary MCADOO. Yes.

Q. Then, if this bill passes and this new loan is authorized, you will not likely ask for another loan until some time subsequent to July?—A. No.

Q. Is it possible that you will ask for another loan before the expiration of the present year?—A. It may be possible that we shall have to ask for another issue before Congress adjourns, because these issues would not carry us during the entire calendar year 1918.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the passage of this act is essential to the conduct of the activities of the United States in the prosecution of the war. Therefore I am for it.

We are again called upon to provide for a great bond issue, and thereby reminded of the tremendously expensive character of the mighty struggle in which we are engaged.

If this bill becomes a law in its present form the total bond authorization since the beginning of the war will be $14,000,000,000.

At the present time our expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, are estimated to be $16,116,591,347.72, and our estimated receipts for the like period from all sources now provided by law are estimated to be $12,549,539,022, thus leaving a deficit at the close of the fiscal year of $3,567,052,325.72. It is also deemed necessary to provide for additional credits to our allies of $1,500,000,000, to enable the Government to extend them credit at the rate of $500,000,000 per month during the months of July, August, and September of the next fiscal year. There will therefore be required an additional bond authorization of $5,067,052,325.72 if the expenditures for the fiscal year 1918 are as great as the estimates and if we provide for the additional credit of $1,500,000,000 for our allies during the first three months of the next fiscal year.

It is believed that the additional bond authorization of $4,461,054,540 carried by this bill, together with the authority granted the Secretary of the Treasury to issue short-term certificates of indebtedness, will be sufficient to provide the necessary funds for the present fiscal year and to extend credit to our allies as above indicated.

Stupendous as these sums are, the American people are prepared to furnish them, if necessary, as they seem to be, for the successful conduct of the war, for they are determined it shall be prosecuted vigorously to a victorious conclusion.

The people expect, however, and have the right to expect, that, making all due allowances for the inevitable wastes and extravagances of war, the sums they are called upon to contribute shall be expended as judiciously and economically as possible, and that the work of preparation for the conflict shall be pressed with energy and dispatch.

Unfortunately we can not truthfully say that these reasonable expectations have up to this time been met. Waste and extravagance have been the rule rather than the exception, and there has been a woeful lack of any successful or concerted effort to protect the Public Treasury against plunderers.

All this might be overlooked if out of these tremendous expenditures we were securing results in providing the material and equipment necessary and essential to the winning of the war, but, alas, we are not.

We have been in the conflict for more than a year. From the beginning we have known that the first prime need was ships, but our shipping program lags woefully, and its progress has been through scandalous extravagance.

From the first we have known that artillery and airships were among the first essentials to victory, and yet, to-day we have no airplanes in France, and we are still dependent on the French for artillery.

On the other hand, we find that vast expenditures have been made or authorized for plants and purposes not essential to the war or authorized, at least not contemplated, by Congress, and which can not be completed in years.

I have no desire to dwell on these things or to go into detail in regard to many matters properly subjecting those in authority to the severest criticism. I only make this brief mention of some of our most glaring and patent faults and shortcomings in the hope that from now on we shall find the executive machine better managed and our essential war program speeded up. We would not be honest with or faithful to the people, who furnish the sinews of war if, knowing of these things, we did not call attention to them in the hopes that publicity will at least help, if it does not entirely cure.

We all wish the third liberty loan the greatest success, and we have abiding confidence that the patriotism of our people will rise magnificently to the test.

[By unanimous consent the following Members were given leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD: Mr. SMITH of Michigan, Mr. HEFLIN, and Mr. DYER.]

The CHAIRMAN. General debate is closed, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the last sentence of section 2 of said act approved September 24, 1917, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"For the purposes of this section there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,500,000,000, and in addition thereto the unexpended balance of the appropriations made by section 2 of said act approved April 24, 1917, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the authority granted by this section to the Secretary of the Treasury to establish credits for foreign governments, as aforesaid, shall cease upon the termination of the war between the United States and the Imperial German Government."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I understood the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from North Carolina reporting the bill, that the basis of calculation for the increased authorization of the amount to be loaned to the allied governments, $4,000,000,000, now extended to five and one-half billion dollars, is that the average rate of expenditure is $500,000,000 a month, and that the four billion heretofore authorized would be utiiized by the end of the present fiscal year; that with this additional one billion and a half the Government would be provided with funds to advance to the allied governments until October?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. During the next three months of the next fiscal year.

Mr. STAFFORD. I did not want to interrupt the gentleman at the time, but the query arose in my mind if Congress should not be in session from October 1 to December, where are funds to meet the needs of the foreign governments during that time to come from?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. In the first place, we hope by that time they may not find themselves confronted with the same necessities, but before Congress adjourns the matter can be given further consideration in the event circumstances should indicate the necessity for it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood the bond issue was, so far as this provision was concerned, to take care of conditions until the convening of another session of Congress, and there arose in my mind the query that if it were as much as $500,000,000 a month the average amount that is being advanced the allied government at the present time and for some time past, there would be no funds whatever after October 1.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. The gentleman is quite correct in case the advances should be continued during each month of the present calendar year, but the Treasury did not feel justified in asking for any provision beyond the first three months of the next fiscal year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman furnish the amount of funds furnished the respective allied governments up to date?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. The gentleman will find that given on page 3 of the committee's report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Up to March 26 I notice there have been loans made to a total amount of $4,642,000,000. So the chairman of the committee, when he said there would be only $4,000,000,000 advanced by the end of the fiscal year, was not basing his statement upon the tabulation showing the amounts that have been advanced to the respective governments, as stated in the report?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. All the money has not actually been paid out of the Treasury. Credits have been established to the amount of $4,960,000,000 up to March 26.

Mr. STAFFORD. And loans made up to that date amount to $4,642,000,000.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. That is quite true, and the disbursements will come along from day to day under the terms of the credits which have been established and agreed to already.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then if the average basis of advance is $500,000,000 a month, by the end of the fiscal year there will be more than five and a half billion dollars which is authorized in this act already advanced, and with the war going on at the pace it is at the present time, and our Government coming to the aid of the allies as it has done, I can not see the basis for the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] that the one and a half billion of this five and a half billion was to provide for the advances from July 1 to October 1.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will keep in mind the fact that Congress has authorized $7,000,000,000 for loans to our allies, and also this clause which is inserted in the present bill carrying an additional authorization of $1,500,000,000 for the first three months of the next fiscal year, he will see the total for the entire period to which I have referred.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, as I understand the gentleman, there have been authorizations including this amount of two billion more.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. That might be availed of for advances to the allied Governments, and which was covered in the act of last April.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. And not included in the five and a half billion dollars, so that the total authorizations with the five and a half billion dollars for utilization for advances to the allied Governments would be eight and a half billion dollars.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I wish to inquire whether the eight and a half billion dollars are included in the $12,000,000,000 authorized in section 1 of this act? As I read the report and heard the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], the $12,000,000,000 was the total authorization of bond issues up to the present moment, exclusive of the authorization in the first bond act.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. The one and a half billion dollars is a part of the $12,000,000,000, if I understood the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the House will be interested if the gentleman in a few words will state what will be the total bonded authorization by the passage of this bill, both for our own purposes and for advances to foreign allied governments.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that there was printed in the RECORD the precise statement that he calls for, and the most that any gentleman could do would be to read that over again. It is very brief.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought the gentleman had the power of concise statement to such extent that he could in one sentence tell us what is spread over the RECORD in a number of paragraphs.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his statement before the Committee on Ways and Means, said that the foreign credits established were $4,960,600,000; that the loans actually made were $4,642,829,720; and the balance, under established credits, to their credit now is $317,717,250.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And he still has available under existing law $2,000,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the committee as to the total bonded authorization that will be made when we pass this bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes. The total will be $14,000,000,000, plus $2,000,000,000 already authorized.

Mr. STAFFORD. That will make $16,000,000,000 as a total?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of the $16,000,000,000, as I understand it eight and a half are for the purpose of advances to foreign governments.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is correct. Seven billion dollars available under existing law, one billion and a half out of the new loan to go to carry the allies up to October, 1918.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to reconcile his statement with what is found in the report of the committee on page 2, that if this bill becomes a law in its present form the total bond authorizations since the declaration of war will amount to $14,000,000,000.

Mr. GARNER. That is correct.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But the gentleman just said $16,000,000,000.

Mr. CRISP rose.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman said $14,000,000,000 in addition to $2,000,000,000 already authorized.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will say that the two billion extra referred to the $2,000,000,000 of thrift stamps.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then it is fourteen billion dollars instead of sixteen?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Fourteen billion plus two for thrift stamps.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has just answered what I desire to call attention to to harmonize the two statements. Under the first bond act there were sold $2,000,000,000 of bonds. This bill, if it becomes a law, authorizes the issuance of $12,000,000,000 in addition to the $2,000,000,000 already sold, which makes $14,000,000,000 of bonds authorized. The former act also authorized $2,000,000,0000 of thrift stamps, and counting those as bonds, it makes a total of sixteen billion.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Exactly; and that is the statement of the Secretary.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has furnished the information that I was seeking.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he will return to section 1 in order that I may have the opportunity of offering an amendment. I happened to be out when the reading of that section was concluded.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. The gentleman can read the amendment, and if the committee is disposed to agree to it we can go back.

Mr. MORGAN. I want to move to strike out the words "and one-quarter," so that the interest will be only 4 per cent instead of 4¼ per cent.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ALEXANDER). What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 1 in order that I may offer an amendment and have the usual five minutes' time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to return to section 1 to offer an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is this to be read for information, or is it a bona fide amendment offered to a section which has already been passed?

Mr. DYER. The gentleman asked to return to offer an amendment, and I submit he ought to have the privilege, as the section was passed hurriedly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I submit it is very unusual to do that.

Mr. DYER. It is done every day, practically.

Mr. LONGWORTH. On a bill of this importance I do not see how I can fail to object to such a proposition. I would be very glad to hear the gentleman's argument.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire whether there will be over five minutes' time. Does the gentleman desire over five minutes?

Mr. MORGAN. I would be willing to take three minutes.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. With that understanding I desire to couple with the request for unanimous consent that debate on this amendment be concluded at the end of three minutes.

Mr. MORGAN. I will consent to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to return to section 1 for the purpose of offering amendment, and the gentleman from Tennessee asks that debate on the amendment be concluded at the end of three minutes, the gentleman from Oklahoma to occupy that time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 7, after the word "four," strike out the words "and one-quarter."

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the courtesy the committee has extended me. I assume, of course, the Secretary of the Treasury has recommended that these bonds be issued at 4¼ per cent, and of course the great Committee on Ways and Means has reached the same conclusion. My views ought not to bear very greatly as against the weight of such high authority. When we had before us the bill to provide for the second liberty loan I presented an amendment to strike out "four" and insert "three and a half," because I believed it was the wrong policy to raise the rate of interest above 3½ per cent. I made a brief argument supporting my views. I have not changed my opinion. I have not time to go into a lengthy argument at this time. But what is the situation to-day? The 3½ per cent liberty bonds are selling higher in New York markets than do our 4 per cent bonds.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. I will.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman, I am sure, is aware of the reason for that. The 3½ per cent bonds are not subject to any tax while the 4 per cent bonds are subject to the supertax.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand that is one reason—perhaps the main reason—but my judgment is that we had better leave the bonds untaxable, as we did the bonds we issued at 3½ per cent.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. I will.

Mr. REAVIS. Can the gentleman suggest any other reason than that suggested by the gentleman from Georgia why the 3½ per cent bonds should sell at a higher rate than the 4 per cent bonds?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will permit, for one reason if you hold the 3½ per cent bonds they are convertible up to any figure to which the rate of interest may go.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand that. Now, the Government bond fixes the standard of interest, and when you raise the rate of interest upon Government bonds you increase the rate upon every other security, and when that rate is fixed by contract it reduces the value of the security. By the Government's policy of increasing the rate of interest on its bonds from 3 per cent to 3½ per cent and then to 4 per cent we have taken hundreds of millions of dollars in value away from railroad bonds, industrial bonds, public-utility companies' bonds, and various other kinds of securities. Our citizens have suffered great losses thereby. As against the judgment of the committee I hardly expect my amendment to carry, but I wish to record myself as being opposed to this increased rate of interest upon the bonds to be issued under this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for this bill, but I do not like to do it, and I do not feel that I should vote for it without making a statement for the RECORD which will show my reasons for voting for it.

Our boys are now on the battle line. It is necessary to sustain them with all the resources of this Nation. It is necessary to provide money in order that they may be equipped; that they may be furnished with food and clothing; that they may have all those things that are required to conduct war. If the Congress of the United States refuses to raise that money through taxation then we must sell bonds. I am voting for this bond bill not because I think it expedient to issue more bonds but because I must either vote for this bond bill or refuse to provide the money needed to prosecute this war. I refuse to be placed in the latter position.

I believe we are committing a monumental blunder when we continue to issue bonds instead of levying taxes. When we entered upon this war we were assured by influential leaders that we would endeavor, in so far as our expenditures were concerned, to raise at least 50 per cent through taxation and not more than 50 per cent through bond issues. That promise has been forgotten, and there is no reason why it should have been forgotten. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means stated this morning, as he has repeatedly stated upon the floor of this House, that if we were to adopt the rates imposed by Great Britain on incomes and excess profits we could add to the revenues of the Government between $2,000,000,000 and $3,000,000,000. That sum, added to what we are now raising through taxation, would approximate 50 per cent of the expenditures of this Government, excluding the advances to the allies. But gentlemen urge that if we impose such a tax we will burden business to a point where we may have a collapse. Upon what do they base that statement? England, war worn and weary, after having been in this struggle for almost four years, does not hesitate to levy a tax of 80 per cent on war profits, and just a few months ago increased the tax on war profits in the shipping industry to 88 per cent.

Surely if English industry at the end of four years of war can stand the strain, American industry, strengthened by three years of unexampled profits, could afford to pay the tax.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman knows that England levies 80 per cent on profits above a certain percentage, and not on all war profits.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman understands the basis on which England levies taxes. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT], if he was in the Hall, heard the statement of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee that by adopting the English rate we would add between two and three billion dollars to our total revenues.

Mr. REAVIS. On that thought of the gentleman with reference to burdening business: Is it not a fact that the Government by preempting the credits of this Nation through enormous bond issues instead of raising a part of the money by taxation, has been forced to provide other means of loaning money to save certain classes of business?

Mr. KEATING. We have entered upon a vicious circle, and we are adding burdens to the burdens already imposed in a most reckless fashion.

Mr. REAVIS. Just a word further.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. REAVIS. If we had proceeded on the fifty-fifty basis, then the credit of the Nation would not have been so preempted by these bond issues that the Government would have had to come to the rescue of business by providing other means of loaning money.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman is quite right. If you raise the money through taxes it will not be necessary to issue the same amount of bonds. And not only that, but taxation, my friends, would compel the American people to economize. I venture the assertion now that never in the history of this country has there been such reckless expenditure throughout the Nation as there is to-day. And why? Because certain men and certain interests that are making unconscionable profits are setting the pace. You can go into any Washington hotel or any New York hotel and see at once the result of this policy. It is unbridled extravagance. As my eloquent friend from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] so happily phrased it, "everyone seems to be on a joy ride." Imposition of heavy taxes on incomes and excess profits would not only fill the National Treasury but would make it unnecessary to float these great bond issues, and would bring the blessings of thrift and sane living in its train.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in making these remarks I merely want the RECORD to show my own position. I do not question the patriotism of my fellow Members. I think that any man who has sense enough to come in when it is wet knows that Republicans are as patriotic as Democrats, and that Democrats are as patriotic as Republicans. So it is not a question of impeaching anyone's patriotism or anyone's love of country, because I am quite sincere, my friends, when I say that in my judgment every Member of the American Congress—at least, everyone with whom I am at all acquainted—is 100 per cent American. But there is a great issue here, my friends, and one which should be presented to the people of this country.

I sometimes despair that the issue will ever be properly presented before the war is over. It seems to me that the American newspapers are willing to discuss everything except this vital issue of how we shall pay for this war. And sometimes I think that my colleagues are prepared to attend the sessions of the House and to discuss almost every other issue except this one issue of financing the war. To my mind it overshadows every other issue, and it is one upon which, if the American people had an opportunity to express themselves, there would be singular unanimity. The American people believe that taxes for this war should be levied in proportion to the ability of the individual to pay those taxes.

Gentlemen talk about the details of the English system and the details of the French system and the details of other systems. Some of these discussions serve to obscure the issue rather than clarify it. My friends, you have only to state one proposition to show that we are not levying adequate taxes. It is only necessary to show that the great Steel Corporation last year, after having paid all taxes, State and Federal, including the excess-profits taxes, had left for distribution among its stockholders five times the amount that it considered an adequate earning in peace times.

How can gentlemen deprecate the farmers' demand for $2.50 wheat? How can gentlemen protest against labor demanding higher wages, when gentlemen by their failure to use the taxing power of this Nation permit the Steel Trust, through excess profits, earned largely out of Government contracts, to earn five times the amount in war times that it was satisfied to earn in peace times? And why do we permit the owners of the Steel Trust to pocket these unexampled profits? Who will attempt to answer that question to the satisfaction of the American people?

You will pass this bond bill, and the American people will buy the bonds, because they are determined, come what will, to provide the money needed to take care of the boys who are now in the trenches. But I hope before this Congress adjourns we will permanently discard this disastrous policy and levy adequate taxes on incomes and excess profits.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the gentleman's motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], a member of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending section and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, what the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] has said is absolutely true—that responsible leaders did say at the outset that it was contemplated to proceed on a fifty-fifty plan for financing the war.

In fact, the recommendations which came to the Committee on Ways and Means for raising the funds necessary to finance the first year of the war were the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury that $2,000,000,000 should be raised by bonds and that approximately two billions should be raised by taxation.

But let me remind gentlemen of the committee that the total amount estimated at that time for all our expenses during the first year of the war was $4,000,000,000, whereas as a matter of fact we appropriated last year more than $21,000,000,000. Of course it is a question of the very greatest importance and one which has concerned all the nations when at war—this question as to how much of the expenses of war ought to be borne by the existing generation and how much should be postponed for posterity to bear. The figures which I will give you may not be absolutely accurate, for some time has elapsed since I obtained them, but they are approximately correct, of the systems pursued by the nations other than the United States since this war began. England, in spite of her very large taxes, which the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] referred to, is not financing more than about 20 per cent of the entire cost of the war to her by taxation.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. Is not that fact due to the other fact that England, compared with the United States, lacks the wealth on which to levy taxes? England has gone up to 80 and 88 per cent, and of course if England has not war profits to tax she can not get the revenue.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Well, whether that be true or not, they have never attempted, and no other nation has ever attempted, since this war began to raise more than 20 per cent of the cost of the war by taxes on the present generation. France has not levied taxes in excess of about 16 per cent.

Italy has not levied more than 15 or 16 per cent. Germany has been from the outset—and we need not debate the efficiency of the German financial system—financing not to exceed 11 per cent of her war expenses by taxation. Russia, before she went to pieces, was not financing more than about 10 per cent of her war expenditures by taxation. Canada is financing less than 10 per cent. To-day—assuming that our revenues will be those estimated by the Treasury Department, $12,000,000,000 for this fiscal year—we are to-day, exclusive of our loans to our allies, financing about 45 per cent by taxation; and including our loans to our allies, more than 30 per cent by taxation. In other words, we are proceeding to-day toward financing by taxation a great deal more than any European nation is doing to-day or has ever done.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. I am interested in the gentleman's figures. The gentleman a moment ago called attention to the fact that we had appropriated $21,000,000,000.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. As I understand, we are raising by taxation less than $4,000,000,000?

Mr. LONGWORTH. About that.

Mr. KEATING. Now, if we have appropriated $21,000,000,000, how does the gentleman figure that $4,000,000,000 is 45 per cent of $21,000,000,000?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman will recall that a great deal of that appropriation has not been spent, and that much of it was in authorization for future expenditure.

Mr. KEATING. But is not the gentleman in error when he states that $21,000,000,000 is the amount of our war expenditure?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I did not say "expenditure."

Mr. KEATING. What is our war expenditure?

Mr. LONGWORTH. This year it is estimated to be about $16,000,000,000—the actual expenditure that must be supplied in cash.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

Mr. KEATING. I do not want to heckle the gentleman.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I understand. This is merely a debate on the policy of war financing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been fixed.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It can be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman was yielded 5 minutes. Is 10 minutes desired?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I did not know that anybody else desired to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] desired to be recognized next. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. I will say to the gentleman, by way of elucidating my figures, that if we are spending $16,000,000,000 for war purposes, and raising $4,000,000,000 by taxation, the latter figure would represent 25 per cent of our outlay. The gentleman referred to appropriations of $21,000,000,000 and stated we were raising 45 per cent by taxes. The gentleman now states that our war expenditures will aggregate $16,000,000,000. How much of that are we raising by taxation?

Mr. LONGWORTH. About $4,000,000,000; and I say that we are to-day, at the present rate of taxation, raising about one-third of our total war revenue by taxation, which is more than any European nation is doing to-day or has ever done. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] to-day called attention to the fact that the entire expenses of our Civil War were financed not to exceed 20 per cent by taxation.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. Can the gentleman give the House any figures showing the relative income of the American people and the English people? I suggest that for the purpose of determining whether, if we levied the same rate as other countries, we would produce a sufficient revenue to make a 50-50 proposition feasible?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will answer the gentleman in this way: It is estimated that we shall need, to meet the total disbursements for 1918, sixteen billion and some odd million dollars. To raise 50 per cent of that by taxation would necessitate a tax of something over $8,000,000,000. Now, according to the figures the gentleman quoted, given by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] this morning, even the imposition of the rates now provided in England would fall short of raising 50 per cent of our expenditures.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman pardon me again?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. The original understanding, as stated by the chairman of the committee, was that our expenditures—the expenditures that we were making to finance the American Army—would be met "fifty-fifty." It was always understood that we were not to count the loans to the allies; and when I said this morning that by adopting the English rates we could produce sufficient to pay 50 per cent of our war expenditures, I meant the amount needed by the American Army, which the gentleman states will be $16,000,000,000.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have stated that the total estimated revenues this year would be $12,000,000,000, of which $4,000,000,000 would be derived from taxation. I stated that our total expenditures are expected to be $16,000,000,000.

Mr. KEATING. Fifty per cent of which would be $8,000,000,000?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes. Fifty per cent of that would be $8,000,000,000. Would the gentleman from Colorado advocate the raising of over $8,000,000,000 by taxation immediately?

Mr. KEATING. I think under the figures submitted by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] it is perfectly clear we can take the English figures and add three billions more. I would be perfectly willing to go that far.

Mr. LONGWORTH. According to that, we would be imposing heavier taxes here after one year of war than England is after three years of war.

Mr. KEATING. Are we not in a better position to do so?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Gentlemen, we are not in a better position. To inflict on the American people such a tremendous taxation as that in the first year of the war, when expenditures are running to these enormous figures, might well result in the absolute crippling of the industries of this country. It might result in our failure to proceed as we should proceed in speeding up the conduct of this war. More than any other nation in the world we are justified in postponing the payment of a major part of our war expenses to the succeeding generation, because this country will double in population within the next 20 years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired. All time on this section has expired.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak here and now because the figures that have been referred to impress every Member of this House with the fact that even the boundless wealth of this country could not stand a continuance for many years of expenses at this rate.

I shall vote for this bill. I shall vote for any bonding bill or any tax bill that will help this country win this war. But I submit that the Committee on Ways and Means, which asks the House to tax the country in this way, has the responsibility to satisfy itself that the money granted has produced and produces results. In the report on this bill is a schedule which shows that under the War Department in the Aviation Corps there have been nearly $800,000,000 expended and that $1,000,000,000 are to be expended in this year. The war began a year ago, and as far as we can learn not one single fighting plane has been constructed, and that they are not being constructed because our bureau would not follow foreign models or foreign engines, and what they have made will do for what is called bombing planes or to carry ordnance, but not for the swift fighting plane, of which we have absolutely none to protect our boys in Europe.

We find in that same schedule over $3,000,000,000 for ordnance, to be increased to nearly $4,000,000,000. If we are good housekeepers we should inquire whether America has yet, after the lapse of a year, furnished a single cannon of any kind—not to speak of large cannon—to the American Army. At the beginning of the year our Ordnance Bureau were furnished with samples of the French 75-millimeter gun, the very best gun in the world for ordinary use. They delayed seven months with experiments, to see whether they could better it, and then adopted it after all; but those precious months are lost, and in the five following months we have completed none, and the guns which our troops have abroad are borrowed from our friends.

We know the need of ships and over $1,000,000,000 have been granted to the Shipping Board, and we do not know but some other funds have been used in shipping construction. These ships are expected to carry food to our boys, as well as to our allies, and in order to do that they must be faster than any 17-knot submarine, so that the submarine may not view them by day, steam ahead of them till day is over, and wait for them by night. The fast vessels of the American Line have gone without escort from the beginning of the war without difficulty. Slow ones are sunk. The submarine has a speed of 17 knots, and these new standard vessels are planned to make from 12 to 14 knots only, so that without convoy they are absolutely useless. Do we or not want ships that will carry our troops and our supplies in safety?

Eight hundred million dollars for aeros, and none made; thousands of our boys in aviation abroad and at home without planes to train in or fight. No artillery! Troops coming from crack cavalry squadrons in camps have been dismounted and their horses given to men who can not ride, while they have been told they were machine-gun men, and they have no machine guns with which to practice and only one to take to pieces.

It is time to know the facts and for pitiless publicity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That section 4 of said act approved September 24, 1917, is hereby amended by adding two new paragraphs, as follows:

"That holders of bonds bearing interest at a higher rate than 4 per cent per annum, whether issued (a) under section 1, or (b) upon conversion of 4 per cent bonds issued under section 1, or (c) upon conversion of 3½ per cent bonds issued under said act approved April 24, 1917, or (d) upon conversion of 4 per cent bonds issued upon conversion of such 3½ per cent bonds, shall not be entitled to any privilege of conversion under or pursuant to this section or otherwise. The provisions of section 7 shall extend to all such bonds.

"If bonds bearing interest at a higher rate than 4 per cent per annum shall be issued before July 1, 1918, then any bonds bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum which shall, after July 1, 1918, and before the expiration of the conversion period prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, be presented for conversion into bonds bearing interest at such higher rate, shall be deemed to have been converted on the dates for the payment of the semiannual interest on the respective bonds so presented for conversion, last preceding the date of such presentation, and no adjustment of accrued interest shall be made in respect thereof."

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am amazed by the suggestion advanced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] that increased rates of taxation would cripple business. It would seem to me that his suggestion can not be reconciled with the profits that big business and big industry have been pocketing for the past two or three years.

The current report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shows that corporations returned for the year ending June 30, 1916, taxable net income of $5,184,442,389.17 and for the year ending June 30, 1917, $8,693,841,327.21, so that during the last fiscal year corporations had a net taxable income of $3,509,378,938.04 in excess of the previous year. These figures do not include the incomes of individuals and firms, nor do they show incomes used for paying expenses, interest, taxes, or replacements or extensions of plants, so that the grand total would be an incredibly stupendous sum. The past two years has been the time for heaping up vast fortunes—for the creation of millionaires and multimillionaires. We now have 206 persons in the United States who admit to yearly incomes of over $1,000,000, there are 10 who have yearly incomes of over $5,000,000, while 53,569 of our citizens admit to and pay taxes on incomes exceeding $20,000 per year, and 14,000 of the latter are millionaires and better. It is stated that the past two years has seen the American millionaire class multiplied more than three times.

During the years 1912, 1913, and 1914, 48 American industrial and trading corporations now engaged in war trafficking averaged net annual profits aggregating $255,050,567. For 1915 their net profits were $412,348,513; for 1916, $900,301,596. These corporations made in 1916, $640,083,669 in excess of the prewar average of 1912, 1913, and 1914. In other words, the net earnings of these companies applicable to dividends in 1916 were more than three times the average net earnings of the prewar period. These companies have, for the most part, not only made gigantic war profits applicable to dividends but have paid for extensions to their plants, so that their actual earnings are really much greater than stated. These figures do not include the big powder companies nor others of the most greedy of the war contractors, and are merely illustrative of a general situation.

Complete figures are not available; however, such reports as we have indicate that war profits were very much greater for 1917 than for 1916. For instance, in 1916 the Central Leather Co. netted $15,489,201; it is estimated that in 1917 it netted over $24,000,000. In 1916 the Republic Iron & Steel Co. netted $14,789,163; it is said to have made over $22.000,000. In 1916 the United States Steel Corporation netted $271,531,730; it probably made over $550,000,000 this year. In 1916 the Granby Consolidated Mining, Smelting & Power Co. netted $3,819,295; in 1917 it made about $5,000,000. In 1916 the Ray Consolidated Copper Co. netted $12,084,166; in 1917 it probably made $14,500,000. In 1916 the Chino Copper Co. netted $12,527,948; in 1917 it made about $13,600.000. In 1916 the Lackawanna Steel Co. netted $12,218,234; in 1917 it probably made $24,000,000. There is every indication, therefore, that 1917 was a bumper year, in which America's profiteers accumulated from the war sums of money unparalleled in financial history. It is estimated that American corporations engaged in making war profits made in 1917 war profits of $3,600,000,000 in excess of their average profits during prewar years. These calculations show a situation at once shocking and deplorable.

Yet these poverty-stricken corporations can not stand additional taxation. The multiplication of millionaires is going on now. It has gone on steadily since war was declared. Since our country entered into this terrible struggle it has gone on with increasing momentum. The people who are making money out of this war ought to be made to pay for it, so far as they are able. No man has a right to come out of this war richer than he went into it. When men are laying down their lives in defense of that flag, when men are pouring out their blood for America, the idea that we shall have in our land a lot of swivel-chair profiteers who are heaping up profits and fattening their fortunes out of the distress of our country is intolerable and a stench in the nostrils of every patriot.

But it is not alone that feature of the matter. It is that in order to save the men who are making millions that we are putting burdens on generations yet unborn. and maybe for a thousand years. The gentleman from Iowa suggests that he has lost sight of the debt that we were incurring. Mr. Chairman, that is one of the most important things; one that we must keep always in mind. All men must die. It is a small thing to die. We have all got to die some time. It is a sweet thing to die for one's country——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending section close in——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to say a word about the paragraph itself.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee (continuing). In 10 minutes, to be occupied by the gentleman from Alabama and the gentleman from Pennsylvania. And further, reserving the right to object to the gentleman's request, although it is against my individual desire, if we get this bill through the House this afternoon we will be obliged to confine the discussion to the section and amendments.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there has been no debate on this side except that which was taken up by the committee.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I concur with the gentleman, and I am listening to his remarks with interest and approval.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It is sweet to die for one's country—in the service of one's country. I do not know of any way a man might better choose to die. But it is not sweet to destroy one's country; it is not sweet to lay taxes on babes yet unborn. It is not sweet to jeopardize the future welfare of our country for a hundred years. That is what it means when we go on with interminable bond issues. That is what it means when we incur debts that a dozen generations can not pay. Those that are to come after us have their rights. They will commit their follies; it may be they will have their wars. They must suffer for their own folly and misdeeds. It is not right that we should anticipate and lay upon them the burdens of this generation and punish them for the folly, cowardice, and selfishness of this generation.

So, as I say, that it is with great reluctance that I vote for this bond issue as long as the rate of taxation is kept where it is.

It is with great reluctance that I vote for the issuance of bonds when I see vast fortunes being piled up in the coffers of men who do not need the money, but get it merely for the pleasure they gain by the getting. I hate to vote for a bond issue under any such circumstances. I want to say that the time is near at hand when I for one shall refuse to further burden the future. I say that because it is the best way I have to protest against such a policy. I want to give the Government all the money it needs to carry on the war. I am willing to strip myself to the bone and give my last cent. I am anxious that we should do everything necessary to carry on the war, but I am not willing that we should jeopardize the future of our country by a reckless and suicidal financial policy that will lead to the financial ruin and bankruptcy of the future.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the gentleman could not have carefully listened to my remarks, for what I hoped to make plain was that I was in favor of a larger taxation and a smaller bonded indebtedness. What I did say was that I was not so anxious about the interest as I was that in the future we might win this great battle.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. As it is necessary, every Member will vote for it. But what I am pointing out is that it is a crime against the country to continue to issue bonds when there are idle and selfish dollars in the pockets of the rich that should be put into the war alongside of the boys in the trenches. We are fighting for the honor and dignity of our country. Let property make its sacrifices as well as the humble citizen. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak briefly on the convertibility clause under consideration and to show the steps by which we have arrived at the rate of 4¼ per cent interest. The act of April 24, 1917, provided a rate of 3½ per cent. In section 5 it provided that—

> Any series of bonds issued under authority of sections 1 and 4 in this act may, under such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, be convertible into bonds bearing a higher rate of interest than the rate at which the same were issued, if any subsequent series of bonds shall be issued at a higher rate of interest before the termination of the war—

And so forth.

That was the beginning. The rate of interest was fixed at 3½ per cent by this act of April 24, 1917, with the understanding, written into the law, that if there were any subsequent issues of bonds at a higher rate of interest than 3½ per cent those bonds might be converted to the higher rate. That condition still holds in regard to the 3½ per cent bonds if they have not been converted. If at any future time a higher rate than 4¼ should be agreed upon by some other Congress, the three-and-a-halfs, as such, would be convertible at the higher rate. Many holders have already availed themselves of the opportunity to convert the 3½ per cent bonds into 4 per cent bonds under the act of September 24, 1917. That act, which marks the second step in interest fixing, provided for such conversion, but limited the process as follows:

> Provided, That if the privilege of conversion so offered under this act shall once arise and shall not be exercised with respect to any convertible bonds, within the period so prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, then such privilege shall terminate as to such bonds, and shall not arise again, though again thereafter bonds be issued bearing interest at a higher rate or rates.

In practice that means that if you take advantage of the opportunity to convert a 3½ per cent bond into a 4 per cent bond you are limited to the 4 per cent rate, or if you convert a 4 per cent, as authorized under this act of September 24, 1917, to a higher rate of interest, there could be but one such conversion, and then the limit would be reached.

The Secretary evidently has had some difficulty in the matter of conversion certificates. It is stated in the hearings that no less than twenty million separate certificates have been issued. Converting these bonds from a lower to a higher rate of interest would mean an amount of manual and clerical labor the volume of which can scarcely be estimated. It would mean expensive delay, it would mean interference with the regular course of business; but apart from that phase of the question the Secretary of the Treasury seemed to think that the time had come when, in order to sell bonds, and to prevent people holding off for future higher rates of interest, that it had better be written into the law once for all "this is where we stop." That is what this new law does. It provides that the rate of interest shall be 4¼ per cent, and that when you get to 4¼ per cent you will get no further. That is the meaning of the new provision in this law. The rate of interest is to be 4¼ per cent, with notice to speculators or hoarders that it is useless to hold off expecting to get a higher rate of interest.

We have permitted bonds at 3½ to be converted to 4 per cent, so that all might be upon an equality, and now comes the suggestion that the 4 per cent shall go up to 4¼ per cent. But here we stop. Those who have not converted the 3½s can go to 4¼ and those who have 4s can go up to 4¼, but that is the end. It is notice to all that the promptest purchases of bonds at the new and final rate will be the most patriotic.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That section 7 of said act approved September 24, 1917, be, and is hereby, amended, by adding two new paragraphs, to read as follows:

"In determining the value of the shares of any national bank, State bank, trust company, or other banking institution, for the purpose of taxation by any State, or any of the possessions of the United States, or any local taxing authority, the par amount of any bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of the United States owned by such bank, trust company, or banking institution shall be deducted from its assets.

"If any part of this section shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder of this section, but shall be confined in its operation to the part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered."

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 2, after the words "United States," insert the words "issued during the present war."

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, has indicated that he has no objection to this amendment, I do not care to occupy any time in discussing it.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I would like to inquire whether the gentleman has read the statement of the Secretary commenting on this provision?

Mr. PLATT. I have; and I have heard the Comptroller of the Currency argue in favor of this provision before the Committee on Banking and Currency, and I think neither of them had any serious objection to this amendment, which simply provides that liberty bonds shall be the ones deducted from the value of assets of a bank for taxation, and not their old 2 per cent bonds, the bonds they have held for a long time and under which they have secured circulation.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I am frank to say to the gentleman that so far I have not seen any substantial objection to his amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would the wording of the amendment of the gentleman cover obligations of the Government issued during the existence of the war, but in redemption of bonds under prior authorizations before the war began? The gentleman merely provides in his amendment that this exemption shall only apply to bonds, interest-bearing obligations of the United States, issued during the present war. I assume that the Government is from time to time issuing bonds and issuing new bonds under prior authorizations.

Mr. PLATT. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

The refunding of bonds is a financial operation carried on at a time when interest rates are falling, but the Government would hardly redeem any 2 per cent bonds and issue 4 per cent bonds in their place. I do not think that sort of thing is being done now. I have no objection to changing the wording of my amendment and putting in the dates of the issues, though I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought perhaps such phraseology as "issued under authorizations during the present war" would limit it merely to the bonds issued and authorized during the present war.

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection to that, if the committee thinks it is better.

Mr. MERRITT. Would the purpose not be accomplished if the gentleman added to his amendment language to the effect the "bonds now used for purposes of circulation" should not be deducted? Those are the bonds you do not want to exempt. As a matter of fact, all of the States have been taxing without regard to the United States bonds held as a basis for circulation, and the States ought not to be penalized now in connection with those bonds which have been held for years and which have not affected State taxation.

Mr. PLATT. That is the exact reason why I put in the words "issued during the present war."

Mr. MERRITT. I know, but I think the gentleman could make it more certain by putting on a further limitation.

Mr. PLATT. Well, I hardly think it is necessary, it makes the amendment more complicated, and I do not think that any bonds issued before our declaration of war should be deducted.

Mr. MERRITT. Panama bonds.

Mr. PLATT. Bonds issued during the present war will be naturally bonds issued for the purpose of the war. Other wording can be inserted if thought best. I have no pride of authorship; I want to make the amendment accomplish the purpose, to shut out bonds which were long held by banks for the purpose of securing circulation, or for the purpose of securing United States deposits, or for investment. The purpose of the section is to aid the sale of liberty bonds and to give some relief to banks which have been compelled to tie up their funds in liberty bonds or Treasury certificates in order to do their part toward winning the war.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I must confess I am not clear what this means. I have great confidence in the gentleman from Tennessee, as well as the Members of the House generally. I put the question to the chairman of the committee and he has given me an answer. I take it, if the capital of a bank was a million dollars and it held a million dollars in Government bonds, why, it would not have any taxation to pay if this provision remains in the bill.

Mr. PHELAN. I can answer the gentleman that question——

Mr. CANNON. Very well.

Mr. PHELAN. If the gentleman will change his question a little bit. It should be capital, surplus, and undivided profits. If a bank holds an amount of Government bonds equal to the amount of its capital, surplus, and undivided profits, roughly speaking, there will be no tax by the State under this provision.

Mr. CANNON. Of anything?

Mr. PHELAN. There will be no taxation on the shares of stock in the bank, I should have said. I want to be accurate about it, that is all.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman wants to be accurate. Well, I do not know but that will raise the devil with the revenues of the States if enacted into law.

Mr. PHELAN. I am not arguing; I have answered the gentleman's question. I have looked into this thing very carefully.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman from Tennessee agree with my friend's statement?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman, upon the statement made by the Secretary of the Treasury and from such information as I have from other sources, that has been my impression of the purposes of this amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Then there will be no taxation of any national bank or State bank, provided they own liberty bonds equal to their capital, surplus, and undivided profits if this bill should become a law?

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. I am trying to find out what it means.

Mr. SNYDER. I just want to see if we can not get some information about that——

Mr. CANNON. I have just had it answered, and I want to verify it a little further.

Mr. SNYDER. I want to find out if these certificates that are now issued previous to the bond issues could be considered as bonds in that same calculation.

Mr. STEVENSON. That are convertible into bonds?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes; to see if they would be considered the same as bonds for the purpose of taxation.

Mr. PHELAN. Certainly.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. As they are interest-bearing obligations of the Government.

Mr. CANNON. I do not believe I am for this provision if the gentleman is correct. It bothers me. Every dollar of capital evidenced by shares of stock, every dollar of surplus, every dollar of undivided profits in my State, when most other property is assessed about one-third of its value, is assessed at its par value and collected. If a bank invests the amount of its surplus and undivided profits in these bonds, it goes scot free of all taxation.

Mr. LAZARO. And State taxation?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; and State taxation.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Why, yes.

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to the gentleman that I think that he is hardly correct as he now states it.

Mr. CANNON. I have stated it in another way, just as I put it to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. TOWNER. Perhaps they did not understand it; if they did I do not think they answered correctly. As now stated, if a bank holds national bonds equal to the amount of its capital stock and surplus it follows that its capital stock and surplus would be exempt. That is not true unless its capital stock and surplus is represented by United States bonds. If all its capital stock and surplus were invested in United States bonds it would be all exempt. The fact is that every Government obligation is exempted. There is nothing in the bill and there is nothing in the law that allows any person or corporation to be exempt from property other than Government bonds. In taxing capital stock or in taxing the surplus or in taxing shares of stock to a bank they must be excluded and exempted; but you can not say because a bank owns a lot of national bonds that therefore to the extent of those national bonds their capital stock, which is not national bonds, shall be exempt from taxation. That is not true. It is only the national bonds themselves that are exempt from taxation.

Mr. CANNON. Most of what little I have is in two or three little country national banks, and, of course, I would go absolutely scot free of taxation provided——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MEEKER. I ask that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire more time?

Mr. CANNON. I can come again if I can not find out what this means.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, on this amendment I think that it might be well for all of us to try to understand exactly what it means. There seems to be some difference of opinion as to exactly what will be the effect of this amendment as proposed in section 5 of the bill.

Under section 5219 of the Revised Statutes provision is made by which States are allowed to tax the shares of national banks, the principal restriction being that in taxing those shares the taxation shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of such State. That was put in the act in 1864, and almost from the beginning of the time it was put there it has been before the Supreme Court of the United States, and from time to time has been affirmed and reaffirmed, until to-day, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it is practically elementary law. Under the case of Van Allen against The Assessors, in Seventieth United States, the Supreme Court of the United States sustained the scheme of taxation by the States and did not permit any deductions on account of National Government bonds held by a national bank. That was a case from New York, where a $100,000 bank had $100,000 in Federal bonds. They claimed that their shareholders were entitled to a deduction on account of that $100,000 in bonds. The Supreme Court of the United States said that they were not; that in a corporation there are four elements of taxation, either one of which, or all, may be taxed, namely: First, the franchise; second, the capital stock in hands of the corporation; third, the shares of the stockholders; fourth, corporate property. The taxation of the capital stock of the bank and the taxation of the shares of the shareholders is an entirely different and distinct interest in the eyes of the law.

That proposition is supported and reaffirmed in Cleveland Trust Co. against Lander, in One hundred and eighty-fourth United States, and all along down until the most recent decisions of the Supreme Court along this line. What is the reasoning of it? I will read from one of these cases, which sets it out as succinctly, I think, as it can be set out. I will read from the leading case, the first case, Van Allen against the assessors:

> A State possesses the power to authorize the taxation of the shares of national banks in the hands of the stockholders whose capital is wholly invested in stocks and bonds of the United States. The tax on shares is not a tax on the capital of the bank, but upon a distinct, independent interest or property held by the shareholder.

Now, the court says:

> The interest of the shareholder entitled him to participate in the net profits earned by the bank in the employment of its capital during the existence of its charter in proportion to the number of his shares, and upon dissolutions or termination to his portion of the property that may remain in the corporation after the payment of its debts. This is a distinct, independent interest or property held by the shareholder like any other property that may belong to him. It is this interest which the act of Congress has left subject to taxation by the States under the limitations, as will be seen by referring to the sections passed by Congress allowing States to tax shareholders in national banks. This case has been affirmed and reaffirmed time after time.

Mr. Justice Peckham, in the case of Bank of Commerce against Tennessee, says:

> The capital stock of a corporation and the shares into which such stock may be divided and held by individual shareholders are two distinct pieces of property. The capital stock and the shares of stock in the hands of the shareholders may both be taxed, and it is not double taxation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOMINICK. Now, Mr. Chairman and gentleman, that is the law as made by the act of 1864, by section 5219 of the Revised Statutes, and as construed by the United States Supreme Court. And I will say, furthermore, that my investigation of this subject has been that that same construction has been followed by every jurisdiction in this country with the sole exception, so far as I can find, of the courts of Connecticut and New Jersey. Now, under that, what may we do? Under that authority our States have been taxing the banks. They have taxed the State banks, and, as is stated here in the report of the Ways and Means Committee, they have indirectly been taxing national banks, and they ought to have done it. The Ways and Means Committee, though, says that the States have not had the source of revenue heretofore, and it has never been supposed that they would get anything from the taxation of Government bonds, and they are not being deprived of anything to which they are entitled. Why, Mr. Chairman, I do not know who could have penned that report and made such a statement, because under the laws of practically every State they have such provisions in them for the taxation of banks, and the States of this counttry have been collecting taxes from the shareholders of national banks as well as from their own State banks.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The language to which the gentleman refers is the language of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. DOMINICK. Well, he certainly was not advised of the law in the case when he penned it. And I understand, Mr. Chairman, that this same proposition in a modified form, referring only to national banks and not the State banks, has been before your Banking and Currency Committee, and they have had two hearings on it, and that committee, after looking into the matter thoroughly, have failed to report it to this House; and yet they come in here now and try to get this proposition through under whip and spur in a bill that we are all going to vote for, and repeal a law that has been in existence since 1864, after 10 or 15 minutes of discussion.

What will be the effect of the passage of this act? Where will it put us? The gentleman from Pennsylvania has risen in his seat this afternoon and stated that if it passes his State will be deprived of $3,000,000 in taxes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOMINICK. Certainly.

Mr. McFADDEN. Does the gentleman think this Congress has the right to deprive the State of the right to tax its own chartered institutions?

Mr. DOMINICK. No, sir; I do not. But at the same time they have the power to put this as one of the conditions in these bonds. They have that power. I think that is undoubted. Some States have that provision in their bonds, and such provisions have been construed and sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States. Now, what is the effect in case this section stays in the bill? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] in his understanding of this section, as to its real meaning, was absolutely accurate in his understanding. If you have a bank, under this act, with $500,000 capital and $750,000 in surplus and undivided profits and that bank owns $1,250,000 of United States bonds, the shareholders of that bank will be credited with an exemption of that amount of bonds and they will pay not one single dollar of State, county, or municipal taxes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOMINICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will not this mean that the banks, including both the State and National banks, will buy these bonds for the purpose of avoiding taxation?

Mr. DOMINICK. They are bound to do it. You can not keep them from it.

During the bonding campaigns, I have done my share and assisted in every way possible to make these campaigns a success. I was glad to do this. It is my duty as well as my pleasure to do everything possible that is necessary for the proper carrying on and winning of this war. They have said that they want to make these bonds popular; they want to bring them to the people. The last loan that was floated was subscribed by 9,000,000 of people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman desire more time?

Mr. DOMINICK. I hate to impose upon the committee, but I would like to have probably 10 minutes more.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DOMINICK. I would be glad to.

Mr. PLATT. Is it not the fact that there are some States where the banks are allowed to deduct, just as this section provides, as to State bonds?

Mr. DOMINICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT. Is it fair that they should deduct State bonds and the Federal Government should not do it?

Mr. DOMINICK. I do not say that the Federal Government has not the power to do this. I am talking about the justice of it. What is it going to do and what effect is it going to have on the States and counties and municipalities? We are in this situation at the present time: As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] says, his State will lose $3,000,000 in taxes this year on account of it. Every State in this Union will be affected by it. Practically every State legislature of every State in this Union has now adjourned for this year. They have had their tax budgets made up. They have their levies fixed. They have their appropriations made to run their schools, to build their roads, and to carry on their war activities and to carry on their ordinary governmental functions. If you are going to break in on them in this way, what is going to be the result?

When my time was up a moment ago I was about to say that the last liberty loan was subscribed to by about 9,000,000 people. To-day we want to float a $3,000,000,000 issue of bonds. We have floated $2,000,000,000 in one issue and we have floated $3,000,000,000 and odd in another issue, and now an issue of three billion more is to come. How were those two issues subscribed? The first issue of bonds was oversubscribed by 52 per cent. The second issue of bonds was oversubscribed by 54 per cent. Does that look as though there is need of any stimulation now and special favors and privileges to banks and banking corporations in order to float this one? You are going to work and in this act you are giving them 4½ per cent interest on their bonds, gentlemen. Is not that enough? Are you going to present them with the whole business right here and give them larger interest and at the same time exempt them from taxation?

Gentlemen is it right, is it fair, is it reasonable to the States? Let us not forget, just because we are engaged in war legislation, that we have certain statutes, certain governmental affairs, that have got to be carried on notwithstanding the war.

There are over $600,000,000 of these liberty bonds now owned by the national banks alone. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means stated this morning, in response to my question, that probably the savings banks and the State banks owned much more of bonds than the national banks. There are $1,104,000,000 in old style Government bonds now owned by the national banks. With one fell swoop you will take all this tax money away from every State in this country.

Are you going to cripple your States, are you going to cripple your counties, are you going to cripple your schools in order to do this? Does the Committee on Ways and Means come in here and say it is necessary to have this legislation in order to sell these bonds? Oh, no. Does it come in here after hearings? No; just with the bare statement that we have got to provide against something which seems not to be existing at this time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will pardon me there, there were various hearings on this subject with the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. DOMINICK. I understood the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] to say that there were no hearings on that subject.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will permit, I will state that on pages 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21 of the hearings the Secretary of the Treasury goes fully into his reasons for asking for this legislation.

Mr. KITCHIN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I understood him to ask me if there had been extended hearings, supposing he meant of people coming in from different States, giving their views on that question, and I answered "No." I did not mean that the Secretary of the Treasury did not mention it.

Mr. DOMINICK. I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. KITCHIN. I did say that the Secretary of the Treasury recommended exempting the State banks.

Mr. McFADDEN. I have read the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, and I think he failed to answer the question that the gentleman is now raising.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has again expired.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may have a minute more, if he desires it.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DOMINICK. Yes.

Mr. DYER. According to the hearings as I read them, the Secretary of the Treasury stated that the States now had no legal right in effect to tax bonds of the National Government, and that the Government did not have the right to tax municipal bonds.

Mr. DOMINICK. When the Secretary of the Treasury stated that the State governments had no right to tax the shares of the shareholders in the national banks, so far as these bonds are concerned, he made a statement utterly at variance with the law as laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States, because the States have that right, without allowing any exemption or deduction on account of the bonds that are being held.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOMINICK. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. If the States did not have that right, all that would be necessary would be for the corporation to go into court?

Mr. DOMINICK. Yes; and in South Carolina we licked them out in it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOMINICK. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is it the intention of the gentleman to offer an amendment to correct the evils of which he complains?

Mr. DOMINICK. Yes. At the proper time I will sumbit an amendment to strike out the entire section.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOMINICK. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. When the gentleman stated that some of the States went into court, what did he mean?

Mr. DOMINICK. Some of the banks went into court to get exemption on account of Government bonds held and owned by the banks.

Mr. PHELAN. But the gentleman concedes this, that the power of the State to tax the shares of banks is derived from specific provision by Congress, and the Congress has the power to change that if it so desires, and it has the power to change this provision if it so desires?

Mr. DOMINICK. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. And that Congress has the right to do that if it so desires.

Mr. DOMINICK. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. PHELAN. And it has the power to pass this provision if it so desires.

Mr. DOMINICK. Yes. I am trying to ask the House not to do that.

Mr. McFADDEN. Does not the gentleman feel that if this section is left in the bill it would be entirely consistent to include insurance companies and railroads and other corporations that hold bonds?

Mr. DOMINICK. If you are going to include one class of corporations, I think you might as well cut a melon and pass it around and let all the corporations have a share of it.

A few days ago, in providing for the sale of enemy-owned docks at Hoboken, a great deal of sympathy was expressed for that city on account of the fact that when the Government takes over these docks the city of Hoboken will be deprived of about $140,000 in taxes each year, the reason given being that it will probably set a precedent that may not come in handy some of these days when Government ownership of railroads and other public utilities is appearing so large on the horizon. But now we are coming in through the Ways and Means Committee, not to establish a precedent, but flying in the face of a precedent—nay, not a precedent, but flying in the face of a law that has been enacted by Congress, that has been upheld and declared to be just and right by our Supreme Court—and asking this Congress to take from the States, from the counties, from the municipalities millions and millions of dollars in taxes for this year and for years to come.

I sincerely hope that when my motion to strike out the section is offered it will be carried.

Before concluding my remarks I ask leave to insert as a part of my remarks a portion of a brief which collates the authorities on this question, this brief having been prepared by myself when assistant attorney general of the State of South Carolina.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The principal question involved in these two cases, and the questions in each case are practically identical, is as to the power of the State in taxing the shares of the shareholders in banks to include in the value of such shares such amounts of nontaxable bonds as may be owned by the bank itself.

The method of taxation of banks in South Carolina and in practically all of the States is as provided in sections 341 to 358 of the Code of Laws of South Carolina, Volume I, 1912. From a reading of these statutes it will be seen that no property belonging to a corporation or bank is taxed whatever and no taxes paid on corporate property, except the real estate owned by the banks. All other taxes are paid, based on the value of the shares belonging to the shareholders.

Section 341 provides that these shares shall be listed at their true value in money, and that the words "true value in money" shall be so construed as to mean and include all surplus or extra moneys, capital, and other species of personal property of value owned or in possession of any such bank. These same words are used in section 5 of Article X of the Constitution of 1895, and it is thus seen that it is contemplated, both in the statutes and in the Constitution that all personal property of whatever nature or kind shall be included in making up the value of the shares in banking institutions.

It is contended in these cases, however, that the bonds which are in question in the cases at bar are not subject to taxation on account of a provision in said bonds exempting them from all State, county, and municipal taxation. This position can not be maintained, and it has been so often decided by the courts contrary to the contention of the plaintiffs, it seems now to be a question requiring no argument whatever.

As is well known, all bonds issued by the National Government contain such a clause exempting them from taxation. The Supreme Court of the United States, and other authorities, have time and again held that such exemption in such bonds does not go to the extent of allowing an exemption on the value of the shares belonging to the shareholders in said bank.

The leading case on this question is the case of Van Allen v. Assessors, 70 U. S., 229; 18 Law Ed., 229. The syllabus in that case says: "A State possesses the power to authorize the taxation of the shares of national banks in the hands of the stockholders whose capital is wholly invested in stocks and bonds of the United States. The tax on shares is not a tax on the capital of the bank, but upon a distinct, independent interest or property held by the shareholders.

"This was a case where the whole of the capital stock of the bank consisted of stocks and bonds issued by the United States under various acts of Congress and it was insisted that the shares of the bank held by the stockholders were not subject to assessment and taxation under said authorities. The court held that the State possesses the power to tax the whole of the interest of the shareholders in the shares held by them. The tax on the shares is not a tax on the capital of the bank. The corporation is the legal owner of all the property of the bank, real and personal, and within the powers conferred upon it by the charter and for the purposes for which it was created, can deal with corporate property as absolutely as a private individual can deal with his own. This familiar law will be found in every work that may be opened on the subject of corporations.

"The interest of the shareholder entitled him to participate in the net profits earned by the bank in the employment of its capital during the existence of its charter in proportion to the number of his shares, and upon dissolutions or termination, to his portion of the property that may remain in the corporation after the payment of its debts. This is a distinct, independent interest or property held by the shareholder like any other property that may belong to him. It is this interest which the act of Congress has left subject to taxation by the States under the limitations, as will be seen by referring to the sections passed by Congress allowing States to tax shareholders in national banks. This case has been affirmed and reaffirmed time after time."

In the case of the Cleveland Trust Co. v. Lander (184, U. S., 111; 46 Law Ed., 456) it is said that a tax on shares is not equivalent to a tax on the property of the corporation, and therefore the shareholders are not entitled to have a deduction upon the value of the shares of the amount of capital stock of the bank which is invested in United States bonds.

"If the statute requires that the shares of incorporated banks shall be listed for taxation at their true value in money, the value of the United States bonds held by a bank is not to be deducted from the capital stock in fixing for taxation the value of the shares held by its stockholdeds." (Cooley on Taxation, Vol. I, 709.)

"Nor is it an unlawful discrimination against the national banks that that portion of their capital stock which is invested in United States bonds, or their nontaxable securities, is not deducted in valuing the holdings of their shareholders since the tax is levied not on the capital so invested which is the property of the bank, but upon the shares of stock which are the property of the stockholders." (37 Cyc., 839. Supported by numerous State and Federal decisions in footnote.)

"The question has frequently arisen whether or not an exemption of the capital stock and property of a corporation will relieve the individual stockholders from taxation upon their shares of stock, and the decided preponderance of authorities supports the view that it will not, but the contrary doctrine prevails in Connecticut and New Jersey." (2d A. E. & L., Vol. XXII, p. 356.) Footnote.—"The same rule has been applied in cases where the exemption on capital stock arose from the fact that it was invested in national securities which are exempt from taxation, or that the corporation was a national bank." Citing any number of and numerous cases from the United States Supreme Court, Alabama, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, New York, North Carolina, Tennessee, and Texas.

The syllabus in the case of People v. Commissioners (71 U. S., 244; 18 Law. Ed., 344) says: "Taxation on the share of a shareholder in a national bank is not illegal because the tax commissioners in the valuation of the share refused to deduct the amount of capital of the bank invested in United States securities." "It is not illegal as being at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens, upon the ground that allowance was made to individuals on account of United States securities held and owned by them, when at the same time the deduction was disallowed to the shareholders."

In the case of Farrington v. Tenn. (95 U. S., 687; 24 Law Ed., 558) the court says: "One other thing it appears to me should be regarded as settled beyond doubt, which is, that a tax upon a corporation proportionate to the capital stock or to the number of shares of its capital stock is a different thing from a tax upon the individual shareholders of stock in the corporation. The capital stock and shares of that stock in the hands of stockholders are different properties and consequently distinct subjects for taxation. An exemption of the one is not of itself an exemption of the other, nor is the taxation of the one a tax upon the other in such a sense as to interfere with any exemption of the latter made for other taxation."

In the case of Tennessee v. Whitworth (117 U. S., 129; 29 L. Ed., 830) it is stated: "It is no doubt true that the legislature may make a difference for the purpose of taxation between the capital stock of a corporation in the hands of the corporation itself and the shares of the same capital stock in the hands of the individual stockholders. That has often been done, and the cases are numerous where the exemption of shares has been claimed because of a charter exempting all capital stock. Notably this was the case with national banks. The capital stock of such banks invested in United States securities is not taxable by the State, but the shares of the stock in the hands of the individual stockholders may be taxed without deduction on account of such an investment. This has been held from the beginning." Citing Van Allen v. Assessors (70 U. S., 229); Bradley v. People and People v. Commissioners (71 U. S., 344); Lyonberger v. Rouse (76 U. S., 721).

"The capital stock in the hands of the bank is exempt because invested in securities which are not to be taxed, but the shares in the hands of the stockholders are by the very terms of the banking act put for the purpose of said taxation on the same footing as other moneyed capital. This, it was said, showed the intention of Congress to exempt the bank for what was invested in Government securities, but to charge the stockholder. In all cases of this kind the question is as to the intent of the legislature, the presumption being against any surrender of the taxing power."

In corporations four elements of taxable value are sometimes found. First, franchises; second, capital stock in hands of corporation; third, corporate property; and, fourth, shares of the capital stock in the hands of the individual stockholders.

Each of these is, under some circumstances, a separate subject of taxation and it is no doubt within the power of a State, when not restricted by constitutional limitations, to tax them in such a way as to subject the corporation or stockholders to double taxation. Numerous cases along this line may be cited, but, in our opinion, the principles as announced in the Van Allen case and other decisions are conclusive. In addition, however, to the authorities cited, the attention of the court is respectfully directed to the elaborate and well-considered notes upon this subject to be found in Fiftieth L. R. A., pages 513–527, under State Board of Equalization v. The People of Illinois, ex rel. Grogian et al. (195 Ill., 528); also note of L. R. A. 1915C pages 386–389, under First National Bank of Hillsboro v. Board of Commissions of Traill County (25 N. Dak., 625).

The distinction here made has been generally recognized and followed, as shown in a note in L. R. A. 1915C, 389:

"It is quite generally held that in assessing the value of corporate stock for purposes of taxation a deduction should be made of the amount invested in national securities and other property owned by the corporation that is exempt from taxation when the tax is upon the corporation, but when the tax is upon the shares in the hands of the stockholders, or is assessed against the corporation as agent of the shareholder, to be deducted from the dividends, no deduction is to be made."

The distinction is based upon the doctrine that capital stock or property and assets of the corporation, and the shares of stock in the hands of individual stockholders, are separate properties for the purpose of taxation.

In fixing the value of shares of stock of a national bank or other corporation for purposes of taxation, no deduction is made on account of the capital of the corporation invested in United States bonds, State bonds, and other securities which are exempt from taxation. This proposition is sustained by cases cited in note in Forty-fifth L. R. A., 757, and the following cases: Home Insurance Co. v. New York (134 U. S., 594; 33 L. Ed., 1025; 10 Sup. Ct. Rep., 593); Palmer v. McMahon (133 U. S., 660; 33 L. Ed., 772; 10 Sup. Ct. Rep., 324); Cleveland Trust Co. v. Lander (184 U. S., 111; 46 L. Ed., 456; 22 Sup. Ct. Rep., 394, affirming 62 Ohio Stat., 266; 56 N. E., 1036); Charleston National Bank v. Melton (171 Fed., 743); Ex parte State (— Ala., —; 66 So., 1); Batterson v. Hartford (50 Conn., 558); National State Bank v. Burlington (119 Iowa, 696; 94 N. W., 234; First L. R. A., 1915C); National Bank v. Independence (123 Iowa, 482; 99 N. W., 142); First National Bank v. Board of Reviewers (41 La. Ann., 1172; 8 So., 618); Board of Liquidation v. Thomas (42 La Ann., 605; 8 So., 482); Bank of Oxford v. Oxford (70 Miss., 504; 12 So., 203); Mechanics' National Bank v. Baker (65 N. J. L., 113; 46 Atl., 586, affirmed on other grounds in 65 N. J. L., 549; 48 Atl., 582); Pullen v. Corporation Commission (152 N. C., 548; 68 S. E., 155).

The North Dakota court, discussing this question in the case of the First National Bank of Hillsboro (24 N. Dak., 635; L. R. A., 1915C, 386–391), said:

"This argument of double taxation has frequently been made under these same circumstances in behalf of banks and the holders of shares of bank stock. It has not been allowed by the better considered or modern cases. Its basis is untenable. It proceeds upon the theory that the bank and its shareholders are one. Counsel in this case have argued at great length, and presented an array of figures to demonstrate that the bank pays upon its shares upon a valuation largely in excess of their par value. This is all wrong. The bank does not pay a penny of taxes upon the shares except as agent for the stockholders, and for all money so paid it reimburses itself from the dividends or other property belonging to such shareholders. The shareholders pay no tax upon the real estate. That is the property of the bank. The shareholders and the bank are as distinct for purposes of taxation as separate individuals. In law the bank is an entity, a person, with its individual assets and individual liabilities. Among these individual liabilities is its obligation to pay to its stockholders the face value of the shares of stock held by them. True this obligation may not mature until the bank ceases to do business; but it is no less a sacred obligation. If, then, the property of the bank be sufficient as between the creditors of the bank, the law, for reasons of public policy, makes the shareholder a deferred creditor, but he is none the less a creditor. His certificates of stock constitute the evidences of the bank's indebtedness to him. He can not object that such evidence of indebtedness is taxed, because the law says it shall be taxed. He can not object that the real estate of his debtor, the bank, is taxed, because the law says it shall be taxed. Taxation is the rule; exemption from taxation is the exception. He who claims exemption must be able to put his finger upon the law creating the exemption. True it is that the contract of the shareholder with the bank is such that he is entitled to share in the net profits made by the bank. It is this feature that brings his stock above par; and the value of his stock is dependent, in a measure, upon the earning capacity of the bank; or, in other words, upon the amount of net profits to be divided. Of course, every item of necessary expenses paid by the bank reduces this amount, but the stockholder has no more legal right to say that the bank shall not pay its indebtedness to the State than it has to say that it shall not pay its hired clerk.

In the case of Van Allen v. Assessors (Churchill v. Utica) (3 Wall., 573; 18 L. Ed., 229), it is said: "The corporation is the legal owner of all the property of the bank, real and personal, and within the powers conferred upon it by the charter, and for the purposes for which it was created, can deal with the corporate property as absolutely as a private individual can deal with his own." And again: "The interest of the shareholder entitles him to participate in the net profits earned by the bank in the employment of its capital, during the existence of its charter, in proportion to the number of his shares; and, upon its dissolution or termination, to his proportion of the property that may remain of the corporation after the payment of its debts. This is a distinct, independent interest or property, held by the shareholder like any other property that may belong to him. Now, it is this interest which the act of Congress has left subject to taxation by the States, under the limitations prescribed." In that case it was held that while the capital stock of the bank was invested in United States bonds that were exempt from taxation, nevertheless the shares of stock in the hands of shareholders were subject to taxation. To same effect is New York v. Tax and Assessment Commissioners (4 Wall., 244; 18 L. Ed., 344), Palmer v. McMahon (133 U. S., 660, 33 L. Ed., 772; 10 Sup. Ct. Rep., 324).

In Farrington v. Tennessee (95 U. S., 687; 24 L. Ed., 560) it is said: "The capital stock and the shares may both be taxed, and it is not double taxation," and many authorities are cited to support the proposition. Further, Mr. Justice Swayne enumerates in that case as taxable property, in addition to the capital stock: (1) The franchise to be a corporation, etc., citing Hamilton Manufacturing Co. v. Massachusetts (6 Wall., 632; 18 L. Ed., 904; Wilmington & Western Railroad Co. v. Reid (13 Wall., 264; 20 L. Ed., 568). (2) Accumulated earnings. State ex rel. Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co., prosecutors, v. Utter (34 N. J. L., 493; St. Louis Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Charles (47 Mo., 462). (3) Profits and dividends. Attorney General v. Bank of Charlotte (57 N. C. (Jones Eq.), 287). (4) Real estate belonging to the corporation and necessary for its business. Wilmington & Western Railroad Co. v. Reid (13 Wall., 264; 20 L. Ed., 568); Bank of Cape Fear v. Edwards (27 N. C. (5 Ired.), 516).

In Tennessee v. Whitworth (117 U. S., 129; 29 L. Ed., 830; 6 Sup. Ct. Rep., 645) Mr. Chief Justice Waite, after referring to the national-bank cases already cited, says: "In corporations four elements of taxable value are sometimes found: (1) Franchise, (2) capital stock in the hands of the corporation, (3) corporate property, and (4) shares of the capital stock in the hands of the individual stockholders." Again, in Bank of Commerce v. Tennessee (161 U. S., 134; 40 L. Ed., 645; 16 Sup. Ct. Rep., 456), Mr. Justice Peckham says: "The capital stock of a corporation and the shares into which such stock may be divided and held by individual shareholders are two distinct pieces of property. The capital stock and shares of stock in the hands of the shareholders may both be taxed, and it is not double taxation."

The Second Ward Savings Bank v. Milwaukee (94 Wis., 587; 69 N. W., 359) is identical in principle with the case at bar. The plaintiff in that case was a State bank, but it does not affect the principle. In that case the court said: "It is contended that to tax the bank upon the value of this real estate is, under the circumstances, double taxation—first, in taxing the shares of its stockholders; and, second, in taxing the real estate of the bank, the legal owner of it. Now, the tax on the shares of stock which are owned by the stockholders is not a tax on the capital or capital stock of the bank, nor is it a tax on the real estate of the bank." And, after fully citing the authorities, the court concludes: "The objection that the taxation complained of is double taxation, and therefore illegal, can not be sustained. Double taxation is defined as the 'requirement that one person or known subject of taxation shall directly contribute twice to the same burden, while other subjects of taxation, belonging to the same class, are required to contribute but once.'" (Cooley, Taxation, 2d Ed., 225.) Here there is a diversity of person as well as of subject of taxation. The shares of stock are the legal property of the stockholders, and, although the value of the stock is founded upon and dependent upon the value of the property of the corporation, they are nevertheless a species of property altogether separate and distinct in character and ownership from the capital or property of the bank. The shareholders, as such, are not the owners of the capital or property of the bank, the title to which is vested in the bank itself. It can not, therefore, be said that the case presented is one of double taxation, either as to person or subject."

"These authorities we regard as overwhelming, and their reasoning is very satisfactory. It follows that neither the plaintiff bank nor its shareholders were doubly or unjustly taxed."

In Alderman v. Wells (85 S. C., 518), this court said:

"There is much room for discussion and difference of opinion as to what really amounts to double taxation. But the weight of authority and reason sustains the taxation of shares of stock in a corporation to the holder thereof, notwithstanding the corporation has paid taxes on its property and also on its franchises. The rents and profits derived from real estate, and the products of the farm may be taxed, though the land from which they are derived has also been taxed. The profits of a business may be taxed, though the property in the business, bought on credit, has been taxed to the owner, and the debt he owes therefor has been taxed to the creditor; and the property covered by mortgage may be taxed to the owner, and the mortgage thereon to the mortgagee. (Cooley on Taxation (3d ed.), 387, et seq.)

"These may be instances of double taxation in one sense, yet they are not within the rule of uniformity and equality prescribed by the Constitution, which forbids the taxation twice of the same property for the same purpose, while other property, under similar circumstances and conditions, is taxed only once.

"There is no constitutional inhibition against such taxation, and in the absence of constitutional restriction the power of the legislature to tax is limited only by its own discretion and its responsibility to its constituents. It has been said the power to tax is an inherent right of sovereignty, necessary to its existence, and limited only by its necessities. Judge Cooley, in his works on Taxation, at page 392, says: 'We make out, therefore, no conclusive case against a tax, when we show that it reaches twice the same property for the same purpose.' This may have been intended, and, in many cases at least, is admissible."

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state to the committee what was in my mind, and what I think was in the minds of the Ways and Means Committee, and possibly in the mind of the Treasury Department in suggesting this provision of the bill. My view, at least, was that the purpose of this provision was to provide that in determining the value of shares of stock for the purpose of State taxation the values of Federal bonds should be excluded. If you include them you must in the calculation exclude them in determining the value of the shares of stock for the purpose of State taxation. Persons may figure the matter under this rule in different ways, but that was the purpose in the minds of at least some of us in the consideration of this provision.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I will state a hypothetical case. Suppose a bank has a capital stock of $100,000, and that it has assets aggregating $400,000. It possesses $100,000 worth of Government bonds on the day that the assessment is made. How much could be levied against that bank for State, county, or municipal purposes?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I am not sure that I understand all of the gentleman's question.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. My proposition is this: A bank with $100,000 capital stock owns $100,000 of the 4½ per cent Government bonds, or any other denomination, but it has assets, including capital, surplus, loans, and all of those things, aggregating $400,000. Now, when you assess that bank under this bill, how much will be left there, if anything, for the State, county, and municipality to assess for taxation?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I would say to the gentleman that the bill provides the rule which I undertook to state. Anyone can apply it to the several sets of figures the gentleman has stated. But keeping in mind the fact that if he once includes the value of these Federal securities he must, before he completes his calculation, exclude those values, and he can then determine the value of the shares of stock from the remainder.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. But the value of the stock is $100,000. The bonds are $100,000. If the bank had no other assets except those, it would pay no taxes whatever. But if the bank has other assets, how are you going to reach those other assets, to tax them for State, county, or municipal purposes? Will not the bank contend, under this law, that having only $100,000 of capital stock, and having $100,000 worth of Government bonds, it has nothing to render for taxes, and that they shall not inquire into its other assets?

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield there for a suggestion?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I understand the gentleman to answer "yes" to my question.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I am yielding to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The gentleman from Texas overlooks the fact that this deduction is made from the total aggregate assets and not from the capital stock, and in the case he mentions the total aggregate assets would be $400,000, and the deduction for Government bonds would be $100,000, and there would be left $300,000 on which to levy for State, county, and local taxes.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. It gets back exactly to the statement I first made, that you must exclude the value of whatever amount of Federal bonds were embraced, and then you can make the computation on the value of the other assets as you see fit.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I understand the point made by the gentleman. He is trying to equalize the burdens; but how about other individuals, of whom there are millions in the country that are buying these bonds? When their property is assessed for taxation there is no deduction made on account of bonds they own. For instance, a man has $10,000 worth of property located in a State and he mortgages the property and buys $5,000 worth of bonds. When the tax assessor comes around he would say to him, "You assess the property at $5,000, because I own $5,000 of bonds"; but they will assess it at $10,000 just the same.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, unless the rule I stated is correct, various views and objections might arise. If I am correct in the statement of the proposition, gentlemen are free to apply it to any taxpayer according to the nature of his assets and taxable property.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. The gentleman will concede that if any bank has a sufficient amount of bonds the State will have no power to tax the shares of that bank stock at all, will he not?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. That might be possible if there are no other assets of value to be looked to.

Mr. PHELAN. The owners of the shares of the bank stock would not be required to pay any tax at all under this provision.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. That might be possible in the manner I have stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes without interruption.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOMINICK. May I ask the gentleman one question?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DOMINICK. Would the gentleman object to giving the committee the reason for limiting the exemption to national banks, State banks, and trust companies, and not making the exemption apply to other corporate stocks.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. First I desire to say that the committee found this situation: It found that there existed in the country four and a half billion dollars in State, county, and municipal securities, most of them tax free. Most of that huge amount is tax free both as to Federal, State, and local taxes. They are being offered on the market against our Federal securities, which are subject to super, income, and other taxes. The committee also found that banks holding these Federal bonds and subject to State taxation as to shares of stock in certain respects were being penalized to such an extent that, according to the Statement of he Treasury Department, they could not undertake to purchase and hold these bonds to any great extent.

Now, if States and counties are to be allowed to keep on the market four and a half billion of tax-free bonds, with no right on the part of the Federal Government to touch them, when the Federal Government comes, in turn, for the purpose of financing the war, to issue the requisite number of billions of dollars of Federal bonds, which shall be tax free as to States, counties, and municipalities, the committee thought, as the Treasurer thought, that it was only just to the Government that these bonds should have immunity from State and local taxation, just as the State and other localities demand immunity from Federal taxation of their securities. If the tax hand of the State is not laid on these bonds, then there is no complaint on the part of gentlemen; but if the States are undertaking to impose another tax, in addition to the present Federal tax, on the Federal bonds when purchased by the bank, I insist that the matter is deserving of serious and immediate consideration on the part of Congress while this emergency exists.

Mr. DOMINICK. In regard to the statement as to the difference between the tax-free State bonds and the tax-free Federal bonds, is it not a fact that under the acts authorizing bonds that have been issued by the Federal Government there will be three or four times as many Government bonds in existence, and that three-quarters are in the hands of individuals which will be tax free without any further legislation?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. There will be billions of Federal bonds, and unless the Government should issue billions, in order to fight and win the war, the bonds of the States themselves will be worth nothing.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, should not a vote be taken on my amendment first, before a motion to strike out the whole paragraph is entertained?

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on the amendment of the gentleman from New York is exhausted.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina stated that there would be liberal debate, and the Chair has indulged Members somewhat. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman and gentleman of the committee, I think, if the committee will follow me for just a few moments, this matter may be cleared up in so far as the law is concerned, and I shall not discuss any other proposition. Under existing law every dollar of bonds which is held by any State or national bank is exempt from any form of taxation against that bank. To illustrate: A bank has a capitalization of $100,000. Half of it is held in Government bonds. You can not tax that bank more than $50,000 in any State in the Union. If a bank has $100,000 capital and has $100,000 surplus, you can not tax a single dollar of that surplus if it be invested in Government bonds.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman where he gets his authority for that statement?

Mr. TOWNER. There is the authority of the United States Supreme Court. The taxation is against the bank itself. There is no authority that holds that the part that is represented by Government bonds is not exempted from taxation, and there are a hundred decisions of the Supreme Court that recognize that proposition.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Not now. I shall pretty soon, if I get the time.

Mr. WINGO. I wanted to know if I understood the gentleman. Does the gentleman mean the capital stock or the stock certificates?

Mr. TOWNER. I am speaking now, and speaking only, of capital stock and surplus of the banks. There has never been any exception to the rule that, in so far as the capital stock was represented by bonds or the surplus was represented by bonds, the bank had the right in any taxation against it to have those bonds exempted, and that is the law now.

I want to speak now about the exception. There grew up this character of exception, which was referred to by the gentleman from South Carolina. A State may tax shares of stock of a bank in the hands of the stockholder, without deducting in determining their value the United States bonds held by the bank. That was the decision in the case of Van Allen v. Assessors (3 Wall., 584), quoted by the gentleman. There were many subsequent cases on that same proposition. This was true as to both National and State banks. This was true even in cases where the State law taxed the shares to the individual owner, but compels the national bank or the State bank to pay the tax and make the tax a lien on the stock and dividends of the bank. That was justified for this reason: The Supreme Court made the distinction that it was taxing or endeavoring to tax the value of the shares of the individual shareholders, but still holding to the proposition that when it came to the taxation of the banks every dollar of bonds was exempt from State taxation, and that rule has never been varied in the United States. But now when it comes to a question of taxing in any form the shares of the bank in the hands of the individual owners of the bank, then the Supreme Court has always held since its first decision that they were not allowed to take into consideration any part of the capital stock of the bank that was represented by United States bonds.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. In a moment. We come now to this consideration of the proposition that gentlemen seem to be so much bothered about. They say here that if a bank has $400,000, represented by $100,000 in capital, and $100,000 of surplus in bonds, that that exempts the capital, and therefore it escapes all taxation. That is not true. If all of the capital is represented by bonds, all of the capital would be exempt, and every dollar of the surplus would be subject to taxation. If $100,000 of the surplus was represented by bonds, then that $100,000 would be exempt, and the other $300,000 would be subject to taxation. There is no exception to that proposition. It is the bonds in the hands of the bank or the persons who own the bonds that always are exempted from taxation and have been always, from the commencement down to the present time. I now yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. DOMINICK. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the general system of taxation is not practically in all of the States, taxation of the banks by taxation on the shares of the shareholders?

Mr. TOWNER. I think there are a good many, I will say to the gentleman, and I want to say to the gentleman that I am not discussing the advisability of this legislation, but I am trying to clear up the situation with regard to the law.

I will now yield to the gentleman from Texas who interrupted me a moment ago.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I want to ask the gentleman this: Where the bank has $100,000 capital stock and $200,000 surplus and undivided profits and $300,000 worth of Government bonds, what would be subject to taxation?

Mr. TOWNER. The $300,000 of bonds would make the bank worth $600,000. Every dollar of it represented by bonds would be exempt from taxation, but when you come to tax the shares of that stock in the hands of individual owners, then there would be no exemption from Government bonds.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I do not think the gentleman understood my question.

Mr. TOWNER. I think so.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I said the bank is worth $300,000 in capital stock, surplus, and undivided profit——

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. And bought $300,000 of Government bonds, and now that is all the deposits it has——

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman says the bank bought $300,000 of Government bonds. Does the gentleman mean by that that they use their entire capital stock and entire surplus in the purchase of bonds? Then, so far as the tax against the national banks was concerned you could not tax a dollar against the national banks, but under existing law the State could tax the shares held by individual owners against the individual owners even though every dollar of it was represented by United States bonds. That is the distinction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, I think there is some confusion existing in the minds of some as to what this means. This is what I understand it to mean, and we have gone over the thing very carefully in our committee room: Suppose a bank has $300,000 of capital, surplus, and undivided assets. Suppose a bank has United States bonds among its assets to the amount of $300,000. Then, this provision will mean that no State can put any tax on that bank.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Not just now; I shall in a minute. Let us see how it is taxed to-day. Here is what the States do, roughly speaking, and see if it is not the logical thing for them to do. Take the amount of the assets—suppose they are $1,300,000—and then take the amount of the liabilities, say $1,000,000, what is the value of the stock? The value of the stock is $300,000, and all that any State can tax any individual shareholder of that stock is his proportionate amount of that $300,000. I repeat, the assets are $1,300,000, the liabilities are $1,000,000, the value of the bank stock is $300,000. I realize that capital is considered a liability, and I am not perhaps entirely accurate, but broadly speaking, the case I put represents the method. That is just as plain as anything can be. Now, this says that in determining the value of bank shares, held by individuals of bank stock, the amount of liberty bonds shall be deducted from the bank's assets. That means you deduct the $300,000 held by the bank in United States bonds from the $1,300,000 and you get the assets remaining of $1,000,000. You have a million dollars liability, and therefore, for taxing purposes the stock is worth nothing. I think that is as clear as can be. I have taken it up with some members of the Treasury Department, and they say that is so.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. I will.

Mr. TILSON. What about a case where the State taxes according to the market value of the national-bank stock—that is, taxes the stockholders according to the market value of the stock?

Mr. PHELAN. I understand that that will not make but little difference for this reason—it may make a difference, but the difference will be this: In order to determine what the market value is you are going through practically the same process as to what the assets and liabilities are.

Mr. TILSON. You go and sell it.

Mr. PHELAN. Just a minute. You find out what the difference is. Now, that difference represents roughly the value of that stock. In the opinion of some men it might be worth a little more, and in the opinion of somebody else, worth a little less; but for our purposes it is just as I have stated it; hence it is possible under this provision that the holder of bank stock will not be required to pay any tax. In speaking I may have been a little confusing and I may have said something about taxing the bank. Let me explain so that I will not cause any misapprehension. Under the existing law States can not tax a national bank. They can tax by provision of the national law the shares in the hands of individual owners; and customarily in many States, although the individual shares owned by individuals are taxed, the banks, as a matter of practice, pays the tax Under our law, however, the States can not tax the national bank itself.

Mr. TILSON. I can not understand why the market value of the stock will be any less because a greater or less amount is invested in Government bonds.

Mr. PHELAN. That is the provision, and here is the point of the thing: The market value does not change in the slightest degree; but for the purposes of taxation the value does change, and that is what this deals with. This has nothing to do with the market value or the real value. It says just as plainly as can be that for the purposes of taxation the amount of bonds held by the banks shall be deducted, and it is just as I have stated.

Mr. TILSON. The State law says that the taxes shall be determined according to the market value of the stock. Now, if the investing in Government bonds does not affect the market value of the stock at all, and it sells just as high after you have invested in Government bonds as before——

Mr. PHELAN. I do not want to yield too much time. It will work out that way, regardless of market value. I want to speak about the provision itself.

We had this bill before our Committee on Banking and Currency. I want to be absolutely frank with the Members and say that I was opposed to the provision in the Banking and Currency Committee when it first came in there. At the present time I think the only justification for this provision is the justification for so many other things—the fact that we are at war. At the present moment I am in favor of this provision and I am going to vote for it, but I think it can be defended simply as a war proposition. Now let me explain why that is.

We must distribute these United States bonds through this country. The best means we have to-day of taking care of these bond issues is through our banks. If our banks do not take these bonds we are going to have trouble in getting them distributed to the public. Mention has been made just now about how much they have been oversubscribed. That is true. But why have they been oversubscribed? Because the banks have oversubscribed for them, and at this very moment the banks are large holders of these bonds.

If we are going to continue to put out these bond issues and if we are going to continue to place the burden upon our banks of carrying along this kind of asset, a kind of asset which they ought not to carry in normal times to any great extent, because they ought to be doing commercial business, then we have got to take care of the banks while we are asking that duty of them. The whole trouble comes down to this—the country is not in as good a position as it ought to be to absorb all the bond offerings of this country. The country has not yet waked up to a realization of the fact——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more. I want to ask him a question.

Mr. PHELAN. I would like to have a few minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PHELAN. The fact is, the country has not realized to the full extent how necessary it is for every individual in the Nation to save money to finance this war. [Applause.] The banks can not finance this war; the Government can not finance this war; all the corporations of this country can not finance this war, unless every individual in the country does his part, and to do that part he has got to save.

There are two things that are necessary to carry on this war successfully from a financial point of view—just two things. Those are increased production and increased saving. Up to the present time the people of this country have not been in the habit of saving sufficient money to absorb this great bond offering. As a result, the banks have been obliged temporarily—and I hope the time will be as short as possible—to carry along these bonds. Since we are putting that burden upon the banks, I think we may give them this privilege. I think it is a great privilege, and I think it is a privilege I would be reluctant to give them in normal times; but I think we may give them this privilege now to encourage them at this time to carry bonds and buy bonds as issued by the United States Government. Under normal conditions I should not want to see the banks invest to any great extent in bonds of any kind, even Government bonds. As a matter of banking business, I should prefer to see their funds otherwise invested. This, however, is war time. The emergency apparently demands the purchase of liberty bonds in large volume by the banks. The all-important thing now is the success of the liberty-bond sale. This provision offers an inducement to the banks to purchase liberty bonds at a time when we must be assured of the certain success of our liberty-bond flotation. This, to my mind, is the justification for this provision.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I want to remind the gentleman that this bill does not provide that this shall be only for the war. It goes beyond the war.

Mr. STEVENSON. That is a point that I wanted to call to the gentleman's attention.

Mr. PHELAN. I agree with the gentleman; and if I had my way, I would limit it. But I will not quibble as to that, and although I may not agree in full with everything and although I may think that all the provisions of the bill in normal times would not do, I am not going to hesitate at the present time. There is some difference between making this exemption in favor of banks and making it in favor of other corporations. I will say frankly that, logically, when we exempt State and National banks in this way it might be perfectly proper to exempt other corporations. But there is a decided difference. That is that these other corporations are not bearing the burdens that the banks are bearing relative to our United States bonds.

The corporations have been generous and patriotic it is true, and they have been buying these bonds and helping all they can, but the great burden has been on the banks; discrimination may well be made in favor of the banks in this bill.

There has been reference made to the State bonds. There are some States—the State of New Hampshire, for instance—that have this provision in their law, that any State bank that holds State bonds shall have a privilege similar to this. In other words, a bank in the State of New Hampshire holding State bonds will be permitted to have a deduction made equal to the amount of those bonds for taxation purposes. In those respects and in some other respects the State bonds have an advantage over the national or Federal bonds. We are taxing United States bonds in some cases and not taxing State bonds under our income tax laws.

All that enters into this question. As I said at the beginning, however, I went into this matter in the beginning opposed to the proposition, but I say the justification for it is that we are at war, and we have to use the banks to distribute these bonds and carry them along. That is the justification, and under the present conditions I think it is sufficient justification for the passage of this provision in this act.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. I wanted to ask the gentleman if his proposition to approve this is based on the exemption of banks for all bonds held, or simply bonds issued during this war?

Mr. PHELAN. So far as I am concerned, I do not believe I would make any discrimination.

Mr. STEVENSON. The $800,000,000 that they have now for circulation purposes would be included.

Mr. PHELAN. I might say this: The thing I am interested in is to give the banks this preference, so that they may have additional inducement to carry these bonds until the time shall have arrived when the people of this country have found out that it is their duty to save their money and can absorb the great volume of bonds that is now being distributed in this country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DOMINICK] offered his motion to strike out?

Mr. DOMINICK. I sent it up to the desk, but it has not yet been reported.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I suggest that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] be first acted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I understand the committee has no objection to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DOMINICK: Strike out section 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. WINGO rose.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa will be recognized. He is a member of the committee.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, if there is anything that is disheartening at a time like this, when we are not only carrying on a great war but have reached one of the most momentous crises in our affairs ever known in the whole history of the country, it is to have gentlemen arguing here that some particular section of the country is going to pay extra taxes by reason of bills that we present. Yet it has often been the case. Gentlemen forget that war inevitably makes hardship and always creates some inequalities. When we brought out the war finance corporation bill we were told that some sections of the country would not get their share of the money to be furnished by the corporation if certain provisions were retained in the bill, just as if it were a pork-barrel proposition that had been submitted.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I can not yield. The gentleman had more than 15 minutes.

Mr. DOMINICK. I was just going to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I decline to yield to the gentleman. He had more time than I shall ask for.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. When we had the war-revenue bill before the House there were gentlemen continually before us stating that their particular sections of the country would be injured by that bill, and they would not be able to carry on their line of business; that they were willing to do their share, and that they were patriotic, but when it came to that particular provision they were not willing to accept it.

Now, we have a provision here that is most important in financing this loan. Its purpose is to make it so that a bank will not be penalized by virtue of buying these liberty bonds. The ordinary purchaser can buy these bonds and not be taxed by reason of it, but if a man owns these bonds through the medium of a national bank, as the law stands a tax will be indirectly assessed upon them on account of it, and the banks will not take any more of them than they can avoid.

As the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN] very well stated a little while ago, we have got to put the burden, in the first instance, of carrying these loans on the banks. They have to furnish the money for them. The checks are to be drawn upon them. They must carry a large amount of them, and if they are going to be penalized you may be assured that, no matter how patriotic their officers are, they will not rush to take them.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And certainly the States will not be worse off than they were before.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; the States will not be any worse off than they were before, and if the amendment is passed the provision will not continue in force after the war. The States will continue to collect all the taxes that they received before the war, as the bonds issued prior to the war are excepted from this provision. There is no danger that the banks will buy or keep too many of these bonds, for it would be unprofitable for them to do so. They do not want 4½ per cent bonds which do not have the circulation privilege when they can loan their money at 6 to 8 per cent. If they buy them, it will be through patriotic motives. The motion to strike out this provision ought not to prevail. If the provision is stricken out, the owners of the stock of the banks and the men interested in the banks have got to pay an extra amount of taxation by reason of the purchase of these bonds. Why should they be placed in a worse position than the individual who buys the bonds?

Therefore I say that at this particular time such a motion as this ought not to be urged and ought to be voted down.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, since all the debate on this section has been confined to the proposition of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DOMINICK] to strike out the section, and has taken about an hour, I ask unanimous consent that we limit the debate on this to 15 minutes.

Mr. FORDNEY. Make it 10 minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. I would rather have it 10 minutes. I want 5 minutes myself.

Mr. WINGO. I should like to have 10 minutes, because two of the speakers have absolutely overlooked existing statutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Then I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and amendments thereto close in 20 minutes. I would like to have 10 minutes, and I suggest that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DOMINICK] have the other 10 minutes to distribute.

Mr. CALDWELL. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman from North Carolina intend to take the gentleman from Arkansas off the floor?

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, no; certainly not.

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman's request for 20 minutes is after the gentleman from Arkansas concludes?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I should like 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the debate on this section and all amendments thereto be concluded in 25 minutes, of which the gentleman from Arkansas is to have 5 minutes, the gentleman from North Carolina 10 minutes, and the gentleman from South Carolina 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that we are not going to finish this bill to-night unless we go on with it. Everybody is ready to vote on this question.

Mr. WINGO. I appreciate that; but this matter has been up five times in the last five years in committees of this House, and gentlemen who have discussed it, who are just as sincere as I am, have shown an absolute lack of knowledge of existing statutes.

Mr. FORDNEY. I should like to give all Members all the time they want, but——

Mr. WINGO. I have not taken any time on these banking and currency propositions, that really should have come from the Committee on Banking and Currency, and which have come up in this way because they could not come from the Banking and Currency Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. DOMINICK. I will yield to the gentleman from Arkansas five minutes in addition to the five minutes which he already has.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, in order to save time, I understand that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DOMINICK] will yield to me 5 minutes, so that gives me 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

[Mr. WINGO addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SHOUSE].

Mr. SHOUSE. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a good deal of interest to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, and I want to make two things very plain to this Committee of the Whole. In the first place, the gentleman has contended that this particular provision was killed in the Committee on Banking and Currency. That is not a fact. The bill that was sent to that committee by the Secretary of the Treasury sought to amend the section of the national-bank act dealing with the methods of State taxation, and it was on my motion that the——

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHOUSE. Excuse me just a moment; let me finish, and I will yield. It was on my motion that that bill was killed in the Committee on Banking and Currency by an overwhelming vote. That would have drawn the most distinct contrast between the State bank and the national bank. It would have given the opportunity for the national bank to invest its capital and surplus in liberty bonds, and thereby exempt itself from taxation. There is no question about that. This will give both the State bank and the national bank the same right.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHOUSE. No. I will not yield yet. When I get through I shall be glad to yield, if I have the time. This puts the two on a parity and that is the necessary thing and the fair thing and the right thing to do.

Mr. WINGO. It is on that point that I want to ask a question.

Mr. SHOUSE. The gentleman seems to think that it is an awful thing to give the bank what he calls this opportunity to exercise subterfuge and to dodge behind a liberty bond issue, and come here——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I protest; I did not say the bank, I said the stockholder.

Mr. SHOUSE. If the gentleman will wait, I think I will make it very clear——

Mr. WINGO. But the gentleman has made a statement attributing to me a statement which I did not make.

Mr. SHOUSE. I do not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. SHOUSE. We all know that the banks of the country in practically every State in the Union to-day are not taxed. The gentleman from Arkansas does not pretend to believe that States tax banks, their capital or their surplus. The State taxes the shareholders of the bank in an indirect way, and the taxes paid by the bank—all of us know that, and all of us know, too, whether we vote for or against this, that if this section is left in the bill it will result in doing away temporarily, perhaps, with the present method of State taxation on bank stock. I am perfectly frank to admit that, and I am strongly for this section of the bill, but I do not think it is going to do away with the State's right to tax bank stock. I do not think this is going to take away from the State any privilege, but I think you are going to have the States devise a different method of taxing. What? Not liberty bonds, because you will not allow the capital and surplus to be taken into consideration if invested in liberty bonds, but the State will tax the franchise of the bank to do business. That is a perfectly proper tax. I do not believe you are going to deprive a State of one particle of its right to tax the shareholder of the bank on his investment.

Mr. SHERLEY. What would the gentleman say of the ability to change its law in the next year or two to meet the situation?

Mr. SHOUSE. The gentleman raised a question which is a serious question. It means either an extra session of the legislatures of the various States or would mean for a time the States are going to be asked to levy a greater tax on everything to make up for the deficits that will be caused by this exemption.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHOUSE. But I will say the State ought to be willing to make the same sacrifice in this emergency that the individual is required to make, and if the State be deprived temporarily of some source of revenue that the State ought to be willing to cooperate with the National Government to supply from other sources the revenue that is taken away from it on the bank stock. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WINGO. In the beginning of the gentleman's statement he said he was against this in the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. SHOUSE. No, not this; I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. WINGO. Against the proposition.

Mr. SHOUSE. I was absolutely opposed to the bill presented to the Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. WINGO. The bill presented used the same language from line 22 down to and including the word "bank" on page 3, line 7, but the gentleman says the difference in this is that it also gave State banks and trust companies exemption.

Mr. SHOUSE. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman want this House to believe that as a lawyer he tells them——

Mr. SHOUSE. I am not a lawyer. I defer to the gentleman from Arkansas in all matters of constitutional law.

Mr. WINGO. I am asking the gentleman a serious question. Does the gentleman contend that Congress can exempt the stock of these State banks from taxes upon——

Mr. SHOUSE. I will let the gentlemen answer that question himself to his own satisfaction.

Mr. WINGO. They can not do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Chairman, I will not impose on the committee by using my entire time, as the committee has been so generous to me when I made my argument a few minutes ago. The only thing I have to say now is that we must bear in mind one thing, and that is that the total resources of all the national banks and of all the State banks and trust companies of this country are about $67,000,000,000, which is about one-fourth of the entire estimated wealth of this country. With all of that wealth owned by them they will start to buying these bonds under this section, and it will be only a short while before all of these bonds will be owned by the banks and trust companies, and their present assets will be entirely free of State, county, and municipal taxation.

Now, it has been urged by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] that there is always sectionalism bobbing up in these discussions. I resent any imputation as to any sectionalism on my part in this matter. My argument is that if this section is stricken out it will not only prevent injury to my own State of South Carolina, but this is a matter affecting the entire country—all of the States, proportionately—the States containing the great money centers, as well as the smaller and less favored States in this particular. Certainly anyone coming from a litfle State like mine could not be fairly accused of sectionalism in this.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DOMINICK. Gladly.

Mr. PLATT. Is not the gentleman assuming it is going to be to the interest of the bank to buy bonds and escape 1 per cent taxation when they can make 2 per cent by not buying bonds and using the money in other ways?

Mr. DOMINICK. The banks will want to buy these bonds to escape taxation?

Mr. PLATT. The taxation they want to escape is not as much as they can make by using money in other ways.

Mr. DOMINICK. The banks down my way, when the State had a double exemption in her bonds, were glad to get those bonds.

Mr. WINGO. The banks are now exempt.

Mr. DOMINICK. The banks do not pay one dollar in taxation under the present law, except upon their real estate. The tax is paid by the shareholder by levying that tax on the value of his share.

Now, some one has suggested that the State would still have the power of taxation of banks even if this section remains in the bill. Why, certainly they would have the power of taxation of banks, as they have now, but with this difference: When they have these United States bonds and tax the shares they will deduct the value of those bonds from their capital stock and surplus and undivided profits, from which they fix the value of the shares, and thereby they will escape taxation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is the case in a nutshell. I do not know that I have anything to add to what I have already said in this matter. I hope that my amendment will prevail and that this section will be stricken from the bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All debate is closed on this amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Chairman, a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 22, noes 79.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

On line 22, page 6, before the word "in," insert the following: "During and until one year after the close of the present war."

Mr. KITCHIN. I understood that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] was voted on, and that that said "the bonds issued during the war."

Mr. RAKER. That is right, "bonds issued during the war," but this provision allows the deduction to continue forever.

Mr. KITCHIN. Nobody would buy them if they knew that as soon as the war was over bonds running for 30 years would be taxed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAKER: Page 6, line 22, before the word "in" insert the words "during and until one year after the close of the present war."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. DYER) there were—ayes 22, noes 79.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That section 8 of said act, approved September 24, 1917, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. That the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, is hereby authorized to deposit, in such incorporated banks and trust companies as he may designate, the proceeds, or any part thereof, arising from the sale of the bonds and certificates of indebtedness and war-savings certificates authorized by this act, and arising from the payment of income and excess-profits taxes, and such deposits shall bear such rate or rates of interest, and shall be secured in such manner, and shall be made upon and subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time prescribe: Provided, That the provisions of section 5191 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the Federal reserve act, and the amendments thereof, with reference to the reserves required to be kept by national banking associations and other member banks of the Federal Reserve System, shall not apply to deposits of public moneys by the United States in designated depositaries. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to designate depositaries in foreign countries with which shall be deposited all public money which it may be necessary or desirable to have on deposit in such countries to provide for current disbursements to the military and naval forces of the United States and to the diplomatic and consular and other representatives of the United States in and about such countries until six months after the termination of the war between the United States and the Imperial German Government, and to prescribe the terms and conditions of such deposits."

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SNYDER: Insert, after the word "prescribe," on page 7, line 24, the following:

"Provided, That the payments of income and excess-profits taxes, if so desired by the payee, may be divided into quarterly payments, as follows: First payment, on or before June 15, 1918; second payment, on or before August 15, 1918; third payment, on or before October 15, 1918; fourth payment, on or before December 15, 1918. The rate of interest on these deferred payments shall be fixed at not to exceed 4½ per cent: Provided further, That nothing in this section contained shall prevent the payee from canceling his entire obligation on any one of the designated dates."

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in view of the lateness of the hour I feel obliged to make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WINGO. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman from Arkansas yield the floor to the gentleman who offered the amendment?

Mr. SNYDER. I understood the Chairman to rule on the matter, and if he has ruled on it——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SNYDER. No; but I should like to discuss the merits of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentelman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SNYDER. Let the gentleman make it, and then I will move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. With the understanding that there will be only five minutes' debate on this amendment, I will reserve the point of order until the gentleman concludes.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as this measure deals with the collection of taxes, it seems to me an amendment of this sort is germane, and I feel there is a necessity for such a measure to become effective at this time. Certainly we are all deeply interested in the sale of the liberty bonds that this bill authorizes. Every man in this House must appreciate that the banks at the present time are carrying a large percentage of the bonds that have already been sold. Every man here must appreciate that the banks of this country have got to take a very large part of this next issue of Government bonds. Every man in this House who knows anything about the business of this country, or anything about the banking business of this country, must realize that notwithstanding large profits were made in 1917, a very large percentage of those profits are tied up in betterments and increased facilities for carrying on these war industries. Now, I believe it is absolutely essential and necessary that something of this character should be done between now and the 15th day of June if we want to feel certain that this bond issue that we are about to put on the market will be a success, and to make it reasonably sure that the banks will be able to carry the burden that is to be put on them within the next coming three months. This may not be exactly the place to enact this suggestion into law, but in my judgment I want to warn this membership that there is a great possibility of financial difficulty coming to this country unless some provision of this kind is made between now and the 15th day of June.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman knows that the Secretary is very much against this and that the Ways and Means Committee have refused to report any legislation for that reason.

Mr. SNYDER. I have understood that that was so, but I have heard some men in whose ability I have just as much confidence take the other position and say that the Secretary of the Treasury is absolutely wrong, and that we can not continue to finance bond issues and pay all of these taxes at the same time without some relief of this nature.

Mr. DYER. I think the gentleman is absolutely right.

Mr. HELVERING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. HELVERING. The gentleman understands that the objection of the Secretary of the Treasury is that he has issued time certificates against the taxes that have to be paid in June?

Mr. SNYDER. The banks are largely carrying the certificates and one will offset the other. The banks can not take the additional burden of selling liberty bonds and the large amount of money they must loan to the men and women of the country who have this tax to pay at the same time. I maintain that 60 or 70 per cent of the taxes to be paid between now and the 15th of June must be borrowed from the banks of this country to meet the payments. It is my further belief that at least 80 per cent of the sale of the Government bonds have got to be sold by the banks on time, and unless some relief of this sort is felt I think we have a great difficulty to overcome before us.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in section 8, after the word "prescribe," in line 24, as follows: "Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury or his collectors receiving income taxes or excess-profits taxes by bank check or draft, shall immediately, and without recourse to other depositories, return said checks or drafts to the bank or banks or trust companies upon which they are drawn and from which they are issued and deposit them therein to the credit of the Government: Provided, That such banks or trust companies shall have been heretofore designated as Government depositories."

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word. I think this is an important matter, particularly since the other amendment I offered did not prevail. It is quite important to do something to protect the banks in this country while the transfer of funds is going on from the ordinary banks to the Government and then back to the banks. If this prevailed, it could be easily arranged that your check or mine drawn on a certain bank for any amount, if the Government had a deposit in that bank, be returned immediately to that bank, so that the funds would not be disturbed at all until such time as the Government had to finally draw it out for its purposes. That is all I care to say about it.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Does not the gentleman think that would be unfair to the banks that have not been designated as Government depositories? Would it not have a tendency to induce people to deposit money in a Government depository and draw checks on that bank to the expense of the other banks?

Mr. SNYDER. I think that would be true if it were not for the fact that practically every bank in the country to-day is a Government salesman for liberty bonds and all banks are now depositories of such sales, so that practically every bank in the country would have checks drawn on it. I just want to cite a case. Take a city like my own. Perhaps the taxes that will be collected in that town will be more than half a million dollars. There are only two banks. Unless an arrangement of this nature is made, or we have this deferred-payment scheme, within 15 or 20 days there will be shifted from those two banks a matter of half a million dollars to the Government that will not get back to the banks within perhaps a month. If some arrangement of this nature could be adopted, within two days the checks that are sent from my city to Syracuse would be back and the business of the city and that section would not be disturbed at all until such time as the Government had to withdraw the money for its own use. I think it is very important and I would like to have some consideration of it.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I do not want to delay the committee, but there is one provision here which is a reenactment, which I am not going to criticize or seek to amend. I think, however, it is such a big departure that some comment at least ought to be made about it. It was in the original bond bill, so that it is an old matter. I refer to the provision whereby all reserve requirements are removed as against Government deposits. That means that under the law as enacted and as reenacted here the banks would be required to carry absolutely no reserve against Government deposits. In other words, if they exercise their power to the full, the banks could carry hundreds of millions of dollars without any reserve at all. There is a great danger in that. In the first place, there is the danger of inflation, and in the second place, the danger of confusion in this way, that the Government is going to pay out those hundreds of millions of dollars, and those accounts are going to be transferred from the Government to individuals. Just as soon as the deposits get into the names of individuals the banks will be required to carry reserves against them. If, therefore, the banks to too great extent take advantage of this provision of the law and let their reserves run down, they may find themselves in difficulty in getting reserves against the individual deposits when the Government changes its accounts to individual accounts.

Mr. SNYDER. Suppose you carry out your proposition to a final conclusion, you make my argument a hundred per cent good. That same thing would apply to a bank in any city whose reserves had been depleted.

Mr. PHELAN. That may be so. The only reason I have for calling attention to it is this: It is the law, but probably bankers will have the good sense and wisdom and judgment in spite of the law not to allow their reserves against Government deposits to get down too low. I have brought the matter to the attention of the Members so that there will be at least something in the RECORD to show that the Members of this House, although they give that broad power, do not intend and do not anticipate that it is going to be exercised to the full extent by the banks of the country. Personally, I should prefer to see proper limitations inserted in this section of the bill, but I shall not at this time suggest any amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I see there is nothing in this bill providing for expenses. Is that because this is an amendment to the original act, and therefore it carries one-fifth of 1 per cent as the previous act did?

Mr. KITCHIN. The provision in the September act remains.

Mr. GILLETT. Then, may I ask the chairman if the Secretary of the Treasury has ever complied with that law and made a detailed report?

Mr. KITCHIN. He may have done it.

Mr. GILLETT. I wish to state, Mr. Chairman, that I raised the question on this floor some months ago, and I then had a little correspondence with the Secretary of the Treasury on the subject. He referred me to a report which he considered to be a compliance with this law. It was just one page of printed matter. very general and vague, while the law provides that he shall make a detailed report. I pointed out that I did not think that was a fair compliance with the law. Since then there has been no further report to my knowledge. I do not like to suggest. because I do not believe that there is any corruption with this fund, but, at the same time, I have thought that when Congress is giving to the administration vast sums and vast powers like these several million dollars which the Secretary of the Treasury can expend exactly as he pleases it seems to me that it is but a fair response to the confidence that Congress shows in the Executive that the Executive should be scrupulous, and overscrupulous, in making a full and detailed report. Now, the report made by the Secretary of the Treasury is not such as gives the House any information at all as to details. It is just such a report as a person would make if he wished to cover up details, and there have been intimations made—I do not know, myself—that some of that was spent to pay political debts. I do not wish to make the charge—I know absolutely nothing about it—but there are such intimations being made, and there will be such suspicions growing up unless the Executive does very frankly and candidly comply with the requirements of the law in this respect, and I hope and trust that that side of the House, the Committee on Ways and Means, will try to see to it that the law is complied with in much more detail than it has been up to date. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say I agree with the gentleman that there should be a detailed report filed in accordance with the law, and I shall myself call the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury to that if he has not already filed such a report. If he does not report in such details as the House desires, it has the remedy of calling for a fuller report.

Mr. GILLETT. We have our remedy. I do not think the last report was full enough, and I think this House ought to exercise its remedy and I wish the majority of the House would.

Mr. KITCHIN. Is the gentleman referring to the report he made to this Congress in December?

Mr. GILLETT. No; I think that was made in December.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; is that the report he refers to?

Mr. GILLETT. I think so; I think that is the only report that has been made, is it not? I have not seen any other.

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not recall how full in details that was. But it struck me as giving a pretty fair account of the expenditures, though not in such details as the gentleman suggests.

Mr. GILLETT. The law requires a detailed report, and that, as I stated, was only a page about the size the gentleman holds in his hand.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I caught quite accurately a part of the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts, but if I did I think that he should go either further than he has gone or not have gone as far as he has. If I understood him aright, and he speaks from the standpoint of the minority leader of the Republican side, he did not know and did not want to take the responsibility, but said he had heard there was some gossip to the effect that some of the money had been used for private purposes to pay political debts.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to be misunderstood—I meant that services had been rendered and paid for as a method of paying political debts. In other words——

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is beginning to modify somewhat his very bald and sweeping statement. We are all in a position charged with high responsibilities in this day, and a man who makes a charge even on a suspicion or rumor ought to be prepared to see it through or not to make it. All of us could spend our days in making charges, if we were willing to accept loose gossip or rumor.

I know the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] does not desire to be a medium for giving currency to things for which there is no reason. If there is a reason, he owes it to the House to state it. If there is none, the statement should not be made.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the criticism which the gentleman has expressed toward me is justified. It seems to me that criticism is due, not to a Member of the House who suggests the possibility that this fund had been used in a partisan manner but, when the law of Congress requires a detailed report from the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Treasury gives simply one page, which contains absolutely no information of value, and when the attention of the Secretary has been called to it, as it was by myself, and then no further information is given, I think such action justly deserves criticism. And I think for me to say what I did when I have heard suggestions that employment has been given in selling these bonds as a payment for past political debts was not undue criticism, but, on the contrary, I think it was mild after the refusal of the Secretary to give reasonable details. I do not myself express any personal suspicion, but I do believe this conduct is exactly what will excite unnecessarily suspicion throughout not only this side of the House but the country. And I think it is due from that side of the House, as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] says he will, to see that the law is complied with and detailed statements are made. I try not to be partisan or unreasonably suspicious, but this administration is not so responsive or nonpartisan as to give me much encouragement. The best prevention for unjustifiable suspicion is a full and frank and candid statement of the facts, and that is what the law here requires, and I think compliance with it would be politic as well as just.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

When the paragraph was under consideration in the last bond bill, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to expend one-fifth of 1 per cent of the total bond authorization, not one-tenth of 1 per cent, as my colleague states it is his privilege to spend, I tried to limit the expenditure of this percentage amount to the percentage on the gross amount of the respective issues. That amendment, although it was accepted by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and adopted by the House, was stricken out in another body, and it was stricken out in conference. So at the present time there is no restriction whatsoever on the Secretary of the Treasury in spending one-fifth of 1 per cent of the entire gross issue of fourteen billion of bonds and of four billion of war-savings certificates, and in addition one-tenth of 1 per cent of total authorization of certificates of indebtedness, eight billion, or a total amount without any limit at his disposal of $44,000,000.

That is the total amount he has at his disposal. And the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] is well within bounds in criticizing the action of the Secretary of the Treasury in submitting, not a detailed statement, but something meager of return, a mere excuse of a return and lacking in every particular as being a report as required by the law requiring a detailed statement. This matter was presented to the legislative subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, and one of the auditors of the Treasury Department stated that they had difficulty in viséing and approving some of the accounts that had been expended under these huge appropriations. That subcommittee did not have time to go into the subject minutely, but, as is known generally, this large amount, running into millions of dollars, is at the disposal of the Secretary of the Treasury. We have placed implicit confidence in him that he would spend it wisely in floating these bonds. When we have auditors appointed by the Government saying that the expenditures under that lump-sum appropriation have been of such a character that they have been difficult for them to pass upon and approve, may well the representative of the minority say that the Secretary of the Treasury has been remiss in not reporting to Congress the detailed statement that Congress required by the express language of the law. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That said act approved September 24, 1917, is hereby amended by adding three new sections, to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. That any bonds of the United States bearing interest at a higher rate than 4 per cent per annum (whether issued under section 1 of this act or upon conversion of bonds issued under this act or under said act approved April 24, 1917) which have been owned by any person continuously for at least six months prior to the date of his death and which upon such date constitute part of his estate, shall, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, be receivable by the United States at par and accrued interest in payment of any estate or inheritance taxes imposed by the United States under or by virtue of any present or future law upon such estate or the inheritance thereof.

"SEC. 15. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, from time to time, until the expiration of one year after the termination of the war, to purchase bonds issued under authority of this act, including bonds issued upon conversion of bonds issued under this act or said act approved April 24, 1917, at such prices and upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe. The par amount of bonds of any series issued before April 1, 1918, which may be purchased in the 12-months' period beginning April 1, 1918, and in each 12-months' period thereafter, shall not exceed one-twentieth of the amount of bonds of such series outstanding at the beginning of such 12-months' period. In the case of any series of bonds issued after April 1, 1918, the par amount of bonds of such series which may be purchased in the 12-months' period beginning on the date of such issue, and in each 12-months' period thereafter shall not exceed one-twentieth of the amount of the bonds of such series outstanding at the beginning of such 12-months' period. The average cost of the bonds of any series purchased in any such 12-months' period shall not exceed par and accrued interest.

"For the purposes of this section the Secretary of the Treasury shall set aside, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum not exceeding one-twentieth of the amount of such bonds issued before April 1, 1918, and as and when any more such bonds are issued he shall set aside a sum not exceeding one-twentieth thereof. Whenever, by reason of purchases of bonds as provided in this section, the amount so set aside falls below the sum which he deems necessary for the purposes of this section, the Secretary of the Treasury shall set aside such amount as he shall deem necessary, but not more than enough to bring the entire amount so set aside at such time up to one-twentieth of the amount of such bonds then outstanding. The amount so set aside by the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby appropriated for the purposes of this section, to be available until the expiration of one year after the termination of the war.

"The Secretary of the Treasury shall make to Congress at the beginning of each regular session a report including a detailed statement of the operations under this section.

"SEC. 16. That any of the bonds or certificates of indebtedness authorized by this act may be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury payable, principal and interest, in any foreign money or foreign moneys, as expressed in such bonds or certificates, but not also in United States gold coin, and he may dispose of such bonds or certificates in such manner and at such prices, not less than par, as he may determine, without compliance with the provisions of the third paragraph of section 1. In determining the amount of bonds and certificates issuable under this act, the dollar equivalent of the amount of any bonds or certificates payable in foreign money or foreign moneys shall be determined by the par of exchange at the date of issue thereof, as estimated by the Director of the Mint and proclaimed by the Secretary of the Treasury, in pursuance of the provisions of section 25 of the act approved August 27, 1894, entitled 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.' The Secretary of the Treasury may designate depositaries in foreign countries with which may be deposited, as he may determine, all or any part of the proceeds of any bonds or certificates authorized by this act, payable in foreign money or foreign moneys."

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Insert as a new section, on page 12, after line 2, the following:

"That all taxes assessed by act of Congress approved October 3, 1917, under title 11, war excess-profits tax, sections 200 to 214, both inclusive, may be paid in four equal partial payments at the option of the taxpayer under regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The first of such partial payments shall be made on or before June 15, 1918, the second partial payment on or before August 15, 1918, the third partial payment on or before October 15, 1918, and the last partial payment on or before December 15, 1918. Such taxes for the succeeding years may be paid in like manner.

"That nothing in this act shall prohibit the taxpayer from anticipating the dates of payment under this act under any existing act of Congress or regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue."

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that. I do not know whether the gentleman desires to discuss it or not.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss the point of order particularly, but I think the amendment is germane. The provision if adopted will do more to stimulate the sale of liberty bonds than any other one thing that would then be in the bill. These people who are paying these taxes are considerably burdened to make the payments, to find the ready cash, and if these payments which are to mature on the 15th of June can be divided up into four equal payments, the subscriptions to the next loan will be greatly accelerated. I think the amendment is germane.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment proposed is not germane to any of the subject matter of the bill. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That the short title of this act shall be "third liberty loan act."

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. On page 10, line 12, is not the word "and" superfluous? Is not the word "and" before "as and when" superfluous? Should it not be stricken out? And should not the word "as" be stricken out?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I think not.

Mr. FORDNEY. Then on page 11, line 8, after the word "certificates, but not," is not the word "not" superfluous? It reads, "but not also in United States gold coin." Ought it not to read "and also in United States gold coin"?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. The committee inserted that provision to prevent these bonds from being paid in gold coin.

Mr. FORDNEY. All right.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] asks unanimous consent to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I move, Mr. Chairman, that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

Mr. TREADWAY. I make the same request.

Mr. BARKLEY. And I make the same request, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. RAKER. I make the same request.

Mr. KINKAID. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

Mr. DICKINSON. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to these several requests of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID], the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALEXANDER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11123) to amend an act approved September 24, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes," and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BIRD RESERVATION.

Mr. RAKER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Public Lands of the House of Representatives, I beg leave to present a report (H. Rept. No. 430) of the said committee on the bill (H. R. 10612) to restore to the public domain certain lands heretofore reserved for a bird reservation in Siskiyou and Modoc Counties, Cal., and Klamath County, Oreg., and for other purposes, under Rule XI, subdivision 56, and ask that the report be printed and the bill placed on the Union Calendar and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to be called up later for consideration under the rules of the House but not to interfere with important war legislation.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, April 1, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. TIMBERLAKE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9349) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent to John Zimmerman for certain lands in the Colorado National Forest upon the surrender of other lands of an equal acreage also located in the Colorado National Forest, Colo., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 429), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

SENATE.

MONDAY, April 1, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee as the representatives of a Christian Nation out of the hope and glory of the season in which we have commemorated the power of the Christ over death and the grave, and the resurrection of the power and glory above all men and nations. In His name we come asking Thy guidance and blessing, that the spirit of this glorious season may abide with us; that we may know the power of His resurrection; that we may gain inspiration and hope as we face the great tragedy of the ages. May we go forward under His inspiring leadership and gain victory for truth and righteousness in the world. Hear us and fit us for the duties of this day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last, when, on request of Mr. SAULSBURY and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has received a communication from the governor of Texas, transmitting a certified copy of a joint resolution passed by the Legislature of the State of Texas ratifying the proposed prohibition amendment to the Constitution, which will be read and placed on the files.

The communication was read, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
AUSTIN, TEX.

House joint resolution 1.

Ratifying an amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America passed by the Sixty-fifth Congress of the United States of America at its second session, which amendment provides, in substance, that one year after the ratification of the amendment the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is prohibited; that Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation; and providing further that this article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution within seven years from the date of submission to the States by Congress.

PREAMBLE.

And whereas both Houses of the Sixty-fifth Congress of the United States of America, at its second session, by a constitutional majority of two-thirds thereof, made the following proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States of America, in substance, to wit:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States, as provided by the Constitution:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

SEC. 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
THOS. R. MARSHALL,
Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate.

I certify that this joint resolution originated in the Senate.

JAMES M. BAKER, Secretary.

Now therefore be it:

Resolved by the House of Representatives and the Senate of the State of Texas:

SECTION 1. That the said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States adopted by the Sixty-fifth Congress of the United States of America at its second session and reading, in substance, as follows:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

SEC. 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress—be, and the same is hereby, ratified by the Legislature of the State of Texas.

SEC. 2. That certified copies of this preamble and joint resolution be forwarded by the governor of this State to the President of the United States, Secretary of State of the United States, to the Presiding Officer of the United States Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States.

F. O. FULLER,
Speaker of the House.
E. A. DECHERD, Jr.,
President of the Senate.

I certify that house joint resolution 1 was adopted by the house on March 1, 1918, and house concurred in senate amendments on March 4, 1918.

BOB BARKER,
Chief Clerk of the House.

I certify that house joint resolution 1 was adopted by the Senate with amendments on March 2, 1918, by the following vote: Fourteen yeas, six nays, four pairs.

RALPH SOAPE,
Secretary of the Senate.

Received in the executive office this 5th day of March, A. D. 1918, at 11 o'clock and 6 minutes a. m.

JOHN D. MCCALL,
Secretary to the Governor.

Received in department of state this 12th day of March, A. D. 1918, at 9 o'clock and 50 minutes a. m.

GEO. F. HOWARD,
Secretary State.
By C. L. ISHERWOOD,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, George F. Howard, secretary of state of the State of Texas, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of house joint resolution 1, passed at the fourth called session of the Thirty-fifth Legislature of Texas, with the indorsements thereon, as now appears of record in this department.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto signed my name officially and caused to be impressed hereon the seal of State at my office in the city of Austin this the 13th day of March, A. D. 1918.

[SEAL.] GEO. F. HOWARD,
Secretary of State.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2469) to authorize the change of the name of the steamship Caldera to A. T. Kinney.

The message also announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 3400) to regulate the pay of retired chief warrant officers and warrant officers on active duty, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PADGETT, Mr. TALBOTT, and Mr. BUTLER managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LEVER, Mr. LEE of Georgia, Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi, Mr. HAUGEN, and Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7795) to provide for the national security and defense and further to assure an adequate supply of food by authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to contract with farmers in certain areas for the production of grain through advances, loans, and otherwise, and by providing for the voluntary mobilization of farm labor, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President.

H. R. 5351. An act providing for the disposal of certain lands in block 32, in the city of Port Angeles, State of Washington; and

S. J. Res. 133. Joint resolution authorizing the granting of insurance under the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended by the act approved October 6, 1917, on application by a person other than the person to be insured.

PRICE OF TOMATOES.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, on the 8th of March I introduced a resolution in the Senate empowering and directing the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to inquire as to the authority and purpose of a certain bulletin issued by the Food Administration relating to the price of tomatoes in a large portion of the country. I then expressed the hope that in some way somehow the various departments of the Government and bureaus would become so coordinated that the production of food would not be interfered with by bulletins issued by the Food Administration.

I am very glad to say that the agitation of the question through the debate on the resolution, which was adopted by the Senate, seems to have produced a result which is quite satisfactory to the producers of this great foodstuff.

About a week or a little less than a week after the resolution was adopted I had from the Food Administrator a letter dated the 13th of March in which he expressed his lack of desire to fix and stated that he had no power to fix the price of this foodstuff. I ask that this letter be printed in the RECORD, so that the RECORD may be complete respecting this matter. I do not think it is worth while to take the time of the Senate to read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., March 13, 1918.

Hon. WILLARD SAULSBURY,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The circular (Bulletin No. 8) issued by the Food Administration of February 28, 1918, did not and was not intended as fixing the price per ton at which producers in Delaware, Maryland, and other States mentioned must sell their tomatoes. It was, as appears on its face, a bulletin of information to canners that the Army and Navy, for the canned tomatoes needed by them, were ready to receive tenders from canners, if they desired to make the same, for canned tomatoes based on the prices stated per ton of tomatoes. No one was required to bid and no limitation was made on the price per ton which anyone might ask for his tomatoes, but simply that if the canners wished they might make an offer to the Army and Navy on the basis mentioned.

The Food Administration has not power and no desire to fix the price of tomatoes.

Faithfully, yours,

HERBERT HOOVER.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WALSH. I present resolutions adopted at a meeting of the Fergus County Union of the American Society of Equity, held recently at Lewistown, Mont., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Adopted by Fergus County Union of American Society of Equity now in session at Lewistown, March 15, 1918.

Whereas the bill now in committee in the Congress to enable President Wilson to extend further control in the fixation of prices affecting the agricultural industry is a measure vital to the efficiency of the food-producing forces of the Nation; and

Whereas the almost limitless supplies of foodstuffs now in the hands of Germany and its allies will make food for the armies and the workers of our enemies abundant; and

Whereas this situation makes it an imperative patriotic necessity that food production in this Nation shall be speeded up to an unprecedented maximum for this and succeeding years so long as the war shall last; and

Whereas the farm men and women of the Nation are willing and eager to make such effort in this direction as is bounded only by the limitations of human endurance: Therefore be it

Resolved, That in their names we demand of Congress the immediate passage of the President's price-control measure, to the end that the treasonous profiteering that is now grinding down the morale of the farmers and strangling their patriotic impulses and purposes shall cease during the war and permanently thereafter; and be it further

Resolved, That we tender to President Wilson the assurance of our loyalty without stint and measurelessly in every effort he may put forth to make this continent safe for and give the fullest enjoyment of democracy in finance, in transportation, in agriculture, production, and in the production of all things needful in the grim business of war and in the nobler acts of peace when and so soon as peace again shall be given our beloved country.

J. F. ARNOLD, President.
L. O. BATTEY, Secretary.

Mr. McLEAN presented petitions of sundry citizens of Cornwall, Meriden, Fairfield, and Hartford, and of Local Branch No. 86, National Association of Letter Carriers, of Hartford, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. NELSON presented a resolution adopted by the St. Paul Association, of St. Paul., Minn., in favor of the enactment of legislation providing for the taking of receipts for registered mail, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. PAGE presented a petition of Slate Workers Union No. 15178, of South Poultney, Vt., praying for a second trial for Thomas Mooney, of San Francisco, Cal., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GRONNA presented petitions of the congregations of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Balfour, of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Voltaire, and of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Williston, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Drain, Oreg., and a petition of Callamette Grange, No. 543, Patrons of Husbandry, of Lime County, Oreg., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TILLMAN presented a memorial of the Phoenix Furniture Co., of Charleston, S. C., remonstrating against Government ownership of furniture factories, which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

He also presented a petition of sundry rural letter carriers of Orangeburg, S. C., praying for an increase in the salary of postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of the Gratiot-Isabella-Clare County Medical Society, of Riverdale, Mich., praying for an advanced rank for officers of the Medical Corps of the Army, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Dundee, Mich., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of sundry employees of the post office at Berlin, N. H., praying for an increase in the salary of postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. PENROSE presented resolutions adopted by the Philadelphia Bourse, of Pennsylvania, favoring the repeal of the act of March 1, 1913, authorizing the valution of the physical property of carriers, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 3570) granting lands for school purposes in Government town sites on reclamation projects, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 347) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 3434) prohibiting the issuance of patent under lieu selection 2904, serial 1034, Olympia, Wash., reported it adversely and submitted an adverse report (No. 344) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

S. 954. A bill to amend an act approved June 22, 1910, entitled "An act to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands" (Rept. No. 345); and

S. 2460. A bill authorizing the issuance of patent to the Milk River Valley Gun Club (Rept. No. 346).

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Pensions, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 8496. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war (Rept. No. 348); and

H. R. 9160. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war (Rept. No. 349).

WHITE RIVER BRIDGE, MISSOURI.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 10365) granting the consent of Congress to the Forsyth special road district of Taney County, Mo., to construct a bridge across White River, at Forsyth, Mo., and I submit a report (No. 343) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BIG SANDY RIVER BRIDGES.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4127) to authorize the W. M. Ritter Lumber Co., a corporation, to construct bridges across the branches and tributaries of the Big Sandy River and their tributaries, in the counties of Buchanan and Dickenson, in the State of Virginia, and I submit a report (No. 342) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLARK FORK RIVER BRIDGE, IDAHO.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 4102) granting the consent of Congress to the county commissioners of Bonner County, Idaho, to construct a bridge across the Clarksfork River in Bonner County, Idaho, and I submit a report (No. 341) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "Clarksfork" and insert "Clark Fork," and in line 8 to strike out "Clarksfork" and insert "Clark Fork."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting the consent of Congress to the county commissioners of Bonner County, Idaho, to construct a bridge across the Clark Fork River in Bonner County, Idaho."

SOUTHERN STATES LUMBER CO.

Mr. MYERS. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 1738) for the relief of the Southern States Lumber Co., and I submit a report (No. 340) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] to the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. A similar bill has passed the Senate before, but it did not get through the House because of the lateness of the session. It has been reported favorably twice by the committee and has passed the Senate once. I ask, therefore, for the present consideration of this bill.

Mr. GRONNA. May we have the bill read before it is acted on?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Southern States Lumber Co., a corporation, Pensacola, Fla., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $603.79.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

A bill (S. 4238) granting a pension to George H. Hauf (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JONES of Washington submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 to aid the State of Washington in the maintenance and support of its marine school, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

EXCESS-PROFITS TAXES.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York in reference to installment payments of the excess-profits taxes.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How long is it?

Mr. CALDER. It will take about one-eighth of a page of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, held March 7, 1918, the following preamble and resolution, presented by its committee on State and municipal taxation, were unanimously adopted:

INSTALLMENT PAYMENTS OF EXCESS-PROFITS TAX.

Whereas the provision in the revenue laws of the United States now requires the payment, on or before June 15 of each year, of Federal taxes, including personal and corporation income taxes and excess-profits taxes of large amounts, based upon income or earnings for an entire year; and as in many cases the income or earnings from which such taxes are payable are fully absorbed in conducting the business of the taxpayer and can only be withdrawn therefrom at great burden and inconvenience to the individuals, firms, or corporations by whom payment must be made; or if the money be borrowed from the banks, with a resulting money stringency: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York strongly recommends to the Congress of the United States that the existing revenue law be so amended as to authorize the payment of the total excess-profits taxes in four installments, on the 15th of June, August, October, and December of the year 1918 and each year thereafter.

Respectfully submitted.

ALFRED E. MARLING, Chairman,
WILLIAM C. DEMOREST,
LEONOR F. LOREE,
JAMES BROWN,
WILLIAM H. WHEELOCK,
Of the Committee on State and Municipal Taxation.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—GEORGE W. JOHNSON.

On motion of Mr. WALSH it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill S. 1217, Sixty-third Congress, first session, granting a pension to George W. Johnson, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ALLEYS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If this is the proper time, I desire to ask that Senate resolution 219, which I presented on Friday, may be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 219, submitted by Mr. JONES of Washington on the 29th ultimo, as follows:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, directed to advise the Senate what proceedings have been instituted for the opening, extending, widening, or straightening of alleys and minor streets in the city of Washington since the approval of the District appropriation act, March 3, 1917, in which additional authority was given in the matter of the condemnation and assessment of damages, and if no proceedings have been taken thereunder, why not; and if any proceedings are contemplated, what they are and when they are to be taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS ON DUTY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate resolution 216.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, in line 2, to strike out "noncombatant"; in line 3, after the word "officers," to insert "of the several staff corps"; in line 4, to strike out the word "an"; and, in line 5, after the words "the war," to insert "and are now assigned to duty in the District of Columbia," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to transmit to the Senate the number of commissioned officers of the several staff corps in the United States Army within the draft age who have received their commissions since the outbreak of the war and are now assigned to duty in the District of Columbia.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

COLUMBIA RIVER AND ITS TRIBUTARIES.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, some days ago there came over from the House the bill (H. R. 2617) to ratify the compact and agreement between the States of Oregon and Washington regarding concurrent jurisdiction over the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries in connection with regulating, protecting, and preserving fish, and it was referred to the Committee on Commerce. The same bill was introduced in the Senate and was reported out on two separate occasions favorably by the Judiciary Committee. In view of the fact that the Senate bill is on the calendar I ask that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the House bill and that the bill be passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to discharging the committee from the further consideration of the bill?

Mr. GRONNA. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Congress of the United States of America hereby consents to and ratifies the compact and agreement entered into between the States of Oregon and Washington relative to regulating, protecting, and preserving fish in the boundary waters of the Columbia River and other waters, which compact and agreement is contained in section 20 of chapter 188 of the general laws of Oregon for 1915, and section 116, chapter 31, of the session laws of Washington for 1915, and is as follows:

"All laws and regulations now existing, or which may be necessary for regulating, protecting, or preserving fish in the waters of the Columbia River, over which the States of Oregon and Washington have concurrent jurisdiction, or any other waters within either of said States, which would affect said concurrent jurisdiction, shall be made, changed, altered, and amended in whole or in part, only with the mutual consent and approbation of both States."

Nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect the right of the United States to regulate commerce, or the jurisdiction of the United States over navigable waters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask that there may be printed along with the proceedings which have just been had the report of the Senate Judiciary Committee in the Sixty-fourth Congress and also the report of the committee of the House made on the 7th day of March, 1918, on the same bill.

There being no objection, the reports were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[S. Rept. No. 513, 64th Cong., 1st sess.]

COLUMBIA RIVER AND ITS TRIBUTARIES.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 6097):

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6097) to ratify the compact and agreement between the States of Oregon and Washington regarding concurrent jurisdiction over the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries in connection with regulating, protecting, and preserving fish, having considered the same, report it to the Senate with the recommendation that it do pass.

The advisability of this legislation is set forth in the following communication from Mr. A. L. Thurman, Solicitor for the Department of Commerce:

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR,
DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
Washington, February 7, 1916.

Hon. J. W. ALEXANDER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR JUDGE ALEXANDER: I am in receipt of your letter of the 5th instant, inclosing H. R. No. 6097, to ratify the compact and agreement between the States of Oregon and Washington regarding concurrent jurisdiction over the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries, in connection with regulating, protecting, and preserving fish, and asking me to please give the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries my opinion as to the merits of the bill and the wisdom of enacting it into law. This same matter was covered in S. 2529, introduced by Senator Charles F. Johnson, and sent to the department by the Committee on Fisheries of the Senate for an expression of opinion. The matter was referred by the department to the Bureau of Fisheries, and I am inclosing you a copy of letter to Senator Johnson prepared by the bureau and signed by Assistant Secretary Sweet, which seems to entirely cover the matter. The department is of the opinion that the bill should be enacted into law.

Yours, very truly,

A. L. THURMAN, Solicitor.

JANUARY 8, 1916.

Hon. CHARLES F. JOHNSON,
Chairman Committee on Fisheries,
United States Senate, Washington.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In reply to your letter of January 3, inclosing a copy of S. 2529, a bill ratifying the compact and agreement between the States of Oregon and Washington regarding concurrent jurisdiction over the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries in connection with regulating, protecting, and preserving fish, I beg to advise that this is regarded as a meritorious and desirable measure and its passage is recommended.

It is essential for the welfare and conservation of the fisheries of the Columbia River that the legislation affecting them be consistent and harmonious, and as the jurisdiction over that stream and certain of its tributaries is divided between the States party to this compact, it is highly important that the laws of the two should be in accord. The recent sessions of the Legislatures of Oregon and Washington took cognizance of this, and the fisheries regulations relating to these waters are now uniform in the two States. It is desirable that this condition should be perpetuated by ratification of the compact which, while not preventing modification of the present laws by mutual agreement of the two States, will make impossible their amendment by any ill-considered action of one State.

Very truly, yours,

E. F. SWEET,
Acting Secretary.

Memorials to Congress have been passed by the Legislatures of the States of Washington and Oregon, respectively, urging upon Congress the enactment of appropriate legislation ratifying and confirming the compact above referred to and giving its consent to the compact and agreement between the States named, as required by section 10 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States.

The compact is embodied in the memorials and is set forth in the bill.

The memorial of the Legislature of the State of Washington is as follows:

"To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Washington:

"We, your memorialists, the senate and house of representatives of the State of Washington, in legislative session assembled, most respectfully represent, show, and pray as follows:

"Whereas the Legislatures of the States of Oregon and Washington did appoint committees from their respective bodies to confer each with the other and to recommend legislation necessary to be provided for the regulation, preservation, and protection of salmon and other food fishes in the waters of the Columbia River, over which the States of Washington and Oregon have concurrent jurisdiction, and over waters within the boundaries of said States which might be of concurrent interest; and

"Whereas said committees did meet in Portland, Oreg., on the 6th day of February, 1915, and did agree on the necessary measures and legislation to be enacted by the Legislatures of the States of Washington and Oregon, and in their reports to their respective bodies did recommend, 'We further recommend that a resolution be passed by the Legislatures of Washington and Oregon, whereby the ratification by Congress of the laws of the States of Oregon and Washington shall act as a treaty between said States, subject to modification by joint agreement by said States'; and

"Whereas said report was adopted by both the house of representatives and the senate by the passage of senate concurrent resolution No. 8; and

"Whereas the legislature did fulfill the recommendations by enactment of house bill No. 170, which in section 108 reads as follows:

"'SEC. 108. Should Congress by virtue of the authority vested in it under section 10, Article I, of the Constitution of the United States, providing for compacts and agreements between States, ratify the recommendations of the conference committees of the States of Oregon and Washington appointed to agree on the legislation necessary for the regulation, preservation, and protection of fish, in the waters of the Columbia River, over which said States have concurrent jurisdiction, and other waters within either State which would be affected by said concurrent interest, the recommendation being as follows:

"'We further recommend that a resolution be passed by the Legislatures of Washington and Oregon whereby the ratification by Congress of the laws of the States of Oregon and Washington shall act as a treaty between said States, subject to modification only by joint agreement by said States'; and said recommendation having been approved by resolution adopted by adopting the report of the conference committee, then, and in that event, there shall exist between the States of Oregon and Washington a definite compact and agreement, the purport of which shall be substantially as follows:

"'All laws and regulations now existing, or which may be necessary for regulating, protecting, or preserving fish in the waters of the Columbia River, over which the States of Oregon and Washington have concurrent jurisdiction, or any other waters within either of said States, which would affect said concurrent jurisdiction, shall be made, changed, altered, and amended in whole or in part only with the mutual consent and approbation of both States:' Therefore be it

"Resolved (the house concurring), That we urge upon Congress of the United States of America to enact appropriate legislation ratifying and confirming the compact and giving its consent to the compact and agreement between the States of Washington and Oregon as is required by section 10 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States of America."

The memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon is as follows:

"To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

"Whereas the Legislatures of the States of Oregon and Washington did appoint committees from their respective bodies to confer each with the other and to recommend legislation necessary to be provided for the regulation, preservation, and protection of salmon and other food fishes in the waters of the Columbia River, over which the States of Washington and Oregon have concurrent jurisdiction, and over waters within the boundaries of said States which might be of concurrent interest; and

"Whereas said committees did meet in Portland, Oreg., on the 6th day of February, 1915, and did agree on the necessary measures and legislation to be enacted by the Legislatures of the States of Washington and Oregon, and in their reports to their respective bodies did recommend 'We further recommend that a resolution be passed by the Legislatures of Washington and Oregon whereby the ratification by Congress of the laws of the States of Oregon and Washington shall act as a treaty between said States, subject to modification by joint agreement by said States'; and

"Whereas said report was adopted by both the house of representatives and the senate by the passage of senate concurrent resolution No. 4; and

"Whereas the legislature did fulfill the recommendations by enactment of senate bill No. 265, which in section 20 reads as follows:

"'SEC. 20. Should Congress, by virtue of the authority invested in it under section 10, Article I, of the Constitution of the United States, providing for compacts and agreements between States, ratifying the recommendations of the conference committees of the States of Oregon and Washington, appointed to agree on the legislation necessary for the regulation, preservation, and protection of fish in the waters of the Columbia River, over which said States have concurrent jurisdiction, and other waters within either State, which would be affected by said concurrent interest, recommendation being as follows:

"'We further recommend that a resolution be passed by the Legislatures of Washington and Oregon whereby the ratification by Congress of the laws of the States of Oregon and Washington shall act as a treaty between said States, subject to modification only by joint agreement by said States'; and said recommendation having been approved by resolution adopted by adopting the report of the conference committee, then, and in that event, there shall exist between the States of Oregon and Washington a definite compact and agreement, the purport of which shall be substantially as follows:

"'All laws and regulations now existing or which may be necessary for regulating, protecting, or preserving fish in the waters of the Columbia River, over which the States of Oregon and Washington have concurrent jurisdiction, or any other waters within either of said States, which would affect said concurrent jurisdiction, shall be made, changed, altered, and amended in whole or in part only with the mutual consent and approbation of both States'": Therefore be it

"Resolved (the house concurring), That we urge upon Congress of the United States of America to enact appropriate legislation ratifying and confirming the compact and giving its consent to the compact and agreement between the States of Washington and Oregon as is required by section 10 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States of America.

"Filed in the office of the secretary of state February 20, 1915."

The authority of Congress in this connection is unquestioned. The first clause of section 10 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States provides that "no State shall enter into any treaty." In the third clause of the same section of Article I it is provided that "no State shall, without the consent of Congress, * * * enter into any agreement or compact with another State." These two clauses dealing with the powers of the State to enter into treaty or contract relations with other States or foreign nations are significant in that the framers of the Constitution sought to bar absolutely all treaties between individual States and foreign powers, a function reserved solely to the Federal Government, but did not take away the power of the States to make compacts having no political significance. To distinguish such latter arrangements from the treaties mentioned in the first clause of section 10, they were designated as compacts and agreements. The power of the States in connection with such compacts and agreements was limited by requiring that such compacts should not be entered into without the consent of Congress, this prohibition being undoubtedly intended to guard against abuses of the privilege thus retained to the States.

There are a number of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States defining the force and effect of compacts and agreements entered into between the States and upholding such compacts where they have been consented to by Congress, whether such consent was expressly directed by act of Congress or granted inferentially. (Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat, 1; Poole v. Fleeger, 11 Peters, 185; Virginia v. Tennessee, 148 U. S., 503; Wharton v. Wise, 153 U. S., 155; Stearns v. Minnesota, 179 U. S., 223.)

The reasons for the passage of the acts containing this compact and for the request that it be ratified by Congress may be briefly given as follows:

For about 300 miles the Columbia River separates the States of Washington and Oregon. The dividing line between the two States is described in the act of Congress approved February 14, 1859, entitled "An act for the admission of Oregon into the Union," and beginning at—

"a point due west and opposite the middle of the north ship channel of the Columbia River; thence easterly, to and up the middle channel of said river, and where it is divided by islands, up the middle of the widest channel thereof, to a point near Fort Walla Walla, where the forty-sixth parallel of north latitude crosses said river; thence east, on said parallel to the middle of the main channel of the Shoshone or Snake River." (11 Stat., 380.)

A previous act of Congress (10 Stat., 172), which was the act establishing the Territorial government of Washington, provided that the Territory of Oregon and the Territory of Washington should have concurrent jurisdiction over all offenses committed on the Columbia River.

The act admitting Oregon as a State provided that the State of Oregon should have concurrent jurisdiction in civil as well as criminal cases on the Columbia and all other rivers and waters bordering on the said State so far as the same shall form a boundary to said State, and any other State or States now or hereafter to be formed and bounded by the same, and that said rivers and waters should be common highways and forever free to the inhabitants of said States and to all other citizens of the United States.

Theoretically the questions arising over the boundary line between the two States should not be serious, but practically the matter is surrounded with much difficulty, especially since the unusual size of the stream and the changes made by lapse of time make the middle of the channel uncertain as to location. A few years ago the dispute as to the boundary line became so serious that the matter was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. (State of Washington v. State of Oregon, 211 U. S., 127.) This case, however, fixed the boundary line for only a few miles at the mouth of the river.

The fishing industry along the Columbia River is highly developed, the citizens of both States fishing in its waters under licenses issued by their respective States. In the enforcement of the fishing laws in effect in the two States serious difficulties have in the past arisen on account of the differences in these laws. The method of fishing the river with nets and other gear is such that many persons fishing therein carry on operations within the territorial limits of both States. Often such operations are carried on simultaneously in both States. Without identical laws or laws practically identical the laws of each State are rendered practically useless as regards citizens operating under licenses issued by the other State. (In re Matson, 69 Fed., 535; Ex parte Desjeiro, ex parte Furua, 152 Fed., 1004; Neilsen v. State of Oregon, 212 U. S., 315.)

An examination of the opinions in these cases will show the difficulty in enforcing any law of one State in the absence of a similar law in the other State.

In the Matson case cited above the defendant Matson was operating under a license issued by the State of Washington. He was arrested by officers of the State of Oregon for violation of the laws of Oregon relating to fishing on Sunday. The court held that where the act on account of which he was convicted was not contrary to the laws of the State which issued his license, he could not be convicted in the other State for violation of the laws of such other State, although the concurrent jurisdiction of the two States over the Columbia River is unquestioned.

We find many precedents for this kind of legislation, a list of which is set forth in the appendix hereto attached.

The committee, however, in reporting favorably upon this legislation in nowise desires to express its opinion upon the merits or wisdom of the bills enacted by the two States, but simply in response to the said memorials of both of the said States memorializing and asking the consent of Congress to said compact and agreement entered into between the said States, gives its opinion that Congress has the power and should give its consent to said compact and agreement, and accordingly recommends the passage of the bill.

[H. Rept. No. 360, 65th Cong., 2d sess.]

COLUMBIA RIVER AND ITS TRIBUTARIES.

Mr. HADLEY, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 2617):

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2617) to ratify the compact and agreement between the States of Oregon and Washington regarding concurrent jurisdiction over the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries in connection with regulating, protecting, and preserving fish, having considered the same, report it to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The advisability of this legislation was set forth in a communication from Mr. A. L. Thurman, solicitor for the Department of Commerce, in a report of this committee on a similar bill which passed the House of Representatives in the Sixty-fourth Congress, but failed to pass the Senate. A copy of the communication referred to is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR,
DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
Washington, February 7, 1916.

Hon. J. W. ALEXANDER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR JUDGE ALEXANDER: I am in receipt of your letter of the 5th instant, inclosing H. R. No. 6097, to ratify the compact and agreement between the States of Oregon and Washington regarding concurrent jurisdiction over the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries, in connection with regulating, protecting, and preserving fish, and asking me to please give the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries my opinion as to the merits of the bill and the wisdom of enacting it into law. This same matter was covered in S. 2529, introduced by Senator CHARLES F. JOHNSON, and sent to the department by the Committee on Fisheries of the Senate for an expression of opinion. The matter was referred by the department to the Bureau of Fisheries, and I am inclosing you a copy of letter to Senator JOHNSON prepared by the bureau and signed by Assistant Secretary Sweet, which seems to entirely cover the matter. The department is of the opinion that the bill should be enacted into law.

Your, very truly,

A. L. THURMAN, Solicitor.

(Copy.)

JANUARY 8, 1916.

Hon. CHARLES F. JOHNSON,
Chairman Committee on Fisheries,
United States Senate, Washington,

MY DEAR SENATOR: In reply to your letter of January 3, inclosing a copy of S. 2529, a bill ratifying the compact and agreement between the States of Oregon and Washington regarding concurrent jurisdiction over the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries in connection with regulating, protecting, and preserving fish, I beg to advise that this is regarded as a meritorious and desirable measure and its passage is recommended.

It is essential for the welfare and conservation of the fisheries of the Columbia River that the legislation affecting them be consistent and harmonious, and as the jurisdiction over that stream and certain of its tributaries is divided between the States party to this compact, it is highly important that the laws of the two should be in accord. The recent sessions of the Legislatures of Oregon and Washington took cognizance of this, and the fisheries regulations relating to these waters are now uniform in the two States. It is desirable that this condition should be perpetuated by ratification of the compact which, while not preventing modification of the present laws by mutual agreement of the two States, will make impossible their amendment by any ill-considered action of one State.

Very truly, yours,

E. F. SWEET,
Acting Secretary.

Memorials to Congress were passed by the Legislatures of the States of Washington and Oregon, respectively, at the sessions of 1915, urging upon Congress the enactment of appropriate legislation ratifying and confirming the compact above referred to and giving its consent to the compact and agreement between the States named, as required by section 10 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States.

The compact is embodied in the memorials and is set forth in the bill.

The memorial of the Legislature of the State of Washington is as follows:

"To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Washington:

"We, your memorialists, the senate and house of representatives of the State of Washington, in legislative session assembled, most respectfully represent, show, and pray as follows:

"Whereas the Legislatures of the States of Oregon and Washington did appoint committees from their respective bodies to confer each with the other and to recommend legislation necessary to be provided for the regulation, preservation, and protection of salmon and other food fishes in the waters of the Columbia River, over which the States of Washington and Oregon have concurrent jurisdiction, and over waters within the boundaries of said States which might be of concurrent interest; and

"Whereas said committees did meet in Portland, Oreg., on the 6th day of February, 1915, and did agree on the necessary measures and legislation to be enacted by the Legislatures of the States of Washington and Oregon, and in their reports to their respective bodies did recommend, 'We further recommend that a resolution be passed by the Legislatures of Washington and Oregon, whereby the ratification by Congress of the laws of the States of Oregon and Washington shall act as a treaty between said States, subject to modification by joint agreement by said States'; and

"Whereas said report was adopted by both the house of representatives and the senate by the passage of senate concurrent resolution No. 8; and

"Whereas the legislature did fulfill the recommendations by enactment of house bill No. 170, which in section 108 reads as follows:

"'SEC. 108. Should Congress, by virtue of the authority vested in it under section 10, Article I, of the Constitution of the United States, providing for compacts and agreements between States, ratify the recommendations of the conference committees of the States of Oregon and Washington appointed to agree on the legislation necessary for the regulation, preservation, and protection of fish in the waters of the Columbia River, over which said States have concurrent jurisdiction, and other waters, within either State which would be affected by said concurrent interest, the recommendation being as follows:

"'"We further recommend that a resolution be passed by the Legislatures of Washington and Oregon whereby the ratification by Congress of the laws of the States of Oregon and Washington shall act as a treaty between said States, subject to modification only by joint agreement by said States"; and said recommendation having been approved by resolution adopted by adopting the report of the conference committee, then, and in that event, there shall exist between the States of Oregon and Washington a definite compact and agreement, the purport of which shall be substantially as follows:

"'"All laws and regulations now existing, or which may be necessary for regulating, protecting, or preserving fish in the waters of the Columbia River, over which the States of Oregon and Washington have concurrent jurisdiction, or any other waters within either of said States, which would affect said concurrent jurisdiction, shall be made, changed, altered, and amended in whole or in part only with the mutual consent and approbation of both States:"' Therefore be it

"Resolved (the house concurring), That we urge upon Congress of the United States of America to enact appropriate legislation ratifying and confirming the compact and giving its consent to the compact and agreement between the States of Washington and Oregon as is required by secion 10 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States of America."

The memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon is as follows:

"To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

"Whereas the Legislatures of the States of Oregon and Washington did appoint committees from their respective bodies to confer each with the other and to recommend legislation necessary to be provided for the regulation, preservation, and protection of salmon and other food fishes in the waters of the Columbia River, over which the States of Washington and Oregon have concurrent jurisdiction, and over waters within the boundaries of said States which might be of concurrent interest; and

"Whereas said committees did meet in Portland, Oreg., on the 6th day of February, 1915, and did agree on the necessary measures and legislation to be enacted by the Legislatures of the States of Washington and Oregon, and in their reports to their respective bodies did recommend, 'We further recommend that a resolution be passed by the Legislatures of Washington and Oregon whereby the ratification by Congress of the laws of the States of Oregon and Washington shall act as a treaty between said States, subject to modification by joint agreement by said States'; and

"Whereas said report was adopted by both the house of representatives and the senate by the passage of senate concurrent resolution No. 4; and

"Whereas the legislature did fulfill the recommendations by enactment of senate bill No. 265, which in section 20 reads as follows:

"'SEC. 20. Should Congress, by virtue of the authority invested in it under section 10, Article I, of the Constitution of the United States, providing for compacts and agreements between States, ratifying the recommendations of the conference committees of the States of Oregon and Washington appointed to agree on the legislation necessary for the regulation, preservation, and protection of fish in the waters of the Columbia River, over which said States have concurrent jurisdiction, and other waters within either State which would be affected by said concurrent interest, recommendation being as follows:

"'We further recommend that a resolution be passed by the Legislatures of Washington and Oregon whereby the ratification by Congress of the laws of the States of Oregon and Washington shall act as a treaty between said States, subject to modification only by joint agreement by said States'; and said recommendations having been approved by resolution adopted by adopting the report of the conference committee, then, and in that event, there shall exist between the States of Oregon and Washington a definite compact and agreement the purport of which shall be substantially as follows:

"'"All laws and regulations now existing, or which may be necessary for regulating, protecting, or preserving fish in the waters of the Columbia River, over which the States of Oregon and Washington have concurrent jurisdiction, or any other waters within either of said States, which would affect said concurrent jurisdiction, shall be made, changed, altered, and amended in whole or in part only with the mutual consent and approbation of both States:"' Therefore be it

"Resolved (the house concurring), That we urge upon Congress of the United States of America to enact appropriate legislation ratifying and confirming the compact and giving its consent to the compact and agreement between the States of Washington and Oregon, as is required by section 10 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States of America.

"Filed in the office of the secretary of state February 20, 1915."

The Secretary of Commerce has recently advised the committee of the continuing necessity for this legislation, as will be seen by reference to his letter, a copy of which is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, January 16, 1918.

Hon. J. W. ALEXANDER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR JUDGE ALEXANDER: I am in receipt of yours of the 15th instant inclosing copy of H. R. 2617, a bill to ratify the compact and agreement between the States of Oregon and Washington regarding concurrent jurisdiction over the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries in connection with regulating, protecting, and preserving fish, and inquiring if occasion for enacting this bill into law still exists.

The occasion does still exist, and the bill should be enacted into law. You will probably recall that I referred to it in my letter to you of yesterday covering legislation affecting this department pending in your committee. The report of the committee, submitted by the House of Representatives (64th Cong., 1st sess., report No. 379), covers the attitude of the department in regard to this bill.

Very truly, yours,

WILLIAM C. REDFIELD,
Secretary.

That the States of Oregon and Washington are still desirous of having the proposed compact ratified is evidenced by the fact that a joint committee from the legislatures of these two States which met at Seattle Wash., on Saturday, February 3, 1917, to confer upon matters pertaining to their joint fishing interests on the Columbia River, embodied in its report the following recommendation, to wit:

"We renew the recommendations of the joint conference committee of 1915, that Congress shall ratify the laws of the States of Washington and Oregon relative to the fisheries on the Columbia River to the end that such ratification shall act as a treaty between said States which shall be subject to modification only by joint agreement of both States."

The fishing industry along the Columbia River is highly developed, the citizens of both States fishing in its waters under licenses issued by the respective States. In the enforcement of the fishing laws in the two States serious difficulties have in the past arisen on account of the differences in these laws The method of fishing with nets and other gear is such that many fishermen carry on operations within the territorial limits of both States. Often such operations are conducted simultaneously in both States. Without identical laws or laws practically identical the laws of each State are rendered practically useless as regards citizens operating under licenses issued by the other State. (In re Matson, 69 Fed. 535; ex parte Desjeiro, ex parte Furua, 152 Fed., 1004; Neilson v. State of Oregon, 212 U. S., 315.)

The necessity for Federal legislation, if the terms of the compact and agreement are to be given effect, is apparent on reference to section 10 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, which, among other things, provides that "No State shall, without the consent of Congress, * * * enter into any agreement or compact with another State."

There is ample precedent for such legislation. The Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly upheld such compacts and agreements between States which have been consented to by Congress. (Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat., 1; Poole v. Fleeger, 11 Pet., 185; Virginia v. Tennessee, 148 U. S., 503; Wharton v. Wise, 153 U. S., 155; Stearns v. Minnesota, 179 U. S., 223.)

The States of Oregon and Washington having entered into a compact and agreement providing for the regulation, preservation, and protection of salmon and other food fishes in the waters of the Columbia River over which they have concurrent jurisdiction, the enactment of the bill reported herewith is proposed to render such provisions effectual.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the bill (S. 1484) ratifying the compact and agreement between the States of Oregon and Washington regarding concurrent jurisdiction over the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries in connection with regulating, protecting, and preserving fish, now on the calendar, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the act (S. 389) to extend the time for cutting timber on the Coconino and Tusayan National Forest, Ariz.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 7795. An act to provide for the national security and defense and further to assure an adequate supply of food, by authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to contract with farmers in certain areas for the production of grain through advances, loans, and otherwise, and by providing for the voluntary mobilization of farm labor, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

TRANSPORTATION FOR SHIPYARDS AND PLANT EMPLOYEES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3388) to amend the emergency shipping funds provisions of the urgent deficiency appropriation act approved June 30, 1917, so as to empower the President and his designated agents to take over certain transportation systems for the transportation of shipyard and plant employees, and for other purposes. This is a bill reported by the Committee on Commerce, and the matter seems to be quite urgent now. It has to do with providing transportation facilities for employees in the shipyards. I think there is no real opposition to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in the Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 4, after the word "June," to strike out "thirtieth" and insert "fifteenth"; on page 2, line 1, after the word "operated," to strike out "by steam or electric power," and in the same line, after the word "all," to insert "cars"; in line 3, after the word "thereof," to strike out "to the end that the same be utilized" and insert the word "necessary," so as to make the section read:

That section 1 of the emergency shipping fund provisions of the urgent deficiency appropriation act of June 15, 1917, is hereby amended by adding a new provision reading as follows:

"(f) To take possession of, lease, or assume control of any street railroad, interurban railroad, or part thereof wherever operated, and all cars, appurtenances, and franchises or parts thereof commonly used in connection with the operation thereof necessary for the transfer and transportation of employees of shipyards or plants engaged or that may hereafter be engaged in the construction of ships or equipment therefor for the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, on page 2, line 8, to strike out "section 3" and insert "paragraph (b) of section 1"; in line 10, before the word "line," to strike out "fourth" and insert "third," and in the same line to strike out "section" and insert "paragraph"; in line 12, after the word "street," to strike out the word "car"; and in line 13, after the word "thereof," to insert "cars and other equipment necessary to operation," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That paragraph (b) of section 1 of said act is hereby amended by adding, after the word "material," in the third line of said paragraph, the following words: "or take possession, lease, or assume control of any street railroad, interurban railroad, or part thereof, cars and other equipment necessary to operation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add as an additional section, the following:

SEC. 3. That upon taking possession of such property, or leasing or assuming control thereof, just compensation shall be made therefor, to be determined by the President, and if the amount thereof so determined by the President is unsatisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same, such person shall be paid 75 per cent of the amount so determined by the President and shall be entitled to sue the United States of America to recover such further sums as added to 75 per cent will make up such amount as will be just compensation therefor, in the manner provided for by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code.

The President may exercise the power and authority hereby vested in him through the several departments of the Government, and through such agency or agencies as he shall determine from time to time.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, when this bill was called up some weeks ago I objected at that time to its consideration. I do not object now, because I am convinced that the Shipping Board must have some such authority as that proposed to be conferred by this measure. It seemed to me then, and it does now, that the results desired could be obtained through the Director General of Railroads. The Shipping Board, however, believe that more speedy action can be obtained by giving them the authority proposed under this bill.

The one danger, Mr. President, is that in case the Shipping Board are not exceedingly careful, they may have imposed upon them worthless railways at an exorbitant figure. I have had some doubt of the wisdom of the measure, but I do know that something must be done to relieve the situation in some of the out-of-the-way shipyards, which have been constructed during the past year or so. I have talked with the Shipping Board officials about the matter, and have expressed the hope to them that they will exercise the greatest possible care to avoid the danger of the Government being imposed upon in this matter. I shall not object to the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend the emergency shipping fund provisions of the urgent deficiency appropriation act approved June 15, 1917, so as to empower the President and his designated agents to take over certain transportation systems for the transportation of shipyard and plant employees, and for other purposes."

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to have inserted in the RECORD, in connection with the bill, a telegram from Admiral Bowles, who is in charge of the work in the agency yards at Hog Island, at Bristol, Pa., and at Newark, N. J., representing the Emergency Fleet Corporation. He explains in the telegram the importance of this measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida to have printed in the RECORD the telegram presented by him?

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Feburary 10, 1918.

Senator DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Chairman Senate Committee on Commerce,
Washington, D. C.:

I respectfully urge that you secure passage of Senate bill 3388, authorizing the President to take over transportation systems in order that we may have authority necessary to secure transportation of shipyard workers. We are endeavoring and have, in many cases, already negotiated satisfactory arrangements, but in other cases transportation companies are absolutely refusing to negotiate or to provide facilities. This is occurring in places where actual delay is occurring in the production of ships. I believe trolley companies are opposing passage of the bill, hoping to obtain some more comprehensive measure to cover their general difficulties of finances, but in the meantime delay is very detrimental to ship production and should not be permitted to continue.

BOWLES.

EDUCATION OF ADULT ILLITERATES.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4185. This bill was before the Senate a few days ago, and we were stopped in its consideration by the expiration of the morning hour at 2 o'clock. It is the bill (S. 4185) to require the Commissioner of Education to devise methods and promote plans for the elimination of adult illiteracy in the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia moves to proceed with the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator from Georgia for just a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Can the Senator tell us whether or not this bill is likely to provoke any discussion?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think we can dispose of it in a very few minutes. It is a short measure.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There are one or two bills on the calendar that the War Department is very insistent shall be passed. We should try to get those bills through, and they have not yet been acted upon either by the Senate or by the House of Representatives. If, however, the Senator from Georgia thinks the bill moved by him will not take long to consider, I shall not insist on proceeding with the bills to which I refer.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think the bill for which I ask consideration will take much time. This also is one of the bills which the War Department is very anxious to have put through. It is a bill to authorize an appropriation for the Bureau of Education to aid the War Department in its work with the illiterates in the cantonments.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia, to proceed with the consideration of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4185) to require the Commissioner of Education to devise methods and promote plans for the elimination of adult illiteracy in the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the only criticism which was made upon this bill when it was previously before the Senate was that the amount proposed to be appropriated was not sufficient to accomplish the work. I now desire to say to the Senate that in the cantonments the War Department controls funds to use for the employment of teachers to aid in the accomplishment of the desired result, but it is the wish of the War Department, as I am advised, that the Bureau of Education should supervise and give direction to its effort to remove illiteracy both in the cantonments and among the men of draft age, and also to stimulate instruction in English, so that all drafted men may at least be able to understand English sufficiently to comprehend orders.

I have been asked to suggest as an amendment that the appropriation for the first year be increased to $100,000, to continue available until expended. Therefore I move to amend, in line 9, page 2, by substituting "$100,000" for "$50,000"; and I also move to add, on page 2, line 10, after the date "1918," the words "to continue available until expended."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be regarded as agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, on page 2, line 10, after the word "and," where it occurs the second time, I move to insert the words "fifty thousand dollars," so that after the first year the appropriation will remain at $50,000, as contemplated in this bill as originally reported.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Georgia whether he expects that this bill will be a continuing appropriation?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is limited to a few years. The time is limited in the bill.

Mr. KING. Is it limited to the time of the war?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; under its language the appropriation is limited to $50,000 a year until 1928.

Mr. KING. But is it limited in its operation to those who are in the military and naval service of the Government?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No. It contemplates, first, the devotion of the fund to the drafted men. The emergency of the situation was brought to public attention by the discovery of the fact that so large a number of drafted men can not speak English and can not read and write it. The fund is continued for a few years for the purpose of generally stimulating the fight throughout all the States to eliminate the illiteracy of those of mature years.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, legislation having for its object the stimulation of education is desirable, but there is another angle to the question. In legislating here we must keep in view the distinction between the powers and duties and limitations of the Federal Government and the prerogatives and responsibilities of the States as sovereign governments. Because an act of Congress might bring beneficent results, it would not be justified if it offended against the rights of the States or was beyond the general purpose for which the Federal Government was organized. The Federal Government may have power to do many things which it ought not to do and the performance of which would unduly aggrandize its powers and tend to devitalize the States.

Appropriations of money to the States unquestionably would aid the States, but the appropriations might be wholly unauthorized and might establish precedents which would be highly dangerous to the Republic. The people, often without thought, request Federal aid for purely domestic and local concerns. The States are not beggars; they are not wards of the General Government, living off its bounties and gratuities. The States have the work of nations to perform and should perform their work with courage and independence.

The education of the people within the States is a duty resting on the States. They can not and they ought not to shirk it. It would be cowardly for them to abdicate the responsibility of caring for the educational and the moral needs of the people and devolving upon the National Government this local and important duty.

This bill points toward Federal control of education. It seeks justification because there are found to be illiterates within the States.

The theory seems to be that the States have failed to educate the people up to a standard to be desired; therefore the National Government should intervene. The bill, as I understand it, is different from what the Senator from Georgia declares it to be. It is not a measure to aid those now in the military or naval service of the United States. It carries an appropriation to secure information which any educator of standing already possesses or which can be obtained by a few hours' search in the Library in this city. It will increase some one's salary or multiply offices and give a number of estimable and amiable gentlemen a chance to work for a Government which is now staggering under a burden daily increased by the employment of additional servants.

We already know what the educational system of the States is. Statistics are voluminous and instructive. We are familiar with Europe's educational systems, and we are familiar with the methods or lack of methods employed to aid illiterates in making themselves more useful as members of society.

The words "to extend their knowledge of subjects pertaining to their welfare and to their duties as citizens and responsibilities as citizens and members of society" clearly indicate a purpose to authorize an inquiry into matters which pertain to the work and duty of the States.

Suppose a number of persons acting under this bill, if it shall become a law, shall write elaborate reports upon the duties of citizenship and how persons shall act to measure up to the "responsibilities as citizens and members of society," what will they say that has not been said by the greatest educators of this country?

Mr. President, this bill is a delusion and a snare. It will serve no useful purpose and is the entering wedge to a control by the parent Government of the educational systems of the States. It is a seductive measure. It calls for cooperation with the States. It calls for work already done, but which, if not done, should be performed by the States. Under the war spirit we would justify any legislation. Faddists and reformers are here in great number seeking all sorts of foolish and hysterical legislation under the pretext that the exigency of war demands it.

The statement of the Senator from Georgia, if I correctly interpreted his remarks, is an indictment of the educational systems of the States; it is a declaration that they have failed to discharge their duties in educating those within their borders. Ergo, Congress must step in and control education.

I might add in passing that I am at a loss to understand how any Senator indoctrinated in the faith of Jefferson and educated to the view that the Union is composed of "indestructible States" can support this measure.

It looks to me, Mr. President, as if this measure is another evidence of the hysteria that now manifests itself in various parts of the Union. If some supposed evil exists in the States, immediately there is a rush to Congress for the purpose of remedying the evil. The theory seems to be that the States are absolutely impotent to manage their own affairs and perform their sovereign duties, and that, if the States can only be touched with the magic power of the Federal Government, immediately all evils vanish, all mistakes are corrected, and virtue is created and progress ensues. My experience is that the Federal Government, no matter which party is in power, no matter what it undertakes, fails to perform the labor, if it pertains to local and domestic affairs, as efficiently as the States would perform it; and it is agreed by all that in the performance of business undertakings the National Government falls far short when measured by the standard applied to private enterprises. The States regard education as the most important work devolving upon them. They heavily tax the people for educational purposes. They can discharge this great responsibility far better than can the Federal Government.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to ask the Senator a question. Has he studied this bill to see that the Federal Government under this bill is not presumed to take any part in educating illiterates? It is simply a bill to stimulate the States to take action. For instance, take the State which I have the honor in part to represent. We would get under this bill as originally reported $180 a year, and as the bill now stands $360 a year, because, on the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], the amount of the appropriation has been increased from $50,000 to $100,000 for the present year. It therefore means only $360 for the State of Vermont, a sum so small that the Senator at once can see that nothing is contemplated in the way of actual education by the Federal Government. We simply, at the suggestion of the War Department and of the Bureau of Education, wish to try to bring to the States the necessity of doing this work.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think I understand the purpose of the bill, and, notwithstanding the plea that the Senator's question presents, I am not converted to the wisdom of the measure. In the first place, if it is merely for the purpose of stimulating the States to increased educational effort, it is not going to be effective, because the appropriation, as the Senator himself suggests, is not sufficiently large to be very much of an incentive or a stimulation to additional effort within the States.

Mr. PAGE. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, I will say that under the vocational educational bill passed two or three years ago we already have the machinery by which the Vocational Educational Board, without any great amount of labor, can bring to the attention of the States facts which will stimulate them to carry forward this work. We have 5,516,000 illiterates in the United States over the age of 10. We have, I believe, of illiterates above the age of 20, 4,600,000. I do not know the percentage of illiterates in the State of Utah, but I know that in one State the percentage is above 30 per cent; I think 35 per cent.

Mr. KING. I want to state to my friend that the State of Utah fortunately stands, I think, second or third in the list of the States of the Union when it comes to the matter of education.

Mr. PAGE. Well, the Senator certainly can not have any objection to the Federal Board of Vocational Education, with all its machinery ready to undertake this work, going to the States and explaining the great necessity for this work at this time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, that is exactly the argument that is made whenever the Federal Government intrudes itself into the activities, prerogatives, rights, and duties of the States——

Mr. PAGE. But is——

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me—and that is the very reason why the States have been debauched. Whenever you promise a State a Federal appropriation under which the State is to be relieved from the responsibility which rests upon it, opposition which ought to spring instinctively in the hearts of its Representatives is silenced. When a large Federal appropropriation is to be spent in their midst for rivers or harbors, or roads or bridges, or education, or any private concern, then most Representatives are willing to receive it, and many of the people find a multitude of reasons for its acceptance.

Mr. PAGE. But, Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, there is nothing of that kind in this bill; we do not propose to give the States a single dollar to be by them expended. We simply, through the Board of Vocational Education, propose to advise the States as to the best methods for taking up the work against illiteracy. Not one single dollar under the bill can be paid to the States, and I hardly see how they could be debauched under this bill.

Mr. KING. Oh, Mr. President, in using the word "debauched," I did not have particular reference to this bill; and yet one of the reasons urged by the distinguished Senator who is now interrogating me in favor of it, is that some of the States—and he mentioned the amount which his State would receive—would obtain some benefits as the result of the appropriation. It may possibly be within the purview of the Federal Government to adopt some system of preparing aliens who come to this land and seek citizenship for the duties of citizenship; but I deny that it is the duty or that it is within the constitutional power of the Federal Government to go into the States and control the educational systems therein. No State should be so abject, and so lost to its high mission and duty, as to ask the Federal Government for aid in the educational work which devolves upon it.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PAGE. I am not prepared to agree to the position taken by the Senator from Utah; but that is a matter which is immaterial, because it is not in any way suggested by this bill. Let me read the first three or four lines of the bill.

That the Commissioner of Education shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior—

Which means the Vocational Educational Board—investigate the methods that have been and are now used in any part of the United States and in foreign countries in teaching illiterate men and women to read and write and in inducing and assisting those of meager education to extend their knowledge of subjects pertaining to their individual welfare and to their duties and responsibilities as citizens and members of society—

And so forth.

Now, this subject has been brought up at this time by Secretary Lane with the advice and suggestion of the War Department, largely for the purpose of taking care of the illiterates now in the Army. The statistics show that there are to-day—I have forgotten the exact number—about 700,000 illiterates within the draft age.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I have no objection to an appropriation being expended by the War Department, or, if it is deemed best, by the Commissioner of Education, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in teaching those who are now in the service of the Government in the Army and in the Navy, and who, because of their unfamiliarity with the English language, may not be able to discharge the duties resting upon them as faithfully and as effectively as if they did understand our language.

Mr. PAGE. If the Senator will read the letter of Secretary Lane he will see that the purpose he had in mind at the time this bill was suggested was to look after the men who come back from the war with an arm gone, or a leg gone, or an eye gone, or with some other injury that prevents their entering into the work in which they were engaged when they went into the service. There seems to be to-day a demand upon us that is very pressing along these lines, and I think that was the idea of the Secretary in suggesting this bill, although it is made broad enough to stimulate a general discussion and investigation on the part of the States with reference to illiteracy. I think if the Senator will consider this bill carefully he will see that it is a very worthy measure and does not seek to put into the hands of the States the expenditure of any Federal money to be expended by the States, but is simply as the bill says—to investigate the best methods by which this can be done.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if this bill were drawn along the line of the theory just suggested by the Senator a wholly different question would be presented. As I understand him, he is pleading now for some legislation that will enable the Government to better care for those who may be disabled by reason of the war, to improve their education, to the end that they may not be charges upon the public, and that they may be more useful in society. Now, there may be, and doubtless is, a duty resting upon the Federal Government to care, so far as is just and proper, for those who may be wounded and injured in the war; and if a broad and comprehensive measure dealing with the question of educating the wounded were presented I feel sure it would receive sympathetic consideration. But this is not such a bill; it is a useless and unnecessary measure, simply providing an inquiry about a matter which is understood by all educated persons. As stated, we have statistics as to the illiteracy not only in the States but in other countries. This bill does not reach the point suggested by the distinguished Senator, and can not be justified.

Mr. PAGE. I think the Senator errs, in this particular: The bill does not seek to investigate the extent of illiteracy in foreign countries. It seeks to investigate the methods that are being used in foreign countries to meet exactly the condition to which the Senator has just referred.

Mr. KING. No; to meet the question of illiteracy, segregated or dissociated entirely from the question of war and the injuries which result to those who may be engaged in the war.

Mr. PAGE. If the Senator has taken the trouble to read the letter of Secretary Lane——

Mr. KING. I have read it carefully.

Mr. PAGE. He will find that the whole essence of that letter is to do exactly what the Senator suggests it is proper to do. I believe the bill ought to pass, because while it does not make an appropriation large enough to do the work, it sets the wheels in motion; it stimulates inquiry as to the best methods of teaching illiterate men, of whom we have perhaps 700,000 now within the draft age. I do not know the exact number. The letter of Secretary Lane, however, is very particular to say that the main purpose of this measure is to do something for those men who are now in the service.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regard this bill as a covert attack upon the educational systems of the States, and as an entering wedge to taking from the States the control of their educational system, or, at least, to devolve upon the Federal Government, in part, the obligation of educating the people within the States.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. I only want to suggest that this discussion brings vividly to my recollection a discussion along the same lines in the Senate when I had the honor to be a Member of it on a previous occasion, when, upon an appropriation bill, I offered an amendment to appropriate $50,000 for the purpose of investigating the causes leading to mine explosions. At that time the question was very acute, because there had been a number of very serious mine explosions in the West and in the Southwest, resulting in the loss of many lives and the injury of many persons. The argument was made against the proposed appropriation that it was invading a function of the States; that mines are permanently located things, wholly within States, and their operation an operation of a local nature; and that the Federal Government sustained no relation to the subject, and that it was an invasion of the powers of the States for us to undertake to appropriate money to make any such inquiry.

The matter was discussed at great length, some of the most distinguished Senators of that day taking part. I remember distinctly Senator Hale, of Maine, than whom no greater Senator ever sat in this Chamber, in my opinion; the late Senator Bacon, of Georgia; and quite a number of the other distinguished Senators of that time; and we finally succeeded in having the amendment adopted. I might say parenthetically that the activities thus initiated have now developed into the Bureau of Mines, an institution which is doing as great work for humanity in the United States as any bureau or department of the Government. We came to the conclusion at that time that we had a right to make such investigations. That, as I understand, is all that this bill proposes to do—to make investigations into methods; not to enter into States and install anything, except, perhaps, as the bill says in its latter portion, at the invitation or request of the States, whenever they extend such invitation.

We have been for years appropriating money, and vast sums of money, to inquire into the best methods of agriculture. We are appropriating vast sums of money for the benefit of the mariner and the farmer and the public at large for the purpose of foretelling weather conditions. We are appropriating vast sums of money to kill the boll weevil in the South and the gipsy moth in the Northeast. We are appropriating money constantly for kindred purposes, and we have gotten past the place where it can any longer be said that the aid of the Federal Government in making investigations and even in exterminating pests that assail the agriculture of the country or the cattle of the country or anything of that kind is beyond the Federal function. In my judgment, Mr. President, this is a meritorious measure in that it only proposes to inquire into educational conditions and to devise remedies; and it seems to me that the education of the illiterates of the United States is quite as much a matter for our concern as the appropriation of money for the various purposes I have indicated.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KING. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The bill proposes to go a little further, because it proposes to devise efficient economic methods for teaching adult illiterates—men and women, and so forth—and that information is to be furnished to and to be used by the States.

Mr. KNOX. That was exactly the purpose for which the appropriation of $50,000 for the investigation of the causes of mine explosions was proposed.

It went that far; and every Senator knows what a tremendous work has been done for the miners in the United States. I remember that the first bureau was established in the city of Pittsburgh. These investigations were made in an extraordinarily thorough manner by the Federal investigators, and the conclusions they reached were furnished to the mining bureaus of the various States. As I say, from one activity to another it has now developed into a Federal mining bureau which is doing a very important work. So, if the Senator from Utah will permit me just one more moment—I feel that I have trespassed too much upon his time——

Mr. KING. I am very glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. KNOX. While there is no man in the Senate who is more desirous than I to avoid infringing upon the just and legitimate powers and functions of the States, and no man in the Senate who has yielded to the Senator from Utah a higher meed of praise for the stand that he is constantly taking in defense of the rights of the States, yet I think in this particular we have established precedents so numerous that it would be hardly just, in view of the great purpose designed to be accomplished by this bill, to turn it down upon any such ground.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not know that anything that I said warranted the conclusion—and I think, perhaps, the Senator from Pennsylvania reached that conclusion—that I denied the power of the Federal Government to make this appropriation. There may be the power to do an act which is inexpedient and usurpative. Congress might have power to bridge every creek in my State, but it would be improper and wrong to do so. But what I am particularly declaiming against is that these constant appropriations made by the Federal Government for expenditure within the States are atrophying the States, robbing them of their virility and independence, and causing them more and more to appeal to the Federal Government to aid them in purely domestic affairs and the performance of functions pertaining solely to the States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia and Mr. FALL addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. KING. I yield first to the Senator from Georgia. I will yield to the Senator from New Mexico in a moment. But before doing so, let me add that the paternalism thus resulting will increase, and the activities of the General Government will be multiplied, until in the course of time we will have no States—only empty shells—and a huge, overshadowing Nation will control us.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the object of this bill is to furnish leadership and suggestion as a result of broader studies than would be likely to be made in a single State. Then, I wish to ask the Senator whether he does not think that the National Government more than the States is to blame if there is illiteracy on the part of foreign-speaking, non-English-speaking immigrants who are in the United States? If there is a blame, does it attach to the States? Furthermore, if there is still a large portion of the negro population that can not read, should all of that blame be charged to the States?

I only want to add that the statistics furnished us by the Secretary of the Interior lead to the conclusion that the illiterates sought to be reached especially by this bill are largely immigrants whose children can not speak English, foreigners, and negroes who have not yet advanced as we hope they will.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would not want to be placed in the attitude of judging where the blame should be placed, whether upon the Federal Government or upon the States, for the conditions to which the Senator refers; but I have no hesitancy in saying that I think the Federal Government has been derelict in its duty in admitting into this country so many people who were not qualified for citizenship, who did not appreciate the responsibilities that flow from accepting citizenship, and who had no conception of the ideals, hopes, aspirations, and faith of the true sons of America. We have not absorbed, indeed, not assimilated those welcomed to our shores.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand the Senator, he admits that the Federal Government has the constitutional right to make this appropriation. Am I correct about that?

Mr. KING. Speaking generally, I will say that Congress can make this appropriation.

Mr. McKELLAR. If I am correct about that, what higher or better purpose could be found than the purpose of educating the illiterates of our country, regardless of whose mistake it was?

Mr. KING. Oh, Mr. President, because a government has the power academically and theoretically to do a certain thing, that does not justify, in morals or in law, the performance of the act itself. Perhaps, as an academic proposition, the Government of the United States has the power to build the roads of Tennessee, but in my opinion it would be a wrong for the Federal Government to undertake the construction of the highways for the people of Tennessee. The Federal Government perhaps, as a bald question of the exercise of plenary power, might spend $100,000 for the education of the colored people within the State of Tennessee, but it would be an abuse of that power, it would be wholly unwarranted for the Federal Government to make the appropriation. The plea of the Senator would justify the Federal Government going into the States and doing police duty, running the courts, maintaining the hospitals and asylums, and performing all the obligations resting upon the States. Some States might be willing to so abase themselves as to cease to be independent and sovereign and live upon the charities of the Federal Government, but if that condition should long continue this Republic would cease to exist. I want to warn Senators against this practice of having Congress do for the States that which they should do for themselves.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, it would have been better, possibly, if I desired to make a speech not to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. KING. I am sure it will improve my remarks if the Senator proceeds now before I yield the floor.

Mr. FALL. The Senator is very flattering. I simply wanted to ask the Senator if he did not agree with my idea of the duty of the Government of the United States to educate some portions at least of the illiterate population. The suggestion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] was along the line of the question that I desired to propound.

The States have nothing to do with the matter of immigration or the matter of making citizens. That is the province of the National Government. No protest of the State of California can avail in the matter of any treaty concerning naturalization, for instance, nor immigration, for instance. The National Government makes immigration laws and admits illiterates. The National Government makes citizens of these people and forces them upon the States. It has no internment ground upon which these illiterate immigrants may be placed, unless you might say that they should go to the District of Columbia or the Territory of Alaska. As soon as they are admitted at Ellis Island or at San Francisco, if they come from the other direction, or anywhere else that they may land, they scatter throughout the States of the Union. The Federal Government provides how and when they shall become citizens, and has no educational qualifications at all in its law, except as recently adopted upon the immigration act. Now, is it not, in the Senator's judgment, as in mine, the duty of the United States to assist, at least, in the education of the illiterates whom it forces upon the people of the States?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I stated a moment ago that I felt that the Federal Government had been derelict in its duty in admitting to citizenship so many persons who failed to appreciate the responsibilities which citizenship involves; and I think there should be some change in our immigration laws that would restrict citizenship to narrower limits and to those only who love this country, its Constitution and its laws, its institutions, and its glorious history; those who desire liberty under law and who can comprehend in part, at least, the high mission and the ideals of this Republic.

Mr. FALL. But——

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, answering the inquiry which the Senator propounds, and which is a fair one, I think it within the power of the Federal Government to aid in preparing for citizenship those who come to this land and seek citizenship in this Republic.

I might not oppose a proper and comprehensive measure the object of which was to prepare for citizenship the class just referred to. I should not oppose a measure suggested by the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Vermont, that aided in the education of those who are wounded in this great conflict and who return from the war unprepared to make a livelihood.

Mr. FALL. Then I think from the Senator's remarks generally he does agree with me that the Government of the United States, having failed to perform its duty in the past with reference to the admission of illiterates and making citizens of them first, has the power to make an appropriation of this kind.

Mr. KING. Yes; I concede that.

Mr. FALL. Now, having the power and having failed in its duty to those citizens heretofore, those citizens having arrived in the States, they were forced to accept those illiterates, with which they had nothing to do and over whom they had no power at all. Having failed in its duty, I say that the natural conclusion the Senator must arrive at is that at which I have arrived in considering this bill. It is that the United States not only has the power but it is the duty of the United States to assist in providing for the education of these illiterates.

Now, as the letter of the Secretary of the Interior seems to be the principal ground for the inquiry commented upon by the Senator from Vermont, we may realize the necessity of commencing the good work which the United States is undertaking now to perform in the cantonments among the drafted men. I think that is perfectly proper, but I would object to a provision leaving this investigation and this work to be performed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior rather than the Secretary of War. In so far as those men are concerned, there will be an inevitable conflict between the two Cabinet officers. Here are men enlisted for the military service in the cantonments. Here are various other men who are registered, and I can see very well where there could be a conflict in the matter of attempted education of those who are registered but not drafted and those who are drafted or enlisted. The Commissioner of Education should cooperate with the Secretary of War and not with the Secretary of the Interior in reference to the matter.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. FALL. I am trespassing on the time of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think I can relieve the Senator's mind upon that subject. The Commissioner of Education, of course, conducts the bureau in the Interior Department. The Interior Department for many years was the branch of the Government to which bureaus were assigned that did not fit anywhere else. It was an assembly of many disconnected bureaus. The Bureau of Education is a bureau of the Interior Department.

Mr. FALL. I understand.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Secretary of the Interior has practically nothing to do with it.

Mr. FALL. I understand.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. At the present time, so far as the cantonment work is concerned, the commissioner will be in cooperation with the Secretary of War; and I know that there will be no friction at all between the War Department and the Bureau of Education, but, on the contrary, I am advised the Secretary of War, conferring with the Secretary of the Interior, desires this help from the Bureau of Education, and it will entirely cooperate inside the cantonments under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. FALL. That may be very possible, but the objection, it strikes me, is much better founded than the Senator would think. We have departments of the Government overlapping one another. No one knows where the authority of one begins and the authority of the other ends, each assuming authority. Under the terms of the bill itself that cooperation which is so much to be desired under the direction of the Secretary of War in reference to drafted men is not provided for.

The Commissioner of Education shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, investigate—

And so forth.

Under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. That is all right as a general proposition. There is no objection to it in the world because his bureau is a part of the Interior Department. It is a portion of the working force of the Interior Department. The men who are drafted and under military law are under the direction of the military authorities, and there should be no possible interference by anyone under an act of Congress in the education of those men, except that such efforts should be directed by the Secretary of War and the military authorities.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Commissioner of Education could not go into the cantonments except in cooperation with the Secretary of War. This act of Congress does not authorize him to go into the cantonments.

Mr. FALL. It authorizes him to educate these citizens or to investigate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. He could not go into the cantonments.

Mr. FALL. The very fact that the Senator and myself are arguing the proposition, one taking one point of view and the other the other, is an argument against the provision.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What should we do to allow the two Secretaries to cooperate?

Mr. FALL. I would offer a very short amendment to the work to be done under the provisions of the bill with the drafted man by inserting "and enlisted men in the service of the United States."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will draw an amendment providing that the work done in the cantonments must be done under the direction and after the approval is had of the Secretary of War, I accept it at once.

Mr. FALL. I am in favor of the general proposition. I differ from the Senator from Utah upon the broad statement of the proposition; that is, I am in favor of this authority being given to the Commissioner of Education, and I do not care with whom he confers as a general proposition, but I am pointing out the specific condition here, which, to my mind, presents an almost insuperable obstacle. If you are going to undertake to carry out the proposition that the Senator from Vermont is speaking of and upon which he bases, apparently, his support of this measure—that is, the purpose to educate or to assist in educating illiterates now in the Army. Then the Commissioner of Education in this matter may be under the direction of the military authority and not under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. But there is not one word in the bill upon the general proposition that it is the duty of the United States, after admitting these illiterates and forcing them upon the States, to cooperate in their education.

I hope the Senator from Utah will pardon me for taking up his time.

Mr. KING. I am very glad to have received the suggestions of the Senator from New Mexico. The criticism he urges against this bill shows that it is not based upon the proper theory and can not be defended upon the ground suggested by the Senator from Vermont or the Senator from Georgia. It is not a bill providing for the care of illiterates by the Government of the United States whom it has permitted to come into the country and whom it has placed within the States; it is not a bill for the purpose of educating the illiterates and infirm who are in the Army or Navy. It is not a bill to make better soldiers and sailors and to enable them to better discharge the duties resting upon them in rendering military service to the Government. This bill will be construed by the States as a purpose upon the part of the Federal Government to enter their borders and to aid in the general system of education, and will be made the basis for petitions to Congress or demands upon the Federal Government to aid in State education.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I should like to say that the department in drawing this bill sought to meet the objection of just such men as the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I am flattered to think that the department should have such men as myself in mind.

Mr. PAGE (reading)—

Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used to pay teachers or school officers in any State or Territory or in the District of Columbia for teaching or for conducting or supervising any school or schools: Provided further, That the Commissioner of Education shall not undertake to promote the teaching of adult illiterates and men and women of meager education in any State or Territory of the United States or in the District of Columbia by cooperation or otherwise without the written invitation or consent of the board of education or the chief school officer of such State, Territory, or District of Columbia.

They tried to put up the bar against any possible use of this money to educate men in the States. But in passing I want to say we expect that very soon there may come back from Europe men who by reason of the war have been placed where they can not go on with their usual avocation, and we want to stimulate and prepare the States to take care of those men when they come back and fit them so that they will be self-supporting and self-respecting citizens.

Mr. KING. The more the bill is read and the more it is explained—and it is well and ably explained by the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Georgia—the greater the objections appear. If it is the purpose of this scheme to adopt a broad and comprehensive system for educating and caring for those who may receive wounds in the war, to aid them better after their return to make a livelihood, then it utterly fails. It is not broad; it is not comprehensive; it is narrow and dogmatic and will prove wholly ineffectual. If it is for the purpose of discharging a duty heretofore not discharged by the Federal Government, according to the contention of some, namely, attempting to educate those who sought citizenship before thrusting upon the States men who were wholly incompetent to discharge the duties of citizenship, then it utterly fails to accomplish that purpose.

I think the Senators having this bill in charge in the committee were actuated by the very best motives and had in mind the curing of an evil, but I do not think the bill is broad enough to accomplish either of the purposes suggested. It will prove misleading and deceptive and be regarded by the States as an effort on the part of the Federal Government to go into the States and aid in the control of State education and will be regarded as a declaration by the Federal Government that hereafter it purposes going into the States and aiding them in the discharge of duties which clearly rest upon the State.

The criticism offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] is certainly well founded. It leads to conflict between the Interior Department and the War Department. It occurs to me that it would be the part of wisdom to recommit the bill, in order that a broad and comprehensive measure might be reported that will meet the evils and correct the abuses to which reference has been made.

This is simply a waste of $50,000 or $100,000. It has been promoted largely, doubtless, by some bureau of the Government that wants to increase its activities and augment its powers. We have bureaus of this character almost daily knocking at our doors. Some agency is created, and it wants to expand and become a bureau, and then when it becomes a bureau it wants additional power and will knock at the doors of Congress and demand that it shall be made a department.

Of course, we need departments and we need bureaus, but this burning desire on the part of agents and officials to expand and increase their power and the willingness with which Congress yields to their demand for appropriations and extension of power leads me upon this occasion to call attention to this character of legislation and to ask this committee, if they desire wholesome and proper legislation, to reconstruct this bill along safe and sane and rational lines.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to read the first few lines of the bill and then ask the Senator a question.

That the Commissioner of Education shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, investigate the methods that have been and are now used in any part of the United States and in foreign countries in teaching illiterate men and women to read and write.

How much of this appropriation does the Senator think it will take to accomplish that investigation?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the reports that we have now from the Census Department reveal the conditions in the United States, and the report that we can get here in the library will furnish the rest of the information suggested in the lines just read by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I quite agree with the Senator that there is never a bureau that does not want to expand itself into something bigger than a bureau. If the Commissioner of Education undertakes to carry out the directions that I have read in the bill and appoint agents to traverse the United States and very likely to go abroad, what will become of the $100,000?

Mr. KING. It will be wasted, of course——

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course.

Mr. KING. In traveling expenses, in office expenses, and frittered away without any results being accomplished. This is a waste, I repeat, and if the subject is worthy of attention it should be treated in a scientific and a rational way.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. If the Senator will allow me a sentence, the difficulty is that too often when some evil, fancied or real, exists some one—and to use a vulgarism, "the woods are full" of faddists and reformers—rushes to Congress and asks for an appropriation, and we make the appropriation without proper investigation and without the adoption of a scientific method of treating the subject. The appropriation is lost, a deficiency is created, further appropriations are sought, and in the end the enterprise is abandoned or we have to supplement the former appropriation by additional ones and increase the agencies and instrumentalities to tremendous proportions. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to say to the Senator that I quite agree with him in the suggestion he made a little while ago, that if this was a plan to educate to some extent the men who come back from the battle front wounded, and from the hospitals, if that could not be accomplished through existing instrumentalities such as the Young Men's Christian Association and the Red Cross, and it was necessary to employ teachers, I would be very glad to vote for an appropriation of that kind.

Mr. KING. I should be very happy to vote for it also.

Mr. GALLINGER. But it does seem to me to expend $100,000—and that will be only a beginning—in ascertaining to what extent illiteracy prevails, which has already been ascertained, I apprehend to some extent at least, and then to employ teachers to educate not only the soldiers but illiterates of the country, will be an absolute waste of money.

I suggested the other day that my predecessor, Senator Blair, of New Hampshire, advocated with great zeal and ability an educational bill which was to take care of the illiterates largely in one section of the country; that he proposed over six or seven million dollars to start with, and I think it was an increasing appropriation year by year until a very much larger amount was expended.

Mr. KING. I think the aggregate, as I recall the bill from reading it many years ago, was about $27,000,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. As much as that, certainly. There was, I think, a good deal of sense in that, because it would have accomplished something, but to give a driblet simply because the Commissioner of Education wants to add to his activities is, to my mind, a waste of money.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just one word in reply to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], who, I regret, has left the Chamber. I want to say that you can easily differentiate the illustration to which he referred from the instant case. The Federal Government owns millions and hundreds of millions of acres of public domain, on which are situated mines and within which are immense and rich mineral deposits. It would be a proper function of the Government, although it might be rather paternalistic, for it to make investigations of the mining properties and of the mining deposits within its own domain and to investigate those that were operating some of the properties that were owned by the Government, as it had a proprietary interest in the public domain, and, having that proprietary interest, it had the right to legislate as a proprietor with respect to its own domain; but education is a duty resting upon the State; it is one of the police powers of the State to properly care for the education of those within its borders, as it is a part of the police powers of the State to take care of the local courts and to see that justice is administered and the rights of property and of life are safe and secure.

Mr. President, when I rose I had no intention of occupying the floor more than a moment. In conclusion, I want to say it is a matter of regret for me to have to differ from the distinguished Senator from Georgia, who is usually—indeed, I might say always except upon this occasion—a safe leader and a wise and valuable counselor. I appeal to the Senator to let this bill go back to committee to reconstruct it along broad and comprehensive and rational lines, having in mind the stream of men who probably will come from across the sea wounded, bruised, and maimed, to the end that they may be better cared for in the few years or the many years, God willing, that shall yet be in store for them; and also keeping in view the question of the duty of the Government with respect to those who seek citizenship in this Republic. If the Senator from Georgia will draw a bill of that character, I have no doubt it will receive practically the unanimous support of the members of this body.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, this is another of those cases where "even-handed justice" commends the "poison'l chalice to our own lips." For years and years a lot of us have stood in the two Houses of Congress begging the Republican Congress to consider the fact that we had ignorance enough upon our own shores without importing more of it, but, in spite of all that we could do and say, the importation has kept up year after year, until now an "American" may mean almost anything. Without homogeneity of language there can be no homogeneity of traditions, of ideals, or of purposes; there can be no harmony of action; there can be no concerted national movement of any description. Men may say what they please—the old rationalists and the other people debated about it for centuries—but men think in words; men think in language. The man who has not words and language in which to think can not think much. He may think about what he is going to eat and about what he is going to wear, as a little baby thinks about where it is going to get its milk, and feels anxiously for it; but he is not much beyond that. When men have different languages they can not cooperate with one another unless there take the place of language centuries-old traditional history and myths and universal custom and century-old concreted, intense nationality against despotism, as these things did take the place of language in Switzerland, let us say, and in Belgium so that the Germans even now can not separate the Flemings from the Walloons.

Mr. President, I think that the main thing to be done in teaching adults in the United States is not so much to remove their illiteracy as it is to teach them English and something about English institutions. I could go down into the mountains of eastern Kentucky and east Tennessee and western Virginia, where the Republican Party, I believe, claims that the most illiterate vote of the South is cast, and, by the way, cast for the Republican ticket, and I could find about 20 men out of a possible hundred who could not read a word, and who yet were wise men upon election day, men who have some political information. It was stated before the war that in one of the States of this Union the best schooled and best educated people politically in the Union lived, and yet a people who constituted the least literate State in the Union. They were politically and democratically schooled because of their habits of life. They had their weekly county court days; they had their musters every Saturday, they had their joint debates; every question of constitutional and civil rights was discussed before them, and, of course, in their own language; and they became a highly educated people politically.

Of the population of ancient Athens the same thing may be said. There was not a very large percentage of people among the "fierce democracie of Athens" that could read or write, but it was the best educated population that the world has ever seen—politically, dramatically, artistically, æsthetically—simply because of the habit of the people living together constantly, hearing discussions in their own tongue, which happened to be, with the exception of the English, the broadest and most voluminous and most comprehensive and world-comprehending tongue that the world thus far has ever known.

Mr. President, with these ideas in my mind, I want to offer a couple of amendments to the pending bill—one to the title. After the words "United States," at the end of the title, I desire to add "and for aiding the States in teaching English to aliens and naturalized citizens."

Mr. GALLINGER. Should not the Senator say "to illiterate aliens and naturalized citizens"?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; because there may be a man who speaks Bohemian and writes it, but yet who does not know a word of English. So far as we are concerned, he is just as absolutely ignorant of our institutions and patriotism as if he did not know anything at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is true.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There are a whole lot of people who came over here from Germany, who have never yet learned any language but German, and who to-day remain Germans because of that fact.

By the way, I will add, if the Senator will pardon me the addition, that I happen to have a boy down in the Army who was thrown accidentally into the command of a lot of Pennsylvania miners—Bohemians, Slovaks, Slovenians, Polaks, Italians—some of whom he found could not read and write, and a great many of whom he found could read and write, but could not even speak English and could not obey the words of command without extra drill. One of the first things that the boy's division commander ordered him and some others to do, was to try to teach those men enough English at any rate to get their meals and to obey military orders.

Now, to go on, I also propose, on page 2, line 1, after the words "United States," to insert "to aid the States in teaching English to aliens and naturalized citizens." Of course, the fellow who understands English will not be taught, and the man who does not understand English will be taught.

One more word, Mr. President, and I shall take my seat, with an apology for taking up a lot of the time of the Senate, not only to-day but during last week, a part of which time I have since concluded was uselessly employed. I hope that it is not in this instance.

Our law, our Magna Charta, our habeas corpus, our parliamentary freedom, our Bill of Rights, our Declaration of Independence, our Constitution, all of the muniments of our civil, political, and individual liberty were written in the English language. It is not an accident that the only language which has been able to perpetuate liberty allied with law and with order has been the English language, because the history of the language and the history of the people who spoke it and speak it have been identical upon those lines. That is not all. When we come to consider this great language that we speak, with the possible exception of Homer and of Dante, one a Greek and the other an Italian, there is nobody who will stand in the same class with Shakespeare or Milton; when we come to consider the sweet singers in the language, there is nobody who stands with Tennyson, with Moore, and with Burns known to the language of any people in this world; and when we come to consider the science of the world, beginning with Sir Francis Bacon and running down through Sir Isaac Newton and Huxley and Darwin and Agaziz to the last of them all, to the men who are now taking command of the scientific information of the world and showing English and American and Canadian and Australian ability in that line, and running through the great metaphysicians, Herbert Spencer, Sir William Hamilton, and Stewart, and all the balance of them down to now; the great inventors who invented the steam engine, the spinning jenny, the railroad, the telegraph, and nearly everything else worth having, including the electric light, it is this race that has produced them.

Now, how can people who come over here and do not understand the language comprehend the traditions, the spirit, the idealism, and the aspirations and the science and the poetry and the history of the people who speak English and who have derived with their mother's milk and with their language a love for order conjoined with liberty—neither autocracy upon the one side conjoined with despotism, furthering the interests of one rather than the many, bolshevikism, on the other hand, conjoined with mobocracy, establishing the despotism of the many, is the thing the world seeks, but the good old safely guarded English-speaking, democratic liberty, which France, thank God, seems to have learned after having gone through much travail and labor? How can they do it? What is there back of them? What is there in their literature; what is there in their science; what is there in their daily walk and conversation to teach it to them?

I have frequently said that the most valuable information that I have ever secured in my life was from men who had no particular standing in the world, who read about three newspapers, including magazines as newspapers—one monthly, one weekly, and one daily—kept up with what was going on in the world, and then thumbed the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I am aware of the fact that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is not considered a very highly respectable newspaper, but for the man who reads it—and I confess I have not the patience to do it—but for the man who has the time and has the patience to do it, as I had for the first three or four or five years after I came into public life, it is the most perfect newspaper of political thought that this world ever furnished or ever will furnish, except that it may improve upon itself. So that I have met men down in Mississippi, one or two or three mule farmers, that would all at once open up a vista and say: "Well, John, how did you happen to vote this way upon that bill?" I would say, "My dear fellow, I do not remember the bill, and I do not remember how I voted on it"; but, of course, he knew all about it; he had nothing to do but to read the RECORD and his paper. The man who said "Give my enemies many books" was about right, and Hobbes, who said, "Fear the man who reads one book," was also partially, though not altogether, right. There is a broader scope for human thought than that, thank God.

Mr. President, I offer these two amendments, and I ask the attention of the Senator from Georgia in charge of the bill to them. If in wording them rather hurriedly I have not worded them with sufficient descriptive force, the Senator from Georgia can amend them. The amendments read in this way—I should like the Senator to note them—I propose to amend the title by inserting the words "and for aiding the States in teaching English to aliens and naturalized citizens"; and, then, in line 13, on page 1, to add the words: "to aid the States in teaching English to aliens and naturalized citizens."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and I have largely had the responsibility in the Committee on Education upon this bill. I personally do not object to the amendments proposed by the Senator from Mississippi if the Senator from Vermont does not. So far as I am concerned, speaking for myself, I am willing to accept them, because I think that there is no more essential service in education to be rendered the country by this bill than to see to it that every person in the United States speaks English.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of New Mexico in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia understand that his amendments have been agreed to?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The formal amendments which I offered were agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reporters do not have it so recorded and the Chair is informed that they were not even stated at the desk.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, yes; I think they were. Mr. President, I only offered one amendment, which was to increase the appropriation of $50,000 to $100,000, and make it available until expended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The amendment is in three parts and is as follows: On page 2, line 9, to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$100,000"; in line 10, after "1918," insert the words "to continue available until expended"; and in line 10, after the word "and," to insert "$50,000," so that if amended the paragraph will read:

That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, to continue available until expended, and $50,000 for each succeeding fiscal year until June 30, 1928.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Chair announced that the amendment had been adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia will be considered as one amendment, and, without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I did not understand what the view of the Senator from Vermont was.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, it seems to me that if we enter into an arrangement whereby we are to aid States in any form of public education, as suggested by the Senator from Mississippi, instead of there being $50,000 appropriated, we would have to make it $500,000 or $5,000,000. I do not think the appropriation carried by this bill is at all commensurate with any plan that seeks to aid the States in the matter of education.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Vermont that my view of the amendment, in view of the balance of the bill, is that it should be construed to mean that the aid should be suggestive, just as the whole scheme of the bill is suggestive; that it only emphasizes the importance of teaching English and does not enlarge the responsibility, but directs the force toward the effort to teach English.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to illustrate by just one point. The Senator will remember that the bill for the promotion of vocational education provides for night schools for those boys or men who are engaged in manufacturing; but it limits the night schools to boys who are actually engaged in work, and anyone outside can not avail himself of the benefits of these night schools. In view of the boys that are coming back from Europe armless or legless, it seems to me that the board of vocational education would suggest to the States that they change that so that there might be enrolled in these night schools these men who need some special education to enable them to become self-supporting.

If nothing but that should result from this bill, it would be worth one hundred times more than we appropriate. If the Senator from Georgia is correct and he does not feel that by adopting the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi we shall enter upon a scheme of education, I have no objection to the amendment; but it seems to me that we would do that if we should adopt the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a question?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that when these boys come home from the war and return to their respective homes the States are going to ignore them and their claims for education?

Mr. PAGE. I simply know that the law as it exists to-day upon our statute books, unless it should be violated, would prevent the acceptance of these men in these night schools. If this bill is passed the Board of Vocational Education will suggest the amendment of the law so that without violation of law these men may be taken in; and to my mind that is one of the great purposes of this bill. It is to take care of the men who come back and who need to have an added amount of education in order that they may become self-sustaining.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I suggest to him that this bill does not make any provision of that character. It does not carry an appropriation of that character. It is not sufficiently broad to warrant expenditures of that character.

Then I recur to the question I propounded to the Senator a moment ago; and I think that is the fatal mistake that is made by the Senator and those entertaining his view. They assume that the States will fail to appreciate the legitimate demands made upon them by those who return from the war. The States are going to be interested in the proper care of those who have been wounded and maimed. They will provide industrial and other schools to take care of those who may settle in their midst and who may need attention. The theory seems to be that the States are absolutely atrophied; that they are going to refuse to discharge their duties and their responsibilities; that they are going to rest upon the Federal Government the care of all those who may be in their midst; that the Federal Government owes to the people the duty to care for them and to educate them and to support them; that the States are mere supernumeraries in this great dual system of Government in which we live.

It is against that spirit that I am complaining, because I think it is going to be destructive of our form of government, and that the States will wind up with being beggars and suppliants at the feet of Congress, and refuse to discharge the duties resting upon them, because Congress has been inviting them to come and partake of its bounty, and to devolve upon the Federal Government responsibilities which, under the Constitution, rest upon the States themselves.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont pardon me a word?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly. I yield the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Utah is not quite correct in saying that the States will take care of these soldiers. I am greatly interested in extending aid to the soldiers who come home wounded from the battle fields of France; but they will not all go to their States. The Government has turned over this great Walter Reed Hospital in the city of Washington, and 27 wounded soldiers appeared there a day or two ago, and there probably will be more than a thousand wounded soldiers there in the near future. Those men could not be taken care of by the States, so that it is quite right that the Government should at least extend its benefactions to those men.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Heretofore I made the observation—perhaps before the Senator came into the Chamber—that I was in favor of some broad and comprehensive scheme by which the Federal Government would make provision, at least, independently or with the aid of the States, to care for the education of those who come from the battle field wounded and maimed, and who are unable to take care of themselves in life; and by anything I said just now I did not mean to convey the idea that I thought the whole duty and responsibility should be devolved upon the States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Several bills have already been prepared on that subject, looking toward the National Government following in the lines that all the warring nations have pursued, of providing for the reeducation vocationally of wounded soldiers. Those bills are now being considered by experts on the subject, and I hope to have as nearly as possible a perfected bill from the experts to submit to the Senate within the present week.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does not the Senator from Georgia think that this bill might as well be held until that scheme is worked out?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think so. I do not think it has anything to do with that bill. What I am anxious to see, what the Secretary of War desires, what the Secretary of the Interior desires, is the leadership of the Bureau of Education in directing the forces—not furnishing the forces, but directing the forces—in the cantonments, in a way superintending the forces in the cantonments, who are using funds and are now laboring to teach the soldier in the cantonments to read and write, and to teach those who do not even understand English, how to speak and read it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Why does not the Senator say "cantonments" in this bill, then?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It does not stop there. It does not pretend to go there alone.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not get there, according to the terms of this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have a short amendment that puts it more distinctly there. I did not draw the bill. This is a bill drawn by a department.

Mr. GALLINGER. As usual, of course.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I introduced it; but, as usual, I am glad to have it amended on the floor of the Senate. As usual, I believe that a department bill is all right for us to start with, but that after we get it we ought to study it and perfect it and give it the benefit of our broader experience.

Mr. GALLINGER. I recall more than one effort that has been made by the Bureau of Education to extend the activities of that bureau in directions to which Congress has not agreed; and I think this is an instance of that kind.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There are two amendments that I was going to suggest. The first is on the line of thought thrown out by the Senator from New Hampshire. I was going to suggest that we strike out, beginning with the words "investigate the methods," down to the word "shall," in line 11.

Mr. GALLINGER. I had my bill marked exactly in that way and was going to move that amendment, and I hope the Senator will offer it himself.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will move the amendmend, I am ready to accept it. Then I want to suggest an additional amendment at the close of paragraph 1, providing that any action taken by the Commissioner of Education to remove illiteracy among the enlisted men of the Army or Navy shall be undertaken only by the approval or direction of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, respectively. That, I think, helps function his work in that line.

I think those two amendments, the one gathered from the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire and the other gathered from the suggestion of the Senator from New Mexico, improve the bill very substantially.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator does not himself offer the amendment on page 1, I will take the liberty of offering it now.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, so far as I can speak for the committee, I accept it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to strike out, commencing after the word "Interior," in line 4, down to the word "devise," in line 11.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has not been disposed of.

Mr. GALLINGER. I supposed it had been. Let it be acted upon first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 1, after the words "United States" and the comma, it is proposed to insert "to aid the States in teaching English to aliens and naturalized citizens, to," so that if amended it will read:

To aid the States in teaching English to aliens and naturalized citizens, to promote plans for the elimination of illiteracy—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now I ask that the amendment I offered be stated from the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 4, after the word "Interior," it is proposed to strike out, commencing with the words "investigate the methods that have been," and so forth, down to and including the words "he shall," in line 11, so that if amended it will read:

That the Commissioner of Education shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, devise efficient and economic methods—

And so forth.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I will ask the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Georgia to a further amendment, which I think may be considered properly as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire. After the word "shall," in line 11, I move to strike out the word "devise" and insert the following:

Cooperate with the educational authorities of the several States in devising.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the committee—I think wisely—has almost entirely excluded the cooperation of the States. For instance, the last proviso is:

Provided further, That the Commissioner of Education shall not undertake to promote the teaching of adult illiterates and men and women of meagre education in any State or Territory of the United States or in the District of Columbia, by cooperation or otherwise, without the written invitation—

Of the State authorities.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I read the bill, and I have noted that particular language. It refers to the promotion of teaching, and provides that it may not be promoted by Federal authority unless by consent of the State authorities. But, if the Senator will excuse me, the Federal authorities may devise plans and seek to impose those plans without first having consulted the State authorities in regard to what plans may be most adaptable to conditions in a particular State, and hence I thought that all plans and methods for the teaching of adult illiterates should be devised by cooperation between the Federal authorities and the State authorities.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator's proposed amendment comes after the amendment I have offered, after a word that will remain in the bill. I ask that the amendment I propose be acted upon, and then the Senator can offer his.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. Now, Mr. President, I move to strike out the word "devise," in line 11, on the first page, and insert "cooperate with the educational authorities of the several States in devising."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think we will object to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, for the life of me I can not see what real benefit this measure is going to be. Our educational systems are conducted under the supervision of the respective States. As I understand it, the only place in all of the United States or any of its outlying colonies or provinces where the Commissioner of Education has any authority is in Alaska. This money, $100,000, is asked for for purposes of investigation——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; we have stricken out that provision.

Mr. CALDER. Well, even if it is stricken out, it provides for the spending of $100,000 of the people's money, and little can be done in the way of actual education with that sum.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CALDER. Yes.

Mr. KING. The Senator will keep in mind the fact that the Senator having this bill in charge has stated that his committee already is considering two or three measures looking to the education of those who come back from the battle fields and who may need education and need vocational training, and also to prepare the aliens who come into our midst for citizenship and the duties and the responsibilities of citizenship.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I have that in mind, and intended to refer to it.

Mr. KING. The Senator will pardon me for mentioning it.

Mr. CALDER. I know there is grave need of something being done to give to many of our enlisted and drafted men the rudiments of an education. I know an officer who has had to do with the organization of a regiment in the South—a drafted regiment. He tells me that at least 10 per cent of the men drafted in this particular command were not able to read or write, and many of them had to place their marks opposite the pay roll when they were receiving their monthly pay from the Government. Now, if some scheme can be evolved whereby we can teach the men to read and write that we draft into our Army, I shall be very glad to vote for it; and, as the Senator from Utah suggests, whenever an arrangement is made to give an education, vocational or otherwise, to the men who come back wounded from the battle fields of France, then I shall be more than pleased to vote for a measure of that character.

The Senator refers to educating the alien, the man who is not familiar with our language when he arrives upon our shores. In the cities of my State, particularly in New York

City, we are working out that problem now. We have a series of night schools and of settlements, centers where every effort is being made to have the man of foreign birth and language understand just what America means, the things it stands for. We are educating these men there. It seems to me hardly necessary to pass this measure, and I doubt myself if it will be of any material value.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I rose for the purpose of moving to recommit this bill, but I will yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to offer, to come in at the close of section 1, the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 1, after line 5, add the following proviso:

Provided, That any action taken by the Commissioner of Education to remove illiteracy among the enlisted men of the Army or Navy shall be undertaken only by the approval and direction of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, respectively.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] has an amendment pending. Without objection, it will be agreed to. The amendment of the Senator from Georgia will be agreed to without objection.

Mr. KING. I have heretofore stated, Mr. President, that this measure is too narrow; that it does not accomplish the object which the Senators have in view. It is deceptive, not intentionally so, and misleading. With the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] it must be the purpose——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 3771.

COORDINATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Hollis	New	Smoot
Beckham	James	Norris	Sterling
Calder	Johnson, Cal.	Nugent	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Thomas
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Owen	Thompson
Cummins	Kellogg	Page	Tillman
Curtis	Kendrick	Penrose	Townsend
Dillingham	Kenyon	Pittman	Trammell
Fall	King	Poindexter	Underwood
Fletcher	Knox	Ransdell	Vardaman
France	Lewis	Robinson	Wadsworth
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Shafroth	Walsh
Gallinger	McCumber	Sheppard	Warren
Hale	McKellar	Sherman	Watson
Harding	McLean	Simmons	Wolcott
Hardwick	McNary	Smith, Ariz.
Henderson	Martin	Smith, Ga.

Mr. HOLLIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] is detained on official business.

Mr. THOMPSON. I wish to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] is necessarily detained on important public business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] is absent on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from North Carolina to yield to me to offer a resolution. I was detained in the Committee on Finance during the morning hour and was not able to be present, as I had intended to be.

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire for that purpose.

DAY OF PUBLIC HUMILIATION, PRAYER, AND FASTING.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I offer a concurrent resolution, and notwithstanding it is somewhat unusual to make the request, I ask that the resolution be read and that its consideration be immediately proceeded with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 19), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it being a duty peculiarly incumbent in a time of war humbly and devoutly to acknowledge our dependence on Almighty God, and to implore His aid and protection, the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to recommend a day of public humiliation, prayer, and fasting, to be observed by the people of the United States with religious solemnity and the offering of fervent supplications to Almighty God for the safety and welfare of our cause, His blessings on our arms, and a speedy restoration of an honorable and lasting peace to the nations of the earth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The concurrent resolution was unanimously agreed to.

EDUCATION OF ADULT ILLITERATES.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand the Senator from North Carolina does not desire to press the unfinished business just at this time; and if that is the case, I should like to ask unanimous consent for action upon the bill which was before the Senate when the hour of 2 o'clock arrived.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know how long that would take. I should like to know that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think we are about through with what we wish to say. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has stated he would move to recommit the bill. In reply I want to say that if the Senate is not willing to pass the bill, we might as well dispose of it. We have finished our work on it in committee and the Senate has completed its work on it in the Senate. I see no advantage from committing the bill. It has no relation, in my opinion, to any other measure pending before the committee. It stands entirely upon a basis of its own. It is for the Senate to determine whether it wishes to invest $100,000 for the first year in enabling the Bureau of Education to cooperate with the forces of the War and the Navy Departments and with the forces in the States in seeking to remove illiteracy, to stimulate work among grown men and women who do not speak English to learn English. That is the object of the bill, and the only object.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I desire very much to go on with the unfinished business this afternoon, but there has been a discussion for an hour and a half on the bill which the Senator from Georgia has in charge. It looks to me like the discussion is about ended. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] tells me that he has two important bills that he desires to get up this afternoon. The chairman of the Committee on Finance also tells me that he has a conference report to present. Probably I ought to yield for that purpose, but I give notice to the Senate that this is the last time I am going to yield, except for a conference report or some bill that it is absolutely necessary to pass at once. I, therefore, shall ask temporarily to lay aside the unfinished business for the passage of the bill the Senator from Georgia has in charge and also the bills which the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has in charge and for the conference report which my colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] wishes to present. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the purpose, giving notice that when the bill comes up to-morrow I shall insist on its being kept before the Senate until it is disposed of.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina if the passage of the bill which he has in charge is not of more interest to the people for the prosecution of the war than the two bills the Senator from Oregon has in charge?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know the character of those bills.

Mr. SMOOT. If so, I think it would be my duty and the duty of other Senators to object to laying the unfinished business aside.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am ready to go on with the unfinished business. I am anxious to go on with it, and I should like to have some one object.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon, before I object, to state the provisions of the bills he desires to have acted upon at this time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The most important one is a bill involving a number of amendments to the national-defense act, which the War Department is quite anxious to have disposed of. The other bill, personally, I do not see is one of very great importance, and yet the Shipping Board feels that it ought to be passed. It is to enable the Shipping Board to acquire certain property that they have been unable to acquire, and they desire to acquire it in order that the shipbuilding program may be carried out.

Mr. SMOOT. I will then ask the Senator from North Carolina to make a request to lay the unfinished business aside temporarily for the consideration of these two bills.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the bill that has been before the Senate is not yet finished.

Mr. SMOOT. We can finish that to-morrow morning in the morning hour.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We have been on it this morning, and I think it would be vastly better to go right on with that bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will insist on going on with the unfinished business. There seems to be some objection.

Mr. KING. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that I desire to submit a few additional remarks if the bill which the Senator from Georgia has in charge is placed before the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I see it will lead to considerable debate yet.

Mr. KING. I think so.

Mr. OVERMAN. Therefore I do not feel justified in yielding any further.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am quite anxious, as is the War Department, to get the bill I referred to acted on. It was my understanding that when the bill the Senator from North Carolina stands sponsor for was made the unfinished business he would lay it aside in order to finish the war measures. I am not sure the RECORD will sustain me, but there was a general understanding between the Senator and me that that course would be pursued.

Mr. OVERMAN. But there seems to be some objection. I would be very glad to yield to the Senator this afternoon, or to yield to him to-morrow, but there is some objection to taking up the bills now.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will not insist on it.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] withdraws his request for the consideration of the bill which has been before the Senate, I will have no objection.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I shall not insist on it.

Mr. OVERMAN. All right.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I shall ask to-morrow that the bills may be disposed of.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of Senate bill 4185 with the amendments made this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

WAR FINANCE CORPORATION—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 211).

Mr. SIMMONS. I submit a conference report upon Senate bill 3714, the so-called War Finance Corporation bill. I will state to the Senate that the House struck out all the Senate bill except the enacting clause and rewrote the bill with certain amendments. The conferees treated that as one amendment, so that we simply amend that one amendment. It would require the reading of the whole bill as amended. I will not ask for the reading of it now, but I will ask that it be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. PENROSE. Why not have it read now? It is a very important bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well, I have no objection, and on the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, who is the ranking minority member of the committee, I ask that the conference report be read.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not insist upon having the report read if the chairman of the committee does not consider it necessary, but clearly this is a bill of the highest importance, and it seems to me it ought not to be treated in a slipshod way.

Mr. SIMMONS. I had supposed that after we took up the conference report for consideration it would be read, but I see no objection to reading it now if the Senator from Pennsylvania desires.

Mr. STONE. It could be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. PENROSE. It will take only a few minutes to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of New Mexico in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read the conference report.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3714) to provide further for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by the House, insert the following:

TITLE I.—WAR FINANCE CORPORATION.

That the Secretary of the Treasury and four additional persons (who shall be the directors first appointed as hereinafter provided), are hereby created a body corporate and politic in deed and in law by the name, style, and title of the "War Finance Corporation" (herein called the Corporation), and shall have succession for a period of 10 years: Provided, That in no event shall the Corporation exercise any of the powers conferred by this act, except such as are incidental to the liquidation of its assets and the winding up of its affairs, after six months after the termination of the war, the date of such termination to be fixed by proclamation of the President of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the capital stock of the Corporation shall be $500,000,000, all of which shall be subscribed by the United States of America, and such subscription shall be subject to call upon the vote of three-fifths of the board of directors of the Corporation, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, at such time or times as may be deemed advisable; and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purpose of making payment upon such subscription when and as called. Receipts for payments by the United States of America for or on account of such stock shall be issued by the Corporation to the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall be evidence of stock ownership.

SEC. 3. That the management of the Corporation shall be vested in a board of directors, consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall be chairman of the board, and four other persons, to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. No director, officer, attorney, agent, or employee of the Corporation shall in any manner, directly or indirectly, participate in the determination of any question affecting his personal interests, or the interests of any corporation, partnership, or association, in which he is directly or indirectly interested; and each director shall devote his time, not otherwise required by the business of the United States, principally to the business of the Corporation. Before entering upon his duties, each of the four directors so appointed, and each officer, shall take an oath faithfully to discharge the duties of his office. Nothing contained in this or any other act shall be construed to prevent the appointment as a director of the Corporation of any officer or employee under the United States or of a director of a Federal reserve bank.

Of the four directors so appointed, the President of the United States shall designate two to serve for two years, and two for four years; and thereafter each director so appointed shall serve for four years. Whenever a vacancy shall occur among the directors so appointed, the person appointed director to fill an; such vacancy shall hold office for the unexpired term of the member whose place he is selected to fill. Any director shall be subject to removal by the President of the United States. Three members of the board of directors shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

SEC. 4. That the four directors of the Corporation appointed as hereinbefore provided shall receive annual salaries, payable monthly, of $12,000. Any director receiving from the United States any salary or compensation for services shall not receive as salary from the Corporation any amount which, together with any salary or compensation received from the United States, would make the total amount paid to him by the United States and by the Corporation exceed $12,000.

SEC. 5. That the principal office of the Corporation shall be located in the District of Columbia, but there may be established agencies or branch offices in any city or cities of the United States under rules and regulations prescribed by the board of directors.

SEC. 6. That the Corporation shall be empowered and authorized to adopt, alter, and use a corporate seal; to make contracts; to purchase or lease and hold or dispose of such real estate as may be necessary for the prosecution of its business; to sue and be sued; to complain and defend in any court of competent jurisdiction, State or Federal; to appoint, by its board of directors, and fix the compensation of such officers, employees, attorneys, and agents as are necessary for the transaction of the business of the Corporation, to define their duties, require bonds of them and fix the penalties thereof, and to dismiss at pleasure such officers, employees, attorneys, and agents; and to prescribe, amend, and repeal, by its board of directors, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, by-laws regulating the manner in which its general business may be conducted and the privileges granted to it by law may be exercised and enjoyed, and prescribing the powers and duties of its officers and agents.

SEC. 7. That the Corporation shall be empowered and authorized to make advances, upon such terms, not inconsistent herewith, as it may prescribe, for periods not exceeding five years from the respective dates of such advances:

(1) To any bank, banker, or trust company, in the United States, which shall have made after April 6, 1917, and which shall have outstanding, any loan or loans to any person, firm, corporation, or association, conducting an established and going business in the United States, whose operations shall be necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and evidenced by a note or notes, but no such advance shall exceed 75 per cent of the face value of such loan or loans; and

(2) To any bank, banker, or trust company in the United States which shall have rendered financial assistance, directly or indirectly, to any such person, firm, corporation, or association by the purchase after April 6, 1917, of its bonds or other obligations, but no such advance shall exceed 75 per cent of the value of such bonds or other obligations at the time of such advance, as estimated and determined by the board of directors of the Corporation.

All advances shall be made upon the promissory note or notes of such bank, banker, or trust company, secured by the notes, bonds, or other obligations, which are the basis of any such advance by the Corporation, together with all the securities, if any, which such bank, banker, or trust company may hold as collateral for such notes, bonds, or other obligations.

The Corporation shall, however, have power to make advances (a) up to 100 per cent of the face value of any such loan made by any such bank, banker, or trust company to any such person, firm, corporation, or association, and (b) up to 100 per cent of the value at the time of any such advance (as estimated and determined by the board of directors of the Corporation) of such bonds or other obligations by the purchase of which financial assistance shall have been rendered to such person, firm, corporation, or association: Provided, That every such advance shall be secured in the manner described in the preceding part of this section, and in addition thereto by collateral security, to be furnished by the bank, banker, or trust company, of such character as shall be prescribed by the board of directors, of a value, at the time of such advance (as estimated and determined by the board of directors of the Corporation), equal to at least 33 per cent of the amount advanced by the Corporation. The Corporation shall retain power to require additional security at any time.

SEC. 8. That the Corporation shall be empowered and authorized to make advances from time to time, upon such terms, not inconsistent herewith, as it may prescribe, for periods not exceeding one year, to any savings bank, banking institution, or trust company in the United States, which receives savings deposits, or to any building and loan association in the United States, on the promissory note or notes of the borrowing institution, whenever the Corporation shall deem such advances to be necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war or important in the public interest: Provided, That such note or notes shall be secured by the pledge of securities of such character as shall be prescribed by the board of directors of the Corporation, the value of which, at the time of such advance (as estimated and determined by the board of directors of the Corporation) shall be equal in amount to at least 133 per cent of the amount of such advance. The rate of interest charged on any such advance shall not be less than 1 per cent per annum in excess of the rate of discount for 90-day commercial paper prevailing at the time of such advance at the Federal reserve bank of the district in which the borrowing institution is located, but such rate of interest shall in no case be greater than the average rate receivable by the borrowing institution on its loans and investments made during the six months prior to the date of the advance, except that where the average rate so receivable by the borrowing institution is less than such rate of discount for 90-day commercial paper the rate of interest on such advance shall be equal to such rate of discount. The Corporation shall retain power to require additional security at any time.

SEC. 9. That the Corporation shall be empowered and authorized, in exceptional cases, to make advances directly to any person, firm, corporation, or association, conducting an established and going business in the United States, whose operations shall be necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war (but only for the purpose of conducting such business in the United States and only when in the opinion of the board of directors of the Corporation such person, firm, corporation, or association is unable to obtain funds upon reasonable terms through banking channels or from the general public), for periods not exceeding five years from the respective dates of such advances, upon such terms, and subject to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the board of directors of the Corporation. In no case shall the aggregate amount of the advances made under this section exceed at any one time an amount equal to 12½ per cent of the sum of (1) the authorized capital stock of the Corporation plus (2) the aggregate amount of bonds of the Corporation authorized to be outstanding at any one time when the capital stock is fully paid in. Every such advance shall be secured by adequate security of such character as shall be prescribed by the board of directors of a value at the time of such advance (as estimated and determined by the board of directors), equal to (except in case of an advance made to a railroad in the possession and control of the President, for the purpose of making additions, betterments, or road extensions to such railroad) at least 125 per cent of the amount advanced by the Corporation. The Corporation shall retain power to require additional security at any time. The rate of interest charged on any such advance shall not be less than 1 per cent per annum in excess of the rate of discount for 90-day commercial paper prevailing at the time of such advance at the Federal reserve bank of the district in which the borrower is located.

SEC. 10. That in no case shall the aggregate amount of the advances made under this title to any one person, firm, corporation, or association exceed at any one time an amount equal to 10 per cent of the authorized capital stock of the Corporation, but this section shall not apply in the case of an advance made to a railroad in the possession and control of the President for the purpose of making additions, betterments, or road extensions to such railroad.

SEC. 11. That the Corporation shall be empowered and authorized to subscribe for, acquire, and own, buy, sell, and deal in bonds and obligations of the United States issued or converted after September 24, 1917, to such extent as the board of directors, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may from time to time determine.

SEC. 12. That the Corporation shall be empowered and authorized to issue and have outstanding at any one time its bonds in an amount aggregating not more than six times its paid-in capital, such bonds to mature not less than one year nor more than five years from the respective dates of issue, and to bear such rate or rates of interest, and may be redeemable before maturity at the option of the Corporation, as may be determined by the board of directors, but such rate or rates of interest shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Such bonds shall have a first and paramount floating charge on all the assets of the Corporation, and the Corporation shall not at any time mortgage or pledge any of its assets. Such bonds may be issued at not less than par in payment of any advances authorized by this title, or may be offered for sale publicly or to any individual, firm, corporation, or association, at such price or prices, as the board of directors, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may determine.

Upon such terms not inconsistent herewith as may be determined from time to time by the board of directors, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, at or before the issue thereof, any of such bonds may be issued payable in any foreign money or foreign moneys, or issued payable at the option of the respective holders thereof either in dollars or in any foreign money or foreign moneys at such fixed rate of exchange as may be stated in any such bonds. For the purpose of determining the amount of bonds issued payable in any foreign money or foreign moneys the dollar equivalent shall be determined by the par of exchange at the date of issue thereof, as estimated by the Director of the Mint and proclaimed by the Secretary of the Treasury in pursuance of the provisions of section 25 of the act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved August 27, 1894.

SEC. 13. That the Federal reserve banks shall be authorized, subject to the maturity limitations of the Federal reserve act and to regulations of the Federal Reserve Board, to discount the direct obligations of member banks secured by such bonds of the Corporation and to rediscount eligible paper secured by such bonds and indorsed by a member bank. No discount or rediscount under this section shall be granted at a less interest charge than 1 per cent per annum above the prevaling rates for eligible commercial paper of corresponding maturity.

Any Federal reserve bank may, with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, use any obligation or paper so acquired for any purpose for which it is authorized to use obligations or paper secured by bonds or notes of the United States not bearing the circulation privilege: Provided, however, That whenever Federal reserve notes are issued against the security of such obligations or paper the Federal Reserve Board may make a special interest charge on such notes, which, in the discretion of the Federal Reserve Board, need not be applicable to other Federal reserve notes which may from time to time be issued and outstanding. All provisions of law, not inconsistent herewith, in respect to the acquisition by any Federal reserve bank of obligations or paper secured by such bonds or notes of the United States, and in respect to Federal reserve notes issued against the security of such obligations or paper, shall extend, in so far as applicable, to the acquisition of obligations or paper secured by the bonds of the Corporation and to the Federal reserve notes issued against the security of such obligations or paper.

SEC. 14. That the Corporation shall not exercise any of the powers granted by this title or perform any business except such as is incidental and necessarily preliminary to its organization until it has been authorized by the President of the United States to commence business under the provisions of this title.

SEC. 15. That all net earnings of the Corporation not required for its operations shall be accumulated as a reserve fund until such time as the Corporation liquidates under the terms of this title. Such reserve fund shall, upon the direction of the board of directors, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, be invested in bonds and obligations of the United States, issued or converted after September 24, 1917, or upon like direction and approval may be deposited in member banks of the Federal Reserve System, or in any of the Federal reserve banks, or be used from time to time, as well as any other funds of the Corporation, in the purchase or redemption of any bonds issued by the Corporation. The Federal reserve banks are hereby authorized to act as depositaries for and as fiscal agents of the Corporation in the general performance of the powers conferred by this title. Beginning six months after the termination of the war, the date of such termination to be fixed by a proclamation of the President of the United States, the directors of the Corporation shall proceed to liquidate its assets and to wind up its affairs, but the directors of the Corporation, in their discretion, may, from time to time, prior to such date, sell and dispose of any securities or other property acquired by the Corporation. Any balance remaining after the payment of all its debts shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts, and thereupon the Corporation shall be dissolved.

SEC. 16. That any and all bonds issued by the Corporation shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, any State, or any of the possessions of the United States, or by any local taxing authority, except (a) estate or inheritance taxes, and (b) graduated additional income taxes, commonly known as surtaxes, and excess-profits and war-profits taxes, now or hereafter imposed by the United States, upon the income or profits of individuals, partnerships, corporations, or associations. The interest on an amount of such bonds the principal of which does not exceed in the aggregate $5,000, owned by any individual, partnership, corporation, or association, shall be exempt from the taxes referred to in clause (b). The Corporation, including its franchise and the capital and reserve or surplus thereof, and the income derived therefrom, shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, any State, or any of the possessions of the United States, or by any local taxing authority, except that any real property of the Corporation shall be subject to State, county, or municipal taxes to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed.

SEC. 17. That the United States shall not be liable for the payment of any bond or other obligation or the interest thereon issued or incurred by the Corporation, nor shall it incur any liability in respect of any act or omission of the Corporation.

SEC. 18. That whoever (1) makes any statement, knowing it to be false, for the purpose of obtaining for himself or for any other person, firm, corporation, or association any advance under this title, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

Whoever willfully overvalues any security by which any such advance is secured shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

Whoever (1) falsely makes, forges, or counterfeits any bond, coupon, or paper in imitation of or purporting to be in imitation of a bond or coupon issued by the Corporation; or (2) passes, utters, or publishes, or attempts to pass, utter, or publish, any false, forged, or counterfeited bond, coupon, or paper purporting to be issued by the Corporation, knowing the same to be falsely made, forged, or counterfeited; or (3) falsely alters any such bond, coupon, or paper; or (4) passes, utters, or publishes as true any falsely altered or spurious bond, coupon, or paper issued or purporting to have been issued by the Corporation, knowing the same to be falsely altered or spurious, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

Whoever, being connected in any capacity with the Corporation, (1) embezzles, abstracts, or willfully misapplies any moneys, funds, or credits thereof, or (2) with intent to defraud the Corporation or any other company, body politic or corporate, or any individual, or to deceive any officer of the Corporation, (a) makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of the Corporation, or (b) without authority from the directors draws any order or assigns any note, bond, draft, mortgage, judgment, or decree thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to direct and use the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department to detect, arrest, and deliver into custody of the United States marshal having jurisdiction any person committing any of the offenses punishable under this section.

SEC. 19. That the Corporation shall file quarterly reports with the Secretary of the Senate and with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, stating as of the first day of each month of the quarter just ended (1) the total amount of capital paid in, (2) the total amount of bonds issued, (3) the total amount of bonds outstanding, (4) the total amount of advances made under each of sections 7, 8, and 9, (5) a list of the classes and amount of securities taken under each of such sections, (6) the total amount of advances outstanding under each of sections 7, 8, and 9, and (7) such other information as may be hereafter required by either House of Congress.

The Corporation shall make a report to Congress on the first day of each regular session, including a detailed statement of receipts and expenditures.

SEC. 20. Section 5202 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended so as to read as follows: "Sec. 5202. No national banking association shall at any time be indebted, or in any way liable, to an amount exceeding the amount of its capital stock at such time actually paid in and remaining undiminished by losses or otherwise, except on account of demands of the nature following:

"First. Notes of circulation.

"Second. Moneys deposited with or collected by the association.

"Third. Bills of exchange or drafts drawn against money actually on deposit to the credit of the association, or due thereto.

"Fourth. Liabilities to the stockholders of the association for dividends and reserve profits.

"Fifth. Liabilities incurred under the provisions of the Federal reserve act.

"Sixth. Liabilities incurred under the provisions of the War Finance Corporation act."

TITLE II.—CAPITAL ISSUES COMMITTEE.

SEC. 200. That there is hereby created a committee to be known as the "Capital Issues Committee," hereinafter called the Committee, and to be composed of seven members to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. At least three of the members shall be members of the Federal Reserve Board.

No member, officer, attorney, agent, or employee of the Committee shall in any manner, directly or indirectly, participate in the determination of any question affecting his personal interests, or the interest of any corporation, partnership, or association in which he is directly or indirectly interested. Before entering upon his duties, each member and officer shall take an oath faithfully to discharge the duties of his office. Nothing contained in this or any other act shall be construed to prevent the appointment as a member of the Committee of any officer or employee under the United States or of a director of a Federal reserve bank.

The terms during which the several members of the Committee shall respectively hold office shall be determined by the President of the United States, and the compensation of the several members of the Committee who are not members of the Federal Reserve Board shall be $7,500 per annum, payable monthly, but if any such member receives any other compensation from any office or employment under the United States the amount so received shall be deducted from such salary, and if such other compensation is $7,500 or more, such member shall receive no salary as a member of the Committee. Any member shall be subject to removal by the President of the United States.

The President shall designate one of the members as chairman, but any subsequent vacancy in the chairmanship shall be filled by the Committee. Four members of the Committee shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

SEC. 201. That the committee may employ and fix the compensation of such officers, attorneys, agents, and other employees as may be deemed necessary to conduct its business, who shall be appointed without regard to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883 (vol. 22, U. S. Stats. L., p. 403), and amendments thereto or any rules or regulations made in pursuance thereof. No such officer, attorney, agent, or employee shall receive more compensation than persons performing services of like or similar character under the Federal Reserve Board.

SEC. 202. That all the expenses of the committee, including all necessary expenses for transportation incurred by the members or by its officers, attorneys, agents, or employees under its orders in making an investigation or upon official business in any other places than at their respective headquarters, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman.

The committee may rent suitable offices for its use and purchase such furniture, equipment, and supplies as may be necessary, but shall not expend more than $10,000 annually for offices in the District of Columbia.

The principal office of the committee shall be in the District of Columbia, but it may meet and exercise all its powers at any other place. The committee may, by one or more of its members, or by such agents as it may designate, prosecute any inquiry necessary to its duties in any part of the United States.

SEC. 203. That the committee may, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by it from time to time, investigate, pass upon, and determine whether it is compatible with the national interest that there should be sold or offered for sale or for subscription any issue, or any part of any issue, of securities hereafter issued by any person, firm, corporation, or association, the total or aggregate par or face value of which issue and any other securities issued by the same person, firm, corporation, or association since the passage of this act is in excess of $100,000. Shares of stock of any corporation or association without nominal or par value shall for the purpose of this section be deemed to be of the par value of $100 each. Any securities which upon the date of the passage of this act are in the possession or control of the corporation, association, or obligor issuing the same shall be deemed to have been issued after the passage of this act within the meaning hereof.

Nothing in this title shall be construed to authorize such committee to pass upon (1) any borrowing by any person, firm, corporation, or association in the ordinary course of business as distinguished from borrowing for capital purposes, (2) the renewing or refunding of indebtedness existing at the time of the passage of this act, (3) the resale of any securities the sale or offering of which the committee has determined to be compatible with the national interest, (4) any securities issued by any railroad corporation the property of which may be in the possession and control of the President of the United States, or (5) any bonds issued by the War Finance Corporation.

Nothing done or omitted by the committee hereunder shall be construed as carrying the approval of the committee or of the United States of the legality, validity, worth, or security of any securities.

SEC. 204. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the remainder of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the sum of $200,000 for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the establishment and maintenance of the committee, including the payment of the salaries and rents herein authorized.

SEC. 205. That the committee shall make a report to Congress on the first day of each regular session, including a detailed statement of receipts and expenditures, and also including the names of all officers and employees and the salary paid to each.

SEC. 206. That this title shall continue in effect until, but not after, the expiration of six months after the termination of the war, the date of such termination to be determined by a proclamation of the President of the United States, but the President may at any time by proclamation declare that this title is no longer necessary, and thereupon it shall cease to be in effect.

TITLE III.—MISCELLANEOUS.

SEC. 300. That whoever willfully violates any of the provisions of this act, except where a different penalty is provided in this act, shall, upon conviction in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both; and whoever knowingly participates in any such violation, except where a different penalty is provided in this act, shall be punished by a like fine or imprisonment, or both.

SEC. 301. That no stamp tax shall be required or imposed upon a promissory note secured by the pledge of bonds or obligations of the United States issues after April 24, 1917, or secured by the pledge of a promissory note which itself is secured by the pledge of such bonds or obligations: Provided, That in either case the par value of such bonds or obligations shall equal the amount of such note.

SEC. 302. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall, for any reason, be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, or, in case any court of competent jurisdiction shall adjudge to be invalid any provisions hereof in respect of any class or classes of securities, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder of this act, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, part, or subject matter of this act directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

SEC. 303. That the term "securities," as used in this act, includes stocks, shares of stocks, bonds, debentures, notes, certificates of indebtedness, and other obligations.

SEC. 304. That the right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

SEC. 305. That the short title of this act shall be the "War Finance Corporation act."

SEC. 306. That all provisions of any act or acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Amend the title to read as follows: "An act to provide further for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and to supervise the issuance of securities, and for other purposes."

And the House agree to the same.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, if my colleague, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] does not object, I think it will take only a few minutes to dispose of this conference report. I should be glad if he would ask unanimous consent to have temporarily laid aside the bill which he has charge in order that we may take up for present consideration the conference report which has just been read.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, as the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], who is chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, has stated, he had an understanding with me that I would allow him to take up certain military bills for which he desires consideration, but I think the conference report for which my colleague asks consideration is a very important one and ought to be adopted at once. I therefore desire to state that I shall yield to him and also to the Senator from Oregon, and that I shall call up the bill which I have in charge and ask that it be proceeded with regularly on to-morrow. I now ask unanimous consent that it be laid aside temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLIS in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina? The Chair hears none.

The Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3714) to provide further for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to provide credits for industries, enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, after conference with a great many Members of the Senate, I feel confident that it is only necessary for me to make a very brief statement outlining the changes which have been made in the House substitute by the conferees. I shall therefore detain the Senate but a few minutes for that purpose.

As I stated when I presented the conference report, the House struck out all of the Senate bill except the enacting clause and rewrote the bill. I am advised that the House pursued this course because, in the judgment of the committee of that body having the bill in charge, it contained one provision, namely, the provision which imposes certain taxes upon the bonds of the corporation, which would affect the revenues of the Government. Naturally the House is more or less sensitive of any invasion of its right to originate legislation to raise revenues, and it was thought that by striking out all except the enacting clause and rewriting the bill, with such amendments as the House might see fit to make, this difficulty would be removed. That is the reason, as I understand it, why the usual course of specifically amending the Senate bill was not pursued in this instance. The action of the House in thus rewriting the bill made it necessary, when the matter came into conference, to treat the entire House substitute as one amendment, and to make such changes in that amendment as the conferees should agree upon. In other words, treating the House substitute as one amendment, we agree to it with various and sundry amendments, and the conference is the substitute as thus amended.

A great many changes were made by the House in the Senate bill, but most of them were of minor importance; some of them changes and corrections in phraseology, some transpositions, some for clarification and greater certainty of meaning without material change in substance. In addition to these minor amendments the House made quite a number of amendments of more or less importance, some of them materially changing important provisions of the Senate bill. The House also added several new sections dealing with matters not embraced in the Senate at all but altogether unobjectionable. One of these latter amendments authorizes the capital issues committee to rent suitable offices for its use and to purchase furniture, equipment, and supplies, as may be necessary, and appropriating money to pay the expenses of the establishment and maintenance of the committee for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1918 and 1919. This was a proper amendment, although the purpose might have just as well been accomplished in one of the general appropriation bills.

Another amendment of this character was one providing that there shall be no stamp tax imposed upon promissory notes secured by these bonds or by liberty bonds. That, I think, is a very wise and necessary provision, because there has been a great deal of irritation heretofore in connection with advances on the liberty bonds on account of this tax.

As I stated, in addition to these minor amendments, the House substitute made a number of important changes in the Senate bill, some of which the conferees agreed to and disagreed to others. There was a manifest desire and effort on the part of the conferees to make a good bill without pride of opinion in the action of their respective Houses.

Now, Mr. President, in order not to take too much of the time of the Senate, I will state very briefly the more important amendments made by the conferees to the House substitute. The House substitute provided:

> Not more than three of the five directors shall be members of the same political party.

The conferees struck that provision out of the bill. The House substitute provided:

> And each director shall devote to the business of the Corporation all of his time not devoted to the business of the United States.

The conferees changed that provision, so that it reads as follows:

> And each director shall devote his time, not otherwise required by the business of the United States, principally to the business of the Corportation.

In the savings-bank section of the substitute the conferees made an addition to the House provision, requiring that the rate of interest shall be not less than 1 per cent per annum in excess of the rate for 90-day commercial paper. The Senate had fixed this rate at one-half of 1 per cent; the House raised it to 1 per cent. The conferees retained the House rate of 1 per cent, but added the following:

> But such rate of interest shall in no case be greater than the average rate receivable by the borrowing institution on its loans and investments made during the six months prior to the date of the advance, except that where the average rate so receivable by the borrowing institution is less than such rate of discount for 90-day commercial paper the rate of interest on such advance shall be equal to such rate of discount.

That was done, Mr. President, because it was contended before the conference, as it had been before the Senate committee, that in some instances, especially in New England, the savings banks sometimes loan at a less rate than the rate fixed by the Federal Reserve Board for commercial paper running for 90 days. I believe the rate in some of the districts to-day is as high as 5 per cent, and it may go much higher than that. It was shown to us that in some instances savings banks loaned at a lower rate than that. The purpose of this provision was that the corporation might be permitted to charge whatever might be the average charged by the savings institution during the six months prior to the advance, provided that it was not less than the rate fixed by the Federal Reserve Board for 90-day commercial paper.

The House bill provided that the corporations could make these direct advances—that is, advances not through the medium of the banks provided for in section 9, known as the exception-cases clause—to such persons, firms, corporations, or associations only when they were unable to obtain funds upon reasonable terms through banking channels or from the general public. It was said that that might sometimes entail delay in making loans that were of immediate necessity, especially in connection with the Government's war work; that the borrowing concern would have to try the banks, have to try the investment public, and would not be permitted to come to the corporation until they had tested these out. To avoid that difficulty, the conferees added the following:

> When in the opinion of the board of directors of the Corporation such person, firm—

And so forth, were unable to obtain these advances through banking channels or the general public, thus leaving the determination of that question to the judgment of the board of directors.

The House bill provided that the aggregate amount of such advances should not exceed at any one time an amount equal to 16⅔ per cent of the sum of (1) the paid-in capital stock of the Corporation at such time, plus (2) the aggregate amount of bonds of the Corporation authorized to be outstanding at such time. It was very clearly shown to the committee that under this provision it might be possible that the Corporation in the beginning could not loan to all applicants an amount exceeding about $60,000,000, a wholly inadequate sum. The conferees amended that section of the House bill so that it reads, in effect:

> That the aggregate amount of such advances at one time shall not exceed an amount equal to 12½ per cent of (1) the total authorized capital, $500,000,000, plus (2) the total amount of bonds authorized, that being six times the authorized capital.

So that under this direct-advance clause, spoken of, I believe, in the debates heretofore as the exceptional-cases clause, about which we had so much controversy both in the Senate and in the House, it will be impossible for the Corporation to loan an amount exceeding $437,500,000.

The House bill provided that no direct advance should be made that are not secured by adequate security of such character as shall be prescribed by the board of directors, of a value at the time of such advance equal to at least 133 per cent of the amount advanced by the Corporation. The conferees changed this so as to allow advances to be made when the security offered shall, in the opinion of the directors, equal at least 125 per cent of such advance. Railroads under the control of the President are excepted from the 125 per cent requirement for advances made to them for the purpose of improvements, betterments, or extensions; but in the case of the railroads, as in other cases under this section, the security must be adequate, the question of adequacy being left to the determination of the board of directors.

The House bill provides that no advance, whether direct or indirect, in excess of 10 per cent of the authorized stock of the corporation shall be made to any one person, firm, corporation, or association. The conference excepted from this provision advances made to railroads in the possession and in the control of the President for the purpose of making additions, betterments, and road extensions. With that exception, the corporation will not be permitted under this amendment to loan to any one firm, corporation, or association an amount in excess of 10 per cent, which would be, of course, not more than $50,000,000.

It was thought, Mr. President, that in the circumstances a railroad might require and it might be greatly to the interest of the Government that it should have, and have speedily, a larger sum of money than that; and for that it was thought expedient to exempt them from the 125 per cent requirement when the money to be advanced was to be specifically devoted and employed for betterments and extensions.

The House provided that bonds may be issued by the corporation to an amount aggregating not more than four times the paid-in capital stock, or $2,000,000,000. The Senate bill provided for an issue of four billions of bonds. Both the House conferees and the Senate conferees were very much wedded to the action of their respective bodies, and we had a great deal of trouble in getting together on this provision. Finally we did what is almost invariably done in such circumstances. We split the difference, so to speak, and fixed the amount of bonds that may be issued by the corporation at $3,000,000,000.

The House bill provided that the bonds could not be sold at a price less than par. The conferees provided that the bonds could be sold at such prices as the board of directors, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, might prescribe. This was thought of great importance by the Secretary of the Treasury, as it might in some condition be an embarrassing handicap if the corporation was not permitted under any circumstances to sell these bonds except at face value.

The House bill contained the limitation that no discount or rediscount should be made by a Federal reserve bank of paper secured by the bonds of the corporation unless the member bank seeking the advance satisfied the Federal reserve bank that it had exhausted its commercial paper eligible for discount or rediscount under the regulations of the Federal Reserve Board. That is to say, that before a member bank, having made advances to these war industries, would be permitted to borrow on the security for those advances it would have to show affirmatively that it did not have in its portfolio, so to speak, eligible commercial paper upon which it might secure the loans it desired. The conferees eliminated that provision from the bill.

Mr. President, I think I have enumerated the changes of major importance made by the conferees in the House substitute. I will not detain the Senate to discuss the other changes, unless some Senator directs my attention to some change upon which he wishes an explanation.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from North Carolina two questions about section 203. I do not do it with any idea of opposing the conference report, for, as I understand, the section was not in dispute, although in its present form it may have been reenacted by the House; but I have had some inquiries with regard to it, and I think it would be helpful to the country if the Senator from North Carolina would now state his interpretation of this section.

The section reads in this way:

That the Committee—

That is, the Capital Issues Committee—may, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by it from time to time, investigate, pass upon, and determine whether it is compatible with the national interest that there should be sold or offered for sale or for subscription any issue, or any part of any issue, of securities hereafter issued by any person, firm, corporation, or association, the total or aggregate par or face value of which issue and any other securities issued by the same person, firm, corporation, or association since the passage of this act is in excess of $100,000.

I assume that it is not intended to restrict the right of a State to issue securities in excess of $100,000. I assume it because I can not conceive how the word "corporation" could properly apply to a political sovereignty of that kind; but I ask the Senator from North Carolina to state to the Senate and to the country whether it is the intent of the committee that municipal corporations—namely, cities, counties, school districts, and other public districts—are prohibited from issuing securities under this section?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator I will say that it was the view of the committee that so far as the State, the sovereign, was concerned, there could be no restrictions imposed upon its issuing bonds; but I think, on the other hand, so far as the local municipalities are concerned, such as the counties and the cities, probably they are among the chief agents that are issuing securities for the purpose of constructive work or improvements of a character that might well, in the interest of the public, in the circumstances which surround us, be postponed until after the war; and I think it is the expectation that this committee would, so far as the issues by these municipal corporations are concerned, take appropriate action as provided in the section to which the Senator refers. Of course, that action would be a mere expression of the opinion of the committee as to these securities; that is all. The committee has no power to prohibit their issue. It only has the power to investigate, and if as a result of its investigations it finds that the purpose of the issue is not emergent but one which could be as well postponed until after the war, it would find and express its opinion that the issue was not compatible with the public interest. I think that was the understanding of the committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I doubt very much whether the language used will bring these public instrumentalities, such as cities and counties, and other public corporations of that character, within the terms of the statute; but I wanted very much to have the view of the Senator from North Carolina in order that they might accompany the enactment of the statute.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say to the Senator that I think the thought of the committee was—and we discussed this matter in the presence of the chairman of the present capital issues committee, the voluntary committee that is now organized in the Federal Reserve Board—I think his thought and the thought of the committee was that wherever an issue was thought to be necessary in the interests of health of the community or any other vital purpose of public concern, and that the improvement could not be postponed until after the war without serious injury to that community or public, they would interfere; but in case they felt that it could be postponed later without inflicting any special damage or serious injury to the community involved they would not be favorably disposed toward such an issue.

Mr. CUMMINS. That, Mr. President, would hardly reach the actual situation. The question is whether these public agencies will feel it necessary, being patriotic, to submit their issues to the Capital Issues Committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think there will be no trouble about that, because I understand that even now, with this committee operating only as a voluntary organization, it is almost impossible to float securities on the market unless they are favorably passed upon. The same rule is applied to securities issued by municipalities that apply to securities issued by individuals. Of course if any bank or any investor sees fit to disregard the advice of the Capital Issues Committee there is no punishment imposed and no prohibition.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator understand that there is no penalty attached for disobedience or disregard of the order?

Mr. SIMMONS. None.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is the Senator quite sure about that?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am quite sure about it.

Mr. CUMMINS. This section provides that the committee shall determine whether it is compatible with the national interest that the issue shall be made.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. And then section 300 provides that whoever willfully violates any of the provisions of this act, except where a different penalty is provided in this act, shall upon conviction, and so forth, be punished as provided. Now, when you take that in connection with the right of the committee to make rules and regulations and to determine whether or not a particular issue is compatible with the national interest, to me it is not quite clear that one who offers on the market these securities, after the adverse determination of the committee had been declared, is not violating the law.

Mr. SIMMONS. If there were a provision to the effect that the committee having decided that the issuance of these securities was not compatible with the public interest, anybody issuing them after that should be punished; if the bill contained a prohibition against the issue of these securities found by the committee to be incompatible with the public interest, then the position of the Senator, of course, would be correct. There is, however, no such provision. It merely says that this committee shall investigate and determine; but there is no declaration that anybody shall be bound by their determination, or that anybody shall be punished if he disregards their determination. It stops right there, and therefore there is no provision in the bill imposing a penalty for a disregard of the finding of the committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it is quite important to a good many communities to have that point perfectly clear. For instance, in my own city there is being organized at this time a trust company or a banking company known as the Fidelity Trust Co. It offers its stock, not on the general market, but to the citizens of that community; and they have been told, not officially, that if they offer their stock to the people of that community, and the committee here should take cognizance of the matter and determine that it was contrary to the public interest, anyone who participated in that enterprise would become a violator of the law.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I assure the Senator that I do not think any member of the committee placed that interpretation upon this provision; and personally I have no doubt in the world that the Senator's apprehensions are unfounded. The provision to which he refers is: "Anyone violating any of the provisions of this bill."

If there had been a provision prohibiting the issue after the committee had passed adversely upon it, then, of course, that would have brought the offender within the terms of the penal clause; but there is absolutely nothing in the bill, either in this section or in any other section, that requires or commands that any citizen of the country shall observe the findings of this board. The findings are merely persuasive. Their value depends upon the effect which their findings shall have upon the investing public. If the investing public sees fit to disregard their findings, that is the end of the business.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, section 9, which is the penalty clause, is practically as it was adopted in the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is true. I think the Senator from Massachusetts, who is an honored member of the Finance Committee, and also is a member of the conference committee, will bear me out in the statement that not a member of the committee supposed that that section would cover the case to which the Senator from Iowa refers.

Mr. LODGE. I think it is safe to say that neither the conferees of the House nor the conferees of the Senate would have signed the report if they had supposed it would.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I do not wish to obstruct the passage of the bill. I merely wish to make a brief comment upon one clause of it.

I observe, on page 10, in section 302, a term which has been used with more or less frequency in the bills passing the Congress:

> That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall, for any reason, be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, or, in case any court of competent jurisdiction shall adjudge to be invalid any provisions hereof in respect of any class or classes of securities, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder of this act, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, part, or subject matter of this act directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

The effect of that language is an apparent concession that the courts have a right to declare invalid acts of Congress or parts of acts of Congress. I do not assent to that doctrine. I protest against that doctrine. While I shall make no point about this particular measure, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the power of courts to pass upon acts of Congress is a statutory power, not a constitutional power. They have no right to pass upon the validity of an act of Congress on the ground that it is unconstitutional. The only bodies in the United States that are charged with the right and the duty and the power of passing upon the constitutionality of an act of Congress are the Senate of the United States and the House of Representatives of the United States, whose Members have taken an oath to observe the Constitution of the United States. Congress, and Congress alone, has that right and has that power, and ought to exercise it.

I am not unaware of the fact that courts have in several instances declared acts of Congress unconstitutional; but they have never done so, perhaps with a single exception, where the court itself was not in error, and they have never done so without mischievous consequences following the action of the court. I shall not detain the Senate to enumerate these cases.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I know there are many lawyers in this country who will agree with the contention of the Senator from Oklahoma, the chief justice of my State, I think, does; but for many years, ever since the foundation of the Government, I might say, the Supreme Court of the United States has been exercising the right to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional, and we have to act upon the state of facts as it actually exists and not upon a state of facts that any individual or number of individuals think ought to be.

Mr. OWEN. It would be perfectly proper for Congress if they anticipated any attitude of that kind on behalf of the courts to put in this act a provision that no case in which the constitutionality of the act or any part of it was brought in question should be permitted to go before the court; that none of the statutory courts should be permitted to pass upon the question of constitutionality, and that no appeal should lie in any such instance to the Supreme Court of the United States. That would end it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not agree with the Senator that that would end it. I think we can not take away from the courts the jurisdiction they claim upon a question of that sort by legislative enactment. The only way you can possibly do it, in my judgment, is by amending the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator is very much mistaken in regard to the matter of interpretation of the law by the Supreme Court itself. In the case of McCardle, in 1868, the Supreme Court decided by unanimous opinion that Congress had the power to withdraw from the court jurisdiction to pass upon the constitutionality of an act which was then pending before the court. It has sustained this interpretation in a number of other cases, as in Wiscart v. Dauchey, 3 Dall., 321 (1796); Duroussean v. U. S., 6 Cranch., 307 (1810); U. S. v. Gordon, 7 Cranch., 287 (1813); Daniels v. C., R. I. & P. R. R., 3 Wall., 250 (1865); In re McCardle, 7 Wall., 510 (1868); Nat. Ex. Bk. v. Peters, 144 U. S., 570 (1891); Col. C. C. M. Co. v. Turck, 150 U. S., 138 (1893).

I merely desire to put in the RECORD these observations, because I think the time has come when the people of the United States should not permit any court to invalidate an act of Congress. I think the Congress of the United States and the Senate of the United States owes it in their representative capacity to the people of the United States not to permit a court which is not subject to the control of the people of the United States to pass upon the validity of the statutes of the United States. That is a power which is in the Congress of the United States alone, and it ought to be exercised by the Congress of the United States alone.

The Senator says it has been the uniform practice since the foundation of the Government, or for over 100 years. I deny that. The only case of any importance up to 1856 was the case of slavery. In that case the Supreme Court held that slavery was a constitutional right, and it was one of the great factors that led us into a bloody Civil War, because at that time it was not understood that the opinion of the Supreme Court was a violation itself of the Constitution. It was not at that time understood how the Supreme Court could be controlled by congressional action. It was not at that time understood that there was a remedy in the hands of the people of the United States. Of course, we could not amend the Constitution of the United States with one-fourth of the States committed to slavery, and the moral question arose in which the Supreme Court held that slavery was a constitutional right. A moral question arose, and the only way by which it could be settled was by the States that did not assent to the opinion of the larger part of the country with regard to that question withdrawing from the Union. When they did, the question of the preservation of the Union arose. That question necessitated militarism, and the importance of the Union as a means of cooperative strength.

The Supreme Court, from the time of Marbury against Madison, at the beginning of the last century, did not repeat that error in a single case for over 50 years. It is only since the war that they have in a number of instances made the error, just as they declared the greenback law invalid, and there the Government of the United States was driven to the extraordinary remedy of putting additional members on the Supreme Court to have the court reverse itself, which was done by President Grant.

I merely rose to voice my protest against a tacit recognition of this false principle, that is all. I am content with that going into the RECORD.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I had intended to address the Senate this afternoon, or during the consideration of this conference report, on one phase of the bill itself creating the War Finance Corporation. I did not intend to discuss the report itself, which I signed. The particular phase of the bill to which I had intended to address myself was discussed durnig the consideration of the bill some time ago in the Senate. It was then asserted on both sides of the Chamber that this Finance Corporation would be in effect a great central bank, and that the reserve banks would be little more than branches of that central organization. I had intended to state my views on that subject during the consideration of this report. I am in absolute and unreserved antagonism to any such position as that stated, and I was desirous of placing my view as clearly as I could in the RECORD that it might stand there as at least expressive of my attitude, even though it might accomplish no other end.

But, Mr. President, it looks now as if we may dispose of this conference report at once, and while in a sense I feel a personal disappointment in waiving my privilege of making the speech I intended and desired to make, I do so cheerfully, for I have always felt, as I do in this instance, that the passage of an important measure is of greater public moment than any speech it would be possible for me to make. I am gratified at the prospect of the immediate disposal of this measure, and out of the fear that if I ventured upon the discussion I had in mind it might provoke a controversy more or less prolonged, I refrain, and pocket that speech, as I have many others, that I might help to put forward the speedy conclusion of legislation in the public interest. I back away to the end that this important business may be promptly disposed of. The speech can better wait than the swift passage of the law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

ASSISTANT SECRETARIES OF WAR—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN submitted the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R.

9352) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed, strike out all after the word "Senate," in line 10 of the engrossed bill, down to and including "year," in line 11 of said bill, and insert a period and the following: "The Assistant Secretary shall be entitled to a salary of $5,000 per annum, payable monthly, and the Second Assistant Secretary and Third Assistant Secretary shall each be entitled to a salary of $4,500 per annum"; and the Senate agree to the same.

GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

S. H. DENT, Jr.,
W. J. FIELDS,
D. R. ANTHONY, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the House.

The conference report was agreed to.

THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4138) to amend certain sections of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. KING. I should like to know what the bill is, anyway.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, and read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 10, 13, 22, 24, 28, 31, 42, 51, 55, 69, 111, and 125 of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, be, and the same hereby are, amended as hereinafter indicated in section 1 of this act:

Section 10, by striking out the word "farrier" wherever it occurs in said section and substituting therefor the words "stable sergeant"; changing the period at the end of the second paragraph of said section to a colon and adding the following: "And provided further, That any person who at the time of the approval of this act shall be and has been an officer of the Medical Reserve Corps, or contract surgeon, on active duty for 12 years subsequent to 1898 shall be eligible for appointment as first lieutenant in the Medical Corps, subject to examination: And provided further, That any officer so eligible who fails to pass the physical examination by reason of disability incurred in line of duty shall be retired with the pay and allowances of a first lieutenant of the Medical Corps"; and by striking out the eighth proviso of the third paragraph of said section.

Section 13 to read as follows:

"SEC. 13. The Signal Corps: The Signal Corps shall consist of 1 Chief Signal Officer, with the rank of major general, 3 colonels, 8 lieutenant colonels, 10 majors, 30 captains, 75 first lieutenants; and the aviation section, which shall consist of 1 colonel, 1 lieutenant colonel, 8 majors, 24 captains, and 114 first lieutenants, who shall be selected from among officers of the Army at large of corresponding grades or from among officers of the grade below, exclusive of those serving by detail in staff corps or departments, who are qualified as military aviators, and shall be detailed to serve as aviation officers for periods of four years unless sooner relieved; and the provisions of section 27 of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, are hereby extended to apply to said aviation officers and to vacancies created in any arm, corps, or department of the Army by the detail of said officers therefrom; but nothing in said act or in any other law now in force shall be held to prevent the detail or redetail at any time, to fill a vacancy among the aviation officers authorized by this act, of any officer who, during prior service as an aviation officer of the aviation section, shall have become proficient in military aviation.

"Aviation officers may, when qualified therefor, be rated as junior military aviators or as military aviators, but no person shall be so rated until there shall have been issued to him a certificate to the effect that he is qualified for the rating, and no certificate shall be issued to any person until an aviation examining board, which shall be composed of three officers of experience in the aviation service and two medical officers, shall have examined him, under general regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War and published to the Army by the War Department, and shall have reported him to be qualified for the rating. No person shall receive the rating of military aviator until he shall have served creditably for three years as an aviation officer with the rating of a junior military aviator.

"Each aviation officer authorized by this act shall, while on duty that requires him to participate regularly and frequently in aerial flights, receive an increase of 25 per cent in the pay of his grade and length of service under his commission. Each duly qualified junior military aviator shall, while so serving, have the rank, pay, and allowances of one grade higher than that held by him under his commission if his rank under said commission be not higher than that of captain, and while on duty requiring him to participate regularly and frequently in aerial flights he shall receive in addition an increase of 50 per cent in the pay of his grade and length of service under his commission. Each military aviator shall, while so serving, have the rank, pay and allowances of one grade higher than that held by him under his commission if his rank under said commission be not higher than that of captain, and while on duty requiring him to participate regularly and frequently in aerial flights he shall receive in addition an increase of 75 per cent of the pay of his grade and length of service under his commission.

Mr. KING. I desire to inquire of the Senator having the bill in charge whether that increased compensation applies to those who are engaged in flying at the cantonments and fields here at home?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I was not following the Secretary very closely.

Mr. KING. I do not have a copy of the bill before me, but it is the provision in which aviators receive additional compensation when engaged in aerial flights.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is exactly as the law provides. The bill has not changed the law at all. All of pages 4, 5, and 6, down to line 21, are the law as it is to-day. There is no change at all. The change which is made in that section which it is proposed to amend occurs on page 6, beginning at line 21, which provides that "enlisted men of the Signal Corps who are now qualified or who may hereafter qualify as expert military telegraphers shall receive $5 a month," and so forth. That is the only change in the law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading, and read as follows:

"The provisions of the act March 2, 1913, allowing increase of pay and allowances to officers detailed by the Secretary of War on aviation duty, are hereby repealed. Hereafter married officers of the line of the Army shall be eligible equally with unmarried officers, and subject to the same conditions, for detail to aviation duty; and the Secretary of War shall have authority to cause as many enlisted men of the aviation section to be instructed in the art of flying as he may deem necessary; and hereafter the age of officers shall not be a bar to their first detail in the aviation section of the Signal Corps, and neither their age nor their rank shall be a bar to their subsequent details in said section; and when it shall be impracticable to obtain from the Army officers suitable for the aviation section of the Signal Corps in the number allowed by law the difference between that number and the number of suitable officers actually available for duty in said section may be made up by appointments in the grade of aviator, Signal Corps, and that grade is hereby created. The personnel of said grade shall be obtained from especially qualified civilians who shall be appointed and commissioned in said grade, but whenever any aviator shall have become unsatisfactory he shall be discharged from the Army as such aviator. The base pay of an aviator, Signal Corps, shall be $150 per month, and he shall have the allowances of a master signal electrician and the same percentage of increase in pay for length of service as is allowed to a master signal electrician.

"The total enlisted strength of the Signal Corps shall be limited and fixed from time to time by the President in accordance with the needs of the Army, and shall consist of master signal electricians; sergeants, first class; sergeants; corporals; cooks; horseshoers; privates, first class; and privates; the number in each grade being fixed from time to time by the President. The numbers in the various grades shall not exceed the following percentages of the total authorized enlisted strength of the Signal Corps, namely: Master signal electricians, 2 per cent; sergeants, first class, 7 per cent; sergeants, 10 per cent; corporals, 20 per cent; privates, first class, 45 per cent; and privates, 16 per cent. Authority is hereby given the President to organize, in his discretion, such part of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Signal Corps into such number of companies, battalions, and aero squadrons as the necessities of the service may demand. Enlisted men of the Signal Corps who are now qualified, or who may hereafter qualify, as expert military telegraphers, shall receive $5 a month; as first-class military telegraphers, $3 a month; as military telegraphers, $2 a month; all in addition to their pay, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, but no enlisted man shall receive at the same time additional pay for more than one of the classifications named."

Section 22 by striking out the period at the end thereof, substituting therefor a colon, and adding thereto the following: "Provided, That one of the enlisted men at each main recruiting station who has been detached for duty at such station under the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, have the rank, pay, and allowances of a first sergeant of Infantry."

Section 24 by amending all that part of the second paragraph thereof down to the first proviso in said paragraph to read as follows:

"Vacancies in the grade of second lieutenant, however arising, in any fiscal year shall be filled by appointment in the following order: (1) Of cadets graduated from the United States Military Academy during the preceding fiscal year for whom vacancies did not become available during the fiscal year in which they were graduated; (2) under the provisions of existing law of enlisted men, including officers of Philippine Scouts, between the ages of 21 and 34 years whose fitness for promotion shall have been determined by competitive examination; and of members, including officers, of the Organized Militia, the National Guard, or Naval Militia, between the ages of 21 and 34 years who have had at least 90 days' actual Federal military service during the calendar year 1916 or subsequent thereto and whose fitness for promotion shall have been determined by examination; (3) of commissioned officers of the National Guard between the ages of 21 and 27 years not otherwise provided for herein; (4) of members of the Officers' Reserve Corps between the ages of 21 and 27 years; (5) of such honor graduates between the ages of 21 and 27 years of distinguished colleges as are now or may hereafter be entitled to preference by general orders of the War Department; and (6) of candidates from civil life between the ages of 21 and 27 years; and the President is authorized to make the necessary rules and regulations to carry these provisions into effect"; by inserting after the second proviso thereof the following: "Provided further, That the President is hereby authorized to waive the maximum age limit prescribed by law for appointment as second lieutenant in the Regular Army in the case of any candidate for such appointment who has successfully completed or who may hereafter successfully complete the required examination for such appointment before arriving at the prescribed maximum age limit; but no appointment of any such candidate shall be made to any vacancy which did not exist upon the date he successfully completed the required examination for appointment; and persons appointed under the provisions of this proviso shall be appointed with the rank and date of rank with which they would have beeen appointed if their appointment had not been prevented by reason of the maximum age limit prescribed by law."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I suggest an amendment, at the end of line 7, to insert:

And by amending the last proviso of said section by substituting the word "colonel" for the word "major" therein.

I send the amendment to the desk.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On what page?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. On page 9. It simply gives the rank of colonel to a retired officer instead of major, as the law now provides.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to without objection. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

Section 28 to read as follows:

"SEC. 28. Pay of certain enlisted men: Hereafter the monthly pay of enlisted men of certain grades of the Army created in this act shall be as follows, namely: Quartermaster sergeant, senior grade, Quartermaster Corps; master hospital sergeant, Medical Department; master engineer, senior grade, Corps of Engineers; and band leader, Infantry, Cavalry, Artillery, and Corps of Engineers, $75; hospital sergeant, Medical Department; and master engineer, junior grade, Corps of Engineers, $65; sergeant, first class, Medical Department, $50; ordnance sergeant, Ordnance Department; quartermaster sergeant, Quartermaster Corps; sergeant, first class, Corps of Engineers; regimental supply sergeant, Infantry, Cavalry, Field Artillery, and Corps of Engineers; battalion supply sergeant, Corps of Engineers and separate battalion of any arm or branch; and assistant engineer, Coast Artillery Corps, $45; assistant band leader, Infantry, Cavalry, Artillery, and Corps of Engineers, and sergeant bugler, Infantry, Cavalry, Artillery, and Corps of Engineers, $40; stable sergeant, Medical Department; musician, first class, Infantry, Cavalry, Artillery, and Corps of Engineers; supply sergeant, mess sergeant, and stable sergeant, Corps of Engineers; sergeant, Medical Department, $36; supply sergeant, Infantry, Cavalry, and Artillery; mess sergeant, Infantry, Cavalry, and Artillery; cook, Medical Department and Ordnance Department; horseshoer, Infantry, Cavalry, Artillery, Corps of Engineers, Signal Corps, and Medical Department; stable sergeant, Infantry and Cavalry; radio sergeant, Coast Artillery Corps; motor sergeant of any arm or branch; and musician, second class, Infantry, Cavalry, Artillery, and Corps of Engineers, $30; chief mechanic, Infantry and Cavalry; chauffeur, first class, of any arm or branch; musician, third class, Infantry, Cavalry, Artillery, and Corps of Engineers; corporal bugler, Infantry, Cavalry, Artillery, and Corps of Engineers; corporal, Medical Department, $24; saddler, Infantry, Cavalry, Field Artillery, Corps of Engineers, and Medical Department; bugler, first class, Infantry, Cavalry, Artillery, and Corps of Engineers; mechanic, Infantry, Cavalry, Field Artillery, and Medical Department; chauffeur of any arm or branch; and wagoner, Infantry, Field Artillery, and Corps of Engineers, $21; assistant chauffeur of any arm or branch; bugler, Infantry, Cavalry, Artillery, and Corps of Engineers; and private, first class, Infantry, Cavalry, Artillery, Medical Department, and Ordnance Department, $18; private, Medical Department and Ordnance Department, $15.

"So much of the act approved July 24, 1917, as authorizes the grade of chauffeur, first class, with pay and allowances of a sergeant, first class, in the Signal Corps, and the grade of chauffeur with the pay and allowances of a sergeant in the Signal Corps, is hereby repealed, but nothing herein contained shall operate to reduce the pay or allowances of any soldier appointed to either of those grades prior to the date of the approval of this act, or to reduce the pay or allowances now authorized by law for any grade of enlisted men of the Army."

Section 31 by striking out the words "travel expenses and pay at the rate of their respective grades in the Regular Army during such periods of training," occurring in lines 9, 10, and 11, and substituting therefor the following: "From the date of their departure to place where ordered pay and allowances at the rate of their respective grades in the Regular Army, transportation, and reimbursement of cost of subsistence at such rate as may be fixed by the Secretary of War during travel from home to place where ordered and return to home, and subsistence in kind during period not in transit and while in service."

Section 42 by striking out the period at the end thereof, substituting therefor a colon, and adding the following: "Provided further, That upon the recommendation of the professor of military science and tactics of any such institution, the authorities thereof may discharge a member of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps from such corps and from the necessity of completing the course of military training as prerequisite to graduation."

Section 51, by striking out the words "prior to the date of this act," in line 3 thereof, and substituting therefor the words "prior to July 1, 1919."

Section 55, by amending the fifth paragraph thereof to read as follows:

"Enlisted men of the Enlisted Reserve Corps shall receive the pay and allowances of their respective grades, but only when ordered into active service and from the date of their departure to place where ordered, transportation and reimbursement of cost of subsistence at such rate as may be fixed by the Secretary of War during travel from home to place where ordered and return home and subsistence in kind during period not in transit and while in service: Provided, That said enlisted men shall not be entitled to retirement or retirement pay: Provided further, That when any enlisted man of the Enlisted Reserve Corps shall be ordered to active service for purposes of instruction or training he may be paid at any time after the date such order shall become effective for the period from the date of leaving home to date of return thereto as determined in advance, both dates inclusive, and such payment, if otherwise correct, shall pass to the credit of the disbursing officer making the same."

Section 69, by striking out the period at the end thereof, substituting therefor a semicolon and adding thereafter the following: Provided further, That in the Territory of Hawaii the National Guard may include citizens of the Philippine Islands."

Section 111, by inserting after the comma following the word "thereof." in the seventeenth line of said section, the following: "or, in grades above the rank of captain, from officers of the Regular Army."

Section 125, by striking out the period at the end thereof, substituting therefor a comma, and adding thereafter the following: Provided, That hereafter, upon the discharge or furlough to the Reserve of an enlisted man, all uniform outer clothing then in his possession, except such articles as he may be permitted to wear from the place of termination of his active service to his home, as authorized by this section, will be retained for military use; and within four months after such termination of his active service he shall return all uniform clothing, which he was so permitted to retain for wear to his home, by mail, under a franked label which shall be furnished him for the purpose, and in conformity with the instructions given him at the time of such termination of his active service; and in case he shall fail to return the same within such period, and in accordance with such instructions, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, suffer the punishment prescribed by this section: Provided further, That, upon the release from Federal service of an enlisted man of the National Guard called as such into the service of the United States, all uniform outer clothing then in his possession shall be taken up and accounted for as property issued to the National Guard of the State to which the enlisted man belongs, in the manner prescribed by section 67 of this act: And provided further, That when an enlisted man is discharged otherwise than honorably, all uniform outer clothing in his possession shall be retained for military use, and, when authorized by regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War, a suit of citizen's outer clothing to cost not exceeding $15 may be issued to such enlisted man: And provided further, That officers and members of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers may, regardless of the preceding provisions of this act, wear such uniform as the Secretary of War may authorize."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will state that that completes the amendments to the national-defense act, and what will now be read by the Secretary is entirely new matter that has been suggested in this emergency as necessary by the War Department. I call the attention of the Senate to it so that Senators may understand that this is perfectly new matter.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 2. That hereafter the number of privates, first class, in each arm of the line of the Army shall be, as nearly as practicable, 33⅓ per cent of the total number of privates, first class, and privates in such arm.

SEC. 3. That the service of graduates of the Military Academy may be utilized during the months of June, July, August, and September of the year in which they graduate as instructors at the citizens' training camps, and their graduation leave may be taken at the termination of their services as instructors at these camps.

SEC. 4. That hereafter, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, authorized mounts of officers who die in the service may be transported at public expense from their last duty station to such places within the limits of the United States as may be the home of their families, or as may be designated by their legal representatives or executors, or such mount may be disposed of as directed by such representatives or executors.

SEC. 5. That hereafter, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, transportation at public expense may be provided for the baggage of civilian employees who die in the service from their last duty station to such places within the limits of the United States as may be the home of their families, or as may be designated by their legal representatives or executors.

SEC. 6. That hereafter mileage to officers of the Corps of Engineers, Signal Corps, Ordnance Department, and Quartermaster Corps, traveling on duty in connection with work under the appropriations pertaining to their respective departments, shall be paid from the appropriations for the work in connection with which the travel is performed.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized in time of war, upon request to the Secretary of War, to extend the period during which money accounts covering expenditures from appropriations for the Army may be transmitted to the Auditor for the War Department after their receipt in the War Department from 60 to 90 days.

SEC. 8. That in the interest of the national defense, and for the better protection of life and property on said waters, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to prescribe such regulations as he may deem best for the use and navigation of any portions or area of the navigable waters of the United States or waters under the jurisdiction of the United States endangered or likely to be endangered by Coast Artillery fire in target practice or otherwise, or by the proving operations of the Government ordnance proving ground at Sandy Hook, N. J., or at any Government ordnance proving ground that may be established elsewhere on or near such waters, and of any portion or area of said waters occupied by submarine mines, mine fields, submarine cables, or other material and accessories pertaining to seacoast fortifications, or by any plant or facility engaged in the execution of any public project of river and harbor improvement; and the said Secretary shall have like power to regulate the transportation of explosives upon any of said waters: Provided, That the authority hereby conferred shall be so exercised as not unreasonably to interfere with or restrict the food-fishing industry, and the regulations prescribed in pursuance hereof shall provide for the use of such waters by food fishermen operating under permits granted by the War Department.

To enforce the regulations prescribed pursuant to this section, the Secretary of War may detail any public vessel in the service of the War Department, or, upon the request of the Secretary of War, the head of any other department may enforce, and the head of any such department is hereby authorized to enforce, such regulations by means of any public vessel of such department.

The regulations made by the Secretary of War pursuant to this section shall be posted in conspicuous and appropriate places, designated by him, for the information of the public; and every person who and every corporation which shall willfully violate any regulation made by the said Secretary pursuant to this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500, or by imprisonment (in the case of a natural person) not exceeding six months, in the discretion of the court.

Offenses against the provisions of this section, or any regulation made pursuant thereto, committed in any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States where there is no court having general jurisdiction of crimes against the United States, shall be cognizable in any court of such place or Territory having original jurisdiction of criminal cases in the place or Territory in which the offense has been committed, with the same right of appeal in all cases as is given in other criminal cases where imprisonment not exceeding six months forms a part of the penalty, and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon such courts and such courts shall exercise the same for such purposes; and in case any such offense be committed beyond the territorial jurisdiction of any court having jurisdiction thereof, the offense shall be deemed and held to have been committed within the jurisdiction in which the offender may be found or into which he is first brought, and shall be tried by the court having jurisdiction thereof.

SEC. 9. That, in case of actual or threatened hostilities, any proceeds received from the operation of a public utility, in connection with engineer operations in the field overseas, shall be available for the purpose of such utility until the close of the fiscal year following that in which the proceeds are received, and a detailed report of such proceeds and application thereof shall be rendered to Congress on forms conforming as far as practicable to those used by American companies in reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission: Provided, That the provision of the act of March 23, 1910, making moneys arising from the disposition of serviceable quartermaster material available for the purposes of the appropriation throughout the fiscal year following that in which the disposition was effected, is hereby extended to apply to material supplied to the Army by the Engineer Department.

SEC. 10. That when any retired officer of the Army is, in the discretion of the President, employed on active duty and assigned to duty in an arm, corps, department, or organization, he shall, for all purposes except promotion, be considered an officer of such arm, corps, department, or organization while so serving, and shall be an extra number therein.

SEC. 11. That hereafter separate battalions, squadrons, or like units of any arm, corps, or department shall consist of such numbers and grades of commissioned officers and enlisted men as the President may prescribe.

SEC. 12. That there are hereby created in the Army the grades of corporal bugler and bugler, first class; and hereafter for each battalion and squadron headquarters of units in which the grade of bugler is now authorized, there shall be one corporal bugler, and for each company, battery, troop, or organization in which the grade of bugler is now authorized there shall be one bugler, first class.

SEC. 13. That there are hereby created in the Army the grades of motor sergeant, chauffeur, first class, chauffeur, and assistant chauffeur in each arm or branch thereof, and appointments made therein shall be in such numbers and for such organizations as the President may in orders from time to time direct and designate; and there are also hereby created the grades of battalion supply sergeant, separate battalion of any arm or branch; and chief mechanic, Infantry and Cavalry.

SEC. 14. That during the present war the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to enlist for service in the offices of the War Department or under its control or on detached service under its jurisdiction men outside the draft ages, and for the same purpose to draft men within such ages, who have been disqualified by minor physical defects for active service in the Army; to establish regulations under which such enlistments may be made, and to fix the pay and allowances of men so enlisted or drafted, which said pay and allowances shall not exceed those of enlisted men of the Regular Army.

SEC. 15. That the President is authorized to appoint, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to commission to the grade of captain in the Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, John Q. A. Brett, who was appointed to the grade of first lieutenant in the Quartermaster Corps pursuant to the act of August 29, 1916, and who had over 31 years' service as pay clerk, United States Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT EUREKA, UTAH.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield to me?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator for a moment.

Mr. KING. I report, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, without amendment, the bill (S. 3384) to amend the public building act approved March 4, 1913, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. It is a very brief bill, and its passage will save the Government money instead of taking money from the Treasury. I desire to add only a word in explanation of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah, has the bill for which he asks consideration been reported and is it on the calendar?

Mr. KING. The bill is not yet on the calendar, but it has been reported unanimously from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. SMOOT. Did my colleague ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Yes. The reason I am asking for the immediate consideration of the bill is this: There is an action pending in court to condemn a site for a public building, and it is being held up awaiting the passage of this measure. Some time ago an appropriation was made for the construction of a public building at Eureka, Utah. Under the eminent statute of the State suit was brought in the United States Court for the District of Utah. Under the general law of Congress the Federal Government, when it acquires a building site, must obtain the fee to the land. A title less perfect can not be accepted. In the town of Eureka most of the buildings occupied by the people have been erected upon ground the surface of which only is owned by the owners of the buildings. The town is situate upon mineral lands, and beneath the town are rich mineral deposits. The mineral rights are owned by one or more corporations engaged in mining. In the present case the owner of the ground beneath the surface is perfectly willing to give to the Government for a nominal consideration such title as may be necessary, except title to the minerals lying beneath the surface upon which the building will be erected.

As stated, the owners of buildings within the town have only the surface rights, but they are content with such title. Costly buildings are erected under those conditions. It would cost the Government a good many thousand dollars to condemn the mineral rights and obtain a fee-simple title. The mineral deposits are 600 or 700 feet beneath the surface. Of course, the amount that it would cost the Government is problematical, but it might extend into thousands of dollars. As stated, the residents of the town are satisfied with surface rights, and the Government is willing to accept a title less than the general law requires. The representatives of the Treasury Department are satisfied with this bill, and it has been reported from the committee. The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to accept a title which reserves or excepts all ores or minerals on the lands obtained for a building site, with the right of mining the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah for unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that the provision of the public-building act approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 876), which authorizes the acquisition of a suitable site, etc., at Eureka, Utah, be amended so as to add the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, accept a title which reserves or excepts all ores or minerals on the lands, with the right of mining the same.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY SERVICE OF SUBJECTS OF FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution 136, providing for the registration for military service of the subjects or citizens residing in the United States of a foreign country, and so forth.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 136) providing for the registration for military service of the subjects or citizens residing in the United States of a foreign country with whose Government the United States has concluded or hereafter concludes a convention or agreement consenting to such aliens being drafted into the military forces of the United States under the terms of the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," and all amendments thereto.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President may by proclamation set a day or days and place or places for the registration for military service of male aliens within designated ages residing within the United States who are citizens or subjects of a foreign country with whose Government the United States has concluded or hereafter concludes a convention or agreement in accordance with the terms of which its citizens or subjects within designated ages, residing within the United States, become under certain conditions liable to be drafted into the military service of the United States; that upon proclamation by the President stating the time and place of such registration it shall be the duty of any such alien, unless exempted from registration by the terms of the President's proclamation, to present himself for and submit to registration under the provisions of the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," and all amendments thereto, and he shall thereupon be registered in the same manner as those previously registered under the terms of said act; and every such alien shall be deemed to have notice of the requirements of said act and this joint resolution upon the publication by the President of any such proclamation, and any such alien who shall willfully fail or refuse to present himself for registration or to submit thereto shall be subject to all the provisions and liable to all the penalties provided in said act or any amendment thereto.

SEC. 2. That any such alien, when registered, shall be and remain liable to military service in the forces of the United States and subject to draft under the provisions of said act and all amendments thereto, and subject to such regulations as the President may have prescribed or may prescribe under the terms thereof, unless during the period specified in the convention or agreement concluded with the country whereof he is a citizen or subject and designated in the President's proclamation, he shall have enlisted or enrolled in the military forces of his own country or returned to his own country for the purpose of enlisting or enrolling in its military forces, or unless the country whereof he is a citizen or subject, through its diplomatic representatives, in accordance with the terms of the convention or agreement concluded between the United States and such foreign country, shall issue to such alien a certificate of exemption from military service.

SEC. 3. That any such alien, after the expiration of the time fixed by the President's proclamation within which he may enlist or enroll in the military forces of his own country, return to his own country for the purpose of military service, or be exempted through the diplomatic representative of the country whereof he is a citizen or subject, shall be and remain subject in all respects to the terms, provisions, liabilities, and penalties of said act and all amendments thereto, except as modified by the terms of the convention or agreement concluded between the United States and the country whereof such alien is a citizen or subject, and shall be subject to such regulations as the President may have prescribed or may prescribe under the terms of said act.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question of the Senator from Oregon involving a construction, if he will give it, of the language of section 2 of this joint resolution, which reads:

That any such alien, when registered, shall be and remain liable to military service in the forces of the United States and subject to draft under the provisions of said act and all amendments thereto—

And so forth.

Under that language is it contemplated to confine this only to aliens between the ages of 21 and 31?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Of course, that would be, I think limited by the terms of the treaty. I understand that this joint resolution mainly provides for the enrollment and registration of aliens and that the treaty which is now in discussion between the foreign embassies and our own is to regulate the age limit. I do not understand that this is intended to keep foreign subjects within the same draft age as does our act.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, if that is the case—I wanted to feel quite certain about it—there is no objection whatever to it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No. My understanding of it is that this merely provides for registration and enrollment, while the treaty provisions will regulate the age limit.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, two treaties with Great Britain and Canada have been sent here arranging for the drafting of friendly aliens. Of course, the treaties are reciprocal. Legislation will be required to carry out the provisions of the treaties. Those treaties were held up by the President because there were some changes in phraseology which seemed desirable. Everyone is entirely agreed as to the necessity of the treaties; but, Mr. President, I, for one, have not been able to give this joint resolution careful consideration. The questions involved in the treaties have taken the time of the Foreign Relations Committee during several sessions. The committee also has been consulting with the Secretary of State in regard to the terms of the treaties. The Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations [Mr. STONE] is not here, and I therefore wish very much that this joint resolution could be allowed to be delayed long enough to give us an opportunity to examine it, because it ought to harmonize with the treaties, and I am unable to say from one hasty reading whether or not it does. I wish it could be allowed to go over until we are a little better satisfied as to that.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I have no objection in the world to having the joint resolution go over; but when it was up for consideration here some time ago I hesitated to press it because the Foreign Relations Committee was considering the pending treaties; but after passing it over in order that it might be considered in that connection, I took the matter up again with the Judge Advocate General's office, and I was advised by the Judge Advocate General that the treaties would not conflict in any of their terms with any of the provisions of the joint resolution; in other words, it was simply that the treaty provisions were to be followed in the enforcement of the law. However, if the Senator from Massachusetts prefers to have the joint resolution go over, I shall consent to that.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, the treaty provisions are not yet agreed upon, but we have the benefit of advice from the War Department on the treaties. I do not wish to criticize anybody, but they seem to leave something to be desired in the way of phraseology.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will ask if the Senator desires that the joint resolution shall go over?

Mr. LODGE. Especially I ask it as the Senator from Missouri, the chairman of the committee, is not present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the joint resolution will go over.

ACQUIREMENT OF REAL ESTATE FOR GOVERNMENT USE.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 3802.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3802) authorizing appropriations made for the national security and defense, to be used for the purchase of real estate, or the use thereof, when such purpose is not specifically stated in said appropriations.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, after this bill was reported to the Senate by the Committee on Military Affairs I received a letter from the chairman of the Shipping Board suggesting certain amendments to the bill. It was out of the control of the committee and on the calendar of the Senate at that time, and therefore I am going to take the liberty of suggesting the amendments and asking that there be read a letter from the chairman of the Shipping Board to explain the purposes of the bill and amendments, and also a letter from the assistant general counsel of the Shipping Board. I think it might be well, Mr. President, to read the bill and the two letters, so that they may be considered in connection with the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read, as requested.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 3802) authorizing appropriations made for the national security and defense, to be used for the purchase of real estate, or the use thereof, when such purpose is not specifically stated in said appropriations, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all cases where appropriations have heretofore been, or shall hereafter be, made for the expenditures of any department, corps, or bureau incurred in connection with the national security and defense, and in the administration thereof for the purpose specified therein it becomes necessary, in the opinion of the head of such department, corps, or bureau, to acquire real estate, or some right, title, or interest therein, and any buildings and improvements thereon, it shall be lawful to acquire the same by purchase, lease, donation, or condemnation, or by any other means provided by law for such acquisition, and out of the appropriations aforesaid to meet the expenses of such acquisition, including the purchase price, or rent, of the land, and the buildings and improvements thereon, or the damages allowed to the owner or owners as compensation therefor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the letters referred to by the Senator from Oregon.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
EMERGENCY FLEET CORPORATION,
Washington, March 11, 1918.

Hon. GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR CHAMBERLAIN: It has been brought to my attention that S. 3802, introduced by you, has been reported back to the Senate with the recommendation that it be passed. The conditions which that bill apparently seeks to remedy have on numerous occasions and are now confronting this corporation, and, under our present laws, we have no authority to remedy them. There are frequent instances where persons, owning land adjacent to shipyards where vessels are being constructed by us for the United States, which land is essential for the construction of vessels, put upon such land values not only fictitious but prohibitory. Just at the present time there are three such cases:

In one a contractor desires a spur track from a railroad to his shipyard. The railroad is willing to put in this spur at its own cost, and the contractor is willing to pay a reasonable sum for the right of way. The owner of this particular piece of property is asking from three to four thousand dollars per acre for his land when other property of the same character in the immediate vicinity has recently sold at from five to eight hundred dollars per acre.

In another a shipyard desires a right of way for its employees across a piece of land adjoining the shipyard. The owner of this land declines to grant such right of way at any figure.

In the third case a small piece of land adjoining a shipyard is desired to facilitate the launching of vessels; in fact, it is essential. The owner of that land holds it at a price out of all reason when compared with other land in the immediate vicinity.

With a view of giving this corporation the authority to aid contractors in such instances, I have taken the liberty of preparing an amendment to S. 3802, which will, I believe, accomplish the desired result and will not alter the purposes of the bill as drawn. It provides that real estate or the temporary use thereof may be requisitioned. It will, I think, be quite evident to you that the power of condemnation is not sufficient in these times of emergency when immediate action is necessary. If, to get the use of a piece of land, it is necessary to go through condemnation proceedings it is altogether probable that the need for such land will cease to exist by the time such proceedings are completed The amendment provides that where land or the use thereof is requisitioned the payment of just compensation shall be made to the owner, with the right to appeal to the courts in the event the compensation awarded is deemed insufficient by the owner.

I hope very much that you will approve this amendment and, if you do, that you will give it your support.

Sincerely, yours,

EDWARD N. HURLEY, President.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
EMERGENCY FLEET CORPORATION,
Washington, March 26, 1918.

Hon. GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR CHAMBERLAIN: Referring to our telephone conversation of this date and Mr. Hurley's letter of March 11:

There are now a half dozen or more instances in which this corporation is being called upon to pay exorbitant prices for real estate essential for shipbuilding purposes. If we had the power to requisition the temporary use of such property or the property itself and pay just compensation for it, it would save the Government not only a considerable sum of money, but would expedite the shipping program in several instances. The desirability of the proposed amendment to S. 3802 has been brought to my attention so forcefully in these concrete cases that I can not help but feel it is of extreme importance to the Government. I hope, therefore, that you will not allow it to be overlooked.

In the event you have misplaced the bill as it is proposed to be amended, I inclose an additional copy. Should you desire to be informed with regard to the particular instances indicating the importance of this matter, I will be more than pleased to call upon you at any time agreeable to you.

Sincerely, yours,

WILLIAM H. WHITE, JR.,
Assistant General Counsel.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendments stated.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. With the Senator's permission, I will say I have not yet submitted the amendments. I wanted to have the letters first read, and then to submit the amendments which have been proposed.

Mr. WARREN. Very well.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I can state the amendments generally, and then I will send them to the Secretary's desk. The Shipping Board desires to have the title of the bill amended by inserting after the word "purchase," in the second line of the title, the words "condemnation or requisition"; to insert in line 4, after the word "any," the words "board, corporation"; and in line 8, after the word "such," to insert the words "board, corporation." The amendment extends the provisions of the bill to cover such organizations. Also after the words "it shall be lawful to," to insert "requisition the same, including the requisitioning of the temporary use thereof, or to"; and in line 6, page 2, after the word "thereon," to insert the words "or just compensation therefor."

Then there is an amendment to be known as section 2, which has been proposed to the bill and which I will ask the Secretary to read. It extends the provisions of the bill quite largely.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That whenever any real estate or some right, title, or interest therein, or any buildings and improvements thereon, are acquired by requisition or condemnation hereunder, the said board, corporation, department, corps, or bureau shall determine and make just compensation therefor, and if the amount thereof so determined is unsatisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same, such person shall be paid 75 per cent of the amount so determined and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as added to the said 75 per cent will make such amount as will be just compensation for the property or interest therein so taken, in the manner provided for by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code.

And whenever any said board, corporation, department, corps, or bureau shall requisition any property or rights, or upon the filing of a petition for condemnation hereunder, immediate possession may be taken by the said board, corporation, department, corps, or bureau, of such real estate, buildings, or improvements thereon to the extent of the interests to be acquired therein, and the same may be immediately occupied and used, and the provision of section 355 of the Revised Statutes: Provided, That no public money shall be expended upon such land until the written opinion of the Attorney General shall be had in favor of the validity of the title, nor until the consent of the legislature of the State in which the land is located has been given, shall be, and the same are hereby, suspended as to all land acquired hereunder.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I would not hesitate for a moment to grant the Government all the power necessary for the proper organization of the military forces and their supply during this war; I would not hesitate to give the broadest powers of condemnation, but I call the attention of the Senator from Oregon to the fact that this bill is not confined to the period of the war; it is in the nature of permanent legislation; and, if it passes, any department of the Government, after receiving from Congress an appropriation for any purpose whatsoever, can go out and without let or hindrance condemn anything in sight and pay for it under the appropriation, if it is all appropriate or related to it. I do not think that the Congress should indulge in legislation of that kind. It is a pretty broad power to confer even in time of war.

May I call the attention of the Senate to one embarrassing instance that came up in connection with the power of condemnation as exercised by the War Department? I refer to the famous case of Kent Island. Whether it was the influence of Congress or of the Representatives from the State of Maryland, who prevented the condemnation and seizure of that large tract of territory, inhabited by a considerable number of people who, with their ancestors, had lived there for 200 years, I am not entirely certain; but it was the voice of somebody in Congress, and perhaps of Congress itself, that prevented that thing which a great many of us thought was an outrage.

This bill apparently would give unlimited power to each and every department of the Government once it received an appropriation to purchase ammunition or to undertake any governmental function whether in connection with the war or not—and it may be entirely removed from the war—the right to go out and condemn property. I repeat, that I do not think the Congress should indulge in legislation of that character.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I think the Senator's suggestion is a good one. I think the authority ought to be confined to the period of the war, if the bill does not do that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does not.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I would be glad if the Senator would suggest an amendment to provide that the bill shall be effective only during the period of the war.

Now, let me say to the Senator that this bill came to us from the War Department as it was read at first without the amendments. I think the bill as it came to us from the War Department was ineffective, because it did not provide for any distinct or special method of condemnation or payment in case of condemnation. It was the Shipping Board that sent up the suggestion to add section 2, which gave that power. I think the amendment is a wholesome one and ought to be adopted, if the bill itself is enacted into law, but I hope the Senator will suggest an amendment limiting the duration of the proposed law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me say first that I have no objection to the second section, which the Senator from Oregon proposes as an amendment to the bill, because it provides some kind of phraseology, at least, under which these powers should be exercised; but I should think that, on line 3, page 1, after the word "That," the very first word of the bill, it would be wise to insert the words "during the present war." I offer that as an amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am perfectly willing to have those words added, so far as I can assent to the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But even with the adoption of that amendment, I will confess to the Senator from Oregon that I am a little nervous about this kind of legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 3, after the word "That," it is proposed to insert the words "during the present war."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 4, after the word "any," it is proposed to insert the words "board, corporation"; in line 8, after the word "such," to insert the words "board, corporation"; on page 2, line 1, before the word "acquire," to insert the words "requisition the same, including the requisitioning of the temporary use thereof, or to"; and in line 6, after the word "thereon," to insert "or just compensation therefor."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the fact that section 2, which is proposed as an amendment, provides:

And whenever any said board, corporation, department, corps, or bureau shall requisition any property or rights, or upon the filing of a petition for condemnation hereunder, immediate possession may be taken by the said board, corporation, department, corps, or bureau, of such real estate, buildings, or improvements thereon to the extent of the interests to be acquired therein, and the same may be immediately occupied and used, and the provision of section 355 of the Revised Statutes.

Then there is a proviso which reads:

Provided, That no public money shall be expended upon such lands until the written opinion of the Attorney General shall be had in favor of the validity of the title.

The first portion of the amendment authorizes the immediate possession and use, while the second proviso is to the effect that the land can not be used for new buildings or any money expended until complete title has been obtained. Now, there might be many instances where the Government might desire land for a cantonment or land for a shipyard, and there might be the interest of heirs of deceased persons which it would require months, and possibly even years, to extinguish. It seems to me that under this provision we are simply depriving the Government of the right to the immediate use which is granted in the previous portion of the same amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think that does not prohibit the immediate use of it. It simply requires that before making final, full settlement that they shall have title.

Mr. McCUMBER. No, Mr. President; it does not say that the money shall not be paid until final settlement. It says that no money shall be expended upon the premises by the Government until the title secured is made perfect. The language is:

Provided, That no public money shall be expended upon such land until the written opinion of the Attorney General shall be had in favor of the validity of the title.

Now, it does seem to me that that ought to be out. The Government ought to be entitled to take possession of that land immediately, if it needs it, no matter what the title is, and extinguish the title, and pay the final amount due whenever the adverse title of anyone shall have been extinguished.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It was the purpose of the bill to allow possession to be taken, but not for the land to be paid for until the title had been approved. While I did not confer with the Shipping Board about the matter, I think it possible that that was intended to protect the Government in case there was a defective title and some minor board was undertaking to acquire title. It required the highest law officer of the Government to pass on the title before final payment was made. I think under the provisions of the bill, however, notwithstanding that clause, the Government could still take possession.

Mr. McCUMBER. This allows the Government to take possession; but I again want to make clear to the Senator that it is not a question of possession. This amendment prohibits the Government from expending any money——

Mr. WARREN. Erecting buildings.

Mr. McCUMBER. Erecting buildings, or expending any money upon the land, until the written opinion of the Attorney General shall be had in favor of the validity of the title. If it were limited simply to the matter of paying for the land, of course it would meet what the Senator says was the intention.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let me call the Senator's attention to section 355 of the Revised Statutes. That section provides as follows:

No public money shall be expended upon any site or land purchased by the United States for the purposes of erecting thereon any armory, arsenal, fort, fortification, navy yard, customhouse, lighthouse, or other public building, or any kind whatever, until the written opinion of the Attorney General shall be had in favor of the validity of the title, nor until the consent of the legislature of the State in which the land or site may be to such purchase has been given—

And so forth.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is all right in times of peace, and that was applicable in times of peace; but the very purpose of this bill is to authorize the Government to take immediate possession of the land and to erect thereon such buildings as the Government may need, and that whole provision in the law would prevent the Government from doing so if it is reenacted into this legislation. I insist, Mr. President, that that ought to go out.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is very much merit in the contention of the Senator. I should be glad to have him suggest an amendment that would do that. I concede that it might be susceptible of the construction that the Senator insists upon, and that the Government might take the land and still not be able to use it under the restriction contained in the proposed amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, it seems to me the only amendment that we need is to strike out the provision after the word "used," namely:

and the provision of section 355 of the Revised Statutes: Provided, That no public money shall be expended upon such land until the written opinion of the Attorney General shall be had in favor of the validity of the title, nor until the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same is located has been given—

I see, Mr. President, that I have been laboring under a false impression, because I notice at the end of the section this provision—shall be, and the same are hereby, suspended as to all land acquired hereunder.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That was the purpose of the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. I had not read that completely over. I simply heard the reading by the Secretary of that portion, and it did not seem to me to be applicable; but as I read the balance of this, I certainly think that it is suspended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I said a moment ago to the Senator from Oregon (Mr. CHAMBERLAIN) that I still was a little nervous about this kind of legislation. I call his attention to this language:

That during the present war in all cases where appropriations have heretofore been, or shall hereafter be, made for the expenditures of any department, corps, or bureau incurred in connection with the national security and defense—

That expression, "incurred in connection with the national security and defense," is one which can be construed with the greatest degree of elasticity. That might be construed to grant to the Fuel Administration, for instance, the right to use any appropriation made by it in connection with the condemnation of real estate or the condemnation of coal mines on the ground that that was connected with the national security and defense. It might also be used by the Food Administration and construed by them so as to grant them the same power to condemn real estate of any kind, character, or description, or requisition it, on the ground that it was in the interest of the national security and defense; and one might go on for some time and conjure up the possibilities of this act under that rather loose language. Pretty nearly everybody working for the Government, whether he be working in the Fish Commission or in the Post Office Department, has an idea that he is working for the national security and defense; and if he can take advantage of such language, if it is possible to stretch the meaning of that language, he will do it.

I am wondering if the Senator from Oregon and other Senators present would not be just as well satisfied with this if we confined this rather extensive power to the War Department, the Navy Department, the United States Shipping Board, and the Emergency Fleet Corporation? They are the departments of the Government that are actually engaged in waging the war, and using materials and property in making their preparations.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks the bill as drawn would cover a case like this: If one of the departments of the Government had received an appropriation of $10,000,000, and in that appropriation it specifically states that $100,000 could be spent for the purpose of purchasing real estate, and instead of spending the $100,000 for real estate they had spent over half the $10,000,000, would this bill cover such a case? I ask the question because it says "appropriations heretofore or hereafter made."

Mr. WADSWORTH. It would legalize the expenditure of $5,000,000, whereas it was the original intention of the Congress to spend only $100,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if information that I have received is correct, the case that I have cited is not nearly as bad as cases that have really existed. The ones that I have heard of not only cover hundreds of thousands of dollars, but they cover millions and millions of dollars, and when I first heard the bill read I was fearful that the object of this bill is to cover all such cases where appropriations have been made in a lump sum and specific language has been used appropriating a limited amount of that appropriation for the purchase of lands. If this bill passes, I am fearful that if all of such appropriations had been used for the purchase of lands the same would be legalized.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield while I ask my colleague a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KING. Under the case just instanced by the Senator from Utah, would the auditor having the proper control or audit of that appropriation pass a warrant drawn for more than the $100,000 authorized?

Mr. SMOOT. I think the difficulty the departments are facing is the one that the Senator has suggested. I may be mistaken about this bill, but it does seem to me that the language is so broad that it would, if passed, authorize the payment of the money whether it had been directly appropriated for that purpose or not, just so long as the expenditure is within the amount of the original appropriation to the department.

Mr. KING. It occurs to me that if an appropriation were made for a specific amount and a specific purpose and those having charge of the appropriation exceeded it, as indicated by the Senator from Utah, and particularly exceeded it in such a manner as to double, treble, and perhaps quadruple or more the appropriations, they ought to be removed from public office. They ought to be impeached if they can not be removed in any other way, because that is such a flagrant offense, such a flagrant violation of public duty, that no man ought to be permitted to hold office who, with a specific appropriation of $100,000, would spend a million or more.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, of course I will say to my colleague that it is a violation of existing law, but the existing law is violated by every department of this Government every year as to the expenditure of money that has not been appropriated and then requests are made for deficiencies, and it has been violated so often that no notice is taken of it by Congress. But that is not the case to which I had reference. I do not say that the information that I received yesterday is correct; I have not had the time to look it up; but I was told only yesterday that legislation would be asked for covering just such cases as I have mentioned, and when this was read from the desk, not having examined it, I wondered whether this legislation was not for that identical purpose, because it specifically refers to appropriations heretofore made for specific purposes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I concede to the Senator from New York that the authority given in this bill is very, very broad, and I am inclined to agree with the statement of the Senator from Utah that it will be measurably retroactive in its effect, and possibly will validate expenditures that have been made; but I have not much fear of the law being used to the injury of the Government in this emergency. As a matter of fact, I would not want to sponsor the bill at any other time than this; but I agree with the Senator from New York that that ought to be limited to the Army, to the Navy, and to the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and not let it go out and be utilized by all of the little boards in the country for any purposes for which they might want to utilize it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. KING. Would not the Senator be willing to go further, and add to it an amendment to this effect:

Provided, That this shall not be construed to legalize any expenditure heretofore made for which there was no authorization by Congress.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I would be perfectly willing to have that go in, Mr. President. I think it ought to be in. If there is any purpose to validate illegal acts or extravagant acts which were not authorized by the statute, it ought to be guarded against in this measure; and I think that is a good suggestion.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it would be better if my colleague used the words "or any appropriation made directly therefor." In other words, it would be better to have it so that it would not apply to any purpose other than those that were directly appropriated for, so that the purchase of land could not be made unless it was directly appropriated for.

Mr. KING. If I apprehend the meaning of my colleague, I think his suggestion is a good one, and it would meet with my approval.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I move to amend the bill by striking out, on lines 4 and 5, these words:

Any department, corps, or bureau incurred in connection with the national security and defense—

And substituting therefor the following words:

The War Department, the Navy Department, or the Emergency Fleet Corporation—

So that it will read:

That during the present war in all cases where appropriations have heretofore been, or shall hereafter be, made for the expenditures of the War Department, the Navy Department, or the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and in the administration thereof—

And so forth. Is that satisfactory to the Senator?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am satisfied to have that done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York and the Senator from Oregon a question, purely for information. To what do the words in the seventh line, "for the purpose specified," refer? Do those words refer to the purpose specified in the appropriation, or do they refer to the words "national security and defense"?

Mr. WADSWORTH. My opinion is that they refer to the words used in the appropriation act; but I will admit to the Senator that it is very difficult to say offhand.

Mr. CUMMINS. If they refer to the words of the appropriation act, or the object of the appropriation act, I think they would be unobjectionable; but if they refer to the phrase "national security and defense"——

Mr. WADSWORTH. That has been stricken out. I took particular pains to have that stricken out when the amendment which I have just offered was adopted.

Mr. CUMMINS. Not the words "national security and defense"?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUMMINS. What words were substituted?

Mr. WADSWORTH. "The War Department, the Navy Department, or the Emergency Fleet Corporation."

Mr. CUMMINS. Without any qualification for any purpose whatever?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Their only purpose is the national security and defense, and that is implied. I do not want those words, "national security and defense," applied to all the departments of the United States Government. By inserting the words "during the present war," I think the intent of this act will be quite clear.

Mr. CUMMINS. How does it read, then, after the adoption of the amendment of the Senator?

Mr. WADSWORTH (reading)—

That during the present war in all cases where appropriations have heretofore been, or shall hereafter be, made for the expenditures of the War Department, the Navy Department, or the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and in the administration thereof for the purpose specified therein—

That is, in the appropriation—it becomes necessary, in the opinion of the head of such department—

And so forth.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think that would cure it——

Mr. WADSWORTH. That was my opinion.

Mr. CUMMINS (continuing). Although I thought before, and I think still, that if the words "national security and defense" remained in the statute the purpose would be referable to those words instead of the appropriation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. That is what I did not want.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, at the end of the section, I move to insert the following:

Provided, That nothing herein shall be deemed to legalize any expenditure heretofore made by any of said departments unless there shall have been made a specific appropriation therefor.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I accept the amendment so far as I can, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of section 1, the following:

Provided, That nothing herein shall be deemed to legalize any expenditure heretofore made by any of said departments unless there shall have been made a specific appropriation therefor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly to have to bring this same matter to the attention of the Senate again; but before my amendment was offered, limiting the act to the War and Navy Departments and the Emergency Fleet Corporation, another amendment had been offered, inserting the words "board, corporation." That must be corrected in order to conform with the language which my amendment inserted in the bill. I therefore ask that the bill be further amended by striking out of the former amendment the words "board, corps, or bureau," so that it shall only refer to the department or corporation.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That amendment will have to be made in one or two places, I think.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to that, Mr. President, to make it conform to the first amendment of the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The SECRETARY. It is also proposed to amend the title so as to agree with the body of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that will be done.

MEDALS FOR SERVICE ON MEXICAN BORDER.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the Senator from New York is very much interested in Senate bill 3874, and I request that it be taken up for consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3874) providing medals for certain persons.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "device," to insert "and ribbon"; in line 6, after the words "of the," to strike out "Regular Army and the"; in line 10, after the word "border," to strike out "or with the American expeditionary forces in Mexico"; in line 11, after the word "sixteen," to strike out "to" and insert "and"; on page 2, line 1, after the words "nineteen hundred and," to strike out "eighteen, inclusive" and insert "seventeen, and who are not eligible to receive the Mexican-service badge heretofore authorized by the President"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to procure a bronze medal, with suitable device and ribbon, to be presented to each of several officers and enlisted men and families of such as may be dead, of the National Guard, who, under the orders of the President of the United States, served not less than four months in the service of the United States on the Mexican border in the years 1916 and 1917, and who are not eligible to receive the Mexican-service badge heretofore authorized by the President; Provided, That such medals shall not be issued to men who have, subsequent to such service, been dishonorably discharged from the service, or deserted.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $7,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of carrying this act into effect.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 8, it is proposed to strike out all after the word "served" down to and including the words "United States" in line 9, in the following words:

Not less than four months in the service of the United States.

So that, if amended, it will read:

Who, under the orders of the President of the United States, served on the Mexican border.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the object of this amendment is to permit the medal and ribbon to go to those members of the National Guard who were ordered away from the Mexican border during the excitement incident to the consideration of the Adamson bill in Congress before the expiration of four months of service. Senators may remember that it was expected at that time that labor disturbances might occur in the crowded railroad centers, and it was thought best to have troops where they could be readily utilized. This medal and ribbon goes to the 80,000 National Guard troops who served on the border, and, as I understand, represented every State in the Union. It gives them the recognition to which it seems to me they are entitled. I think these men who left their homes and their businesses and offered their services to their country ought to receive this consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask that the bill be read, and also the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. The bill is entitled "A bill providing medals for certain purposes." As amended the bill reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to procure a bronze medal, with suitable device and ribbon, to be presented to each of the several officers and enlisted men, and families of such as may be dead, of the National Guard who, under the orders of the President of the United States, served—

At that point the proposed amendment of the Senator from New York occurs, striking out the words "not less than four months in the service of the United States," so that it will read:

who, under the orders of the President of the United States, served on the Mexican border in the years 1916 and 1917, and who are not eligible to receive the Mexican service badge heretofore authorized by the President: Provided, That such medals shall not be issued to men who have, subsequent to such service, been dishonorably discharged from the service, or deserted.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $7,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of carrying this act into effect.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to see these boys receive a ribbon, but it seems to me that would be sufficient. We ought not to cheapen the medals we give. We shall have to give medals for heroism and bravery. If we are going to cheapen the medal like this, what is the medal worth?

I do not like such legislation as this. I wish it would go over, and let us consider this matter when we are further along in the war. If we give a bronze medal and a piece of ribbon just because a man might have been on the Mexican border, where is it going to lead to? What kind of medals are you going to give for heroism and bravery in the case of the boys that go abroad? If you give a bronze medal just for a man going down on the Mexican border, it cheapens it. That is the point I make. I do not think we ought to cheapen it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I was going to ask, if medals are to be given to everybody who was on the Mexican border through that summer, what is to be given to the men who, probably to-day or to-morrow, will be flung on the German lines in the counterattack? What are they to have? Is there to be no distinction?

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the War Department has awarded a medal to those men who crossed over into Mexico under Pershing. They were all of the Regular Army, but the members of the National Guard received no recognition.

Mr. LODGE. There were some men in the Regular Army who were ambushed and killed, if I remember rightly.

Mr. CALDER. But there were some 30,000 other Regular soldiers who rendered no more important service than the National Guard troops on the border.

Mr. LODGE. Did they all receive bronze medals?

Mr. CALDER. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will not the Senator let the bill go over? The question of medals ought to be taken up and considered later. If we take up this bill now, we distinguish Mexican border service from the war abroad. Let the whole matter be taken up together in one great, comprehensive bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I may say, in connection with what the Senator from North Carolina has said, that the Senate has passed a bill covering the whole ground of medals of honor which can only be bestowed in case of winning in actual battle. It also contains a provision for a distinguished-service medal. That bill has been favorably reported by the House and is on the calendar.

The President, evidently impatiently awaiting action upon that bill, I am unofficially informed, had a measure drawn up—a military order—which covered medals of honor and distinguished-service medals, and also a distinguished-service cross; but, attention being called to the present law as to the medal of honor, the order went out to issue a distinguished-service decoration in the way of a cross and another one in the way of a ribbon and medal. Those are for the Army generally, for a soldier who distinguishes himself in various ways but not to the extent that would entitle him under the law to receive the old medal of honor, which can be accorded only for exceptional gallantry in battle in the face of the enemy and at the risk of a soldier's life while performing some act not required in the line of regular duty of an enlisted man or officer. I am informed that lately another order has been promulgated bestowing medals or ribbons or service stripes, or some such decoration upon all the soldiers who served in the late Mexican expedition over the line in Mexico.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to see some ribbon or some mark of honor bestowed, but why give a medal?

Mr. CALDER. Since this bill was introduced I have learned that the War Department has accorded medals with ribbon to men who served on the Mexican border and were fortunate enough to be taken into the Pershing expedition which went into Mexico.

Mr. OVERMAN. They have already been given medals?

Mr. CALDER. A ribbon and medal has been given to the Regular troops that went over the border into Mexico with Gen. Pershing.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is cheapening the whole thing.

Mr. CALDER. I think not. I think it is a just recognition of the many thousands of National Guardsmen who left their homes from all the States of the Union and went to the border and served there, some of them as long as a year, at $15 a month. Most of them left their business at a great loss, and it is a recognition of the service rendered. These men were all ready to risk their lives if called upon. I hope the Senator will not object to the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. If they give a medal and a ribbon to the men who went across the line, I do not see why a soldier who stayed on this side should not receive it. The only point is that we are cheapening the matter of giving medals. I think acts of gallantry ought to be honored and some little mark, like a ribbon, might be given in this case. Some of those men were across the border for only three days.

Mr. CALDER. In fact, no one served there for less than two months, and I will say to the Senator there were several regiments from his own State.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know.

Mr. CALDER. However, I do not offer that as an inducement to have the Senator's approval of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. We had three or four thousand soldiers there from my State. Still I think they ought to be satisfied if they get a ribbon. As to giving them a medal, I do not think they would ask for it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is quite late in the afternoon, and I understand an executive session is desired, but I wish, if possible, to get consideration of Senate bill 3783. If any Senator objects to its consideration at this time I shall not press it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What is the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. It is the bill (S. 3783) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers and officers, who served in the Civil War and the War with Mexico," approved May 11, 1912.

I wish to say that it is general legislation, and it proposes to increase the pensions of those who served in the Civil War and in the Mexican War 90 days to a flat rate of $30 per month. We have already granted the widows $25 a month, and many of the soldiers are receiving $16.50, $22.50, and $25.50. The bill provides a flat rate of $30, with an increase, based upon length of service, where the soldier is over 72 years of age, beginning with $30, and increasing to $32, $35, $38, and $40.

I wish to say to the Senate there was not a vote against the bill by the Members present when it was under consideration by the committee.

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I ask the Senator if the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] is not opposed to the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know. I can not say; but if the Senator thinks so I shall not press it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think the Senator from Georgia is opposed to the bill, and he is absent.

Mr. SMOOT. With that suggestion I shall not ask for consideration of the bill now, but I wish to give notice that at the very earliest opportunity I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill for consideration.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 2, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 1, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Out of the deeps, with all the fervor of soul, we cry unto Thee, O God, our Heavenly Father, with undiminished faith in the overruling of Thy power.

We thank Thee for the cheering news which comes to us from the front; and we pray that our arms may continue their fervor and strike a decisive blow, which shall bring peace to a weary, warring world; that the effusion of blood may cease, and all men be permitted, under Thy providence, to follow the pursuits of peace and enjoy the fruits of liberty, truth, justice, and righteousness, to the glory and honor of Thy Holy Name, in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, March 30, 1918, was read and approved.

RATIFICATION OF PROHIBITION AMENDMENT BY TEXAS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has a communication from Governor Hobby, of Texas, announcing the ratification by that State of the prohibition amendment. It is not necessary that this communication be read. It will be filed in the archives of the House.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Indian appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 8696), disagree to all of the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I think the House ought to have an opportunity to examine these amendments. If the gentleman will defer this till to-morrow, I think there will be no difficulty.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the bill with the Senate amendments was printed on Friday last. Members have had two days in which to examine these amendments. I really wanted to get this bill into conference on Saturday. The time is running along here, and, as the gentleman from Wisconsin knows, it usually takes longer to get this Indian appropriation bill out of conference than any other appropriation bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not think there will be any difficulty about getting it into conference to-morrow morning.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. At the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin I withheld any effort to get this bill into conference on Saturday in order that he might have time to go over the Senate amendments.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit me, this morning some of the gentleman's colleagues called at my office and took up quite a little of my time about some Indian affairs. Otherwise I would have completed my examination of the amendments. I ask that this bill go over until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Can we not send it to conference this afternoon?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

STEAMSHIP "CALDERA."

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2469) to authorize the change of the name of the steamship Caldera to A. T. Kinney. This bill passed the Senate in September last and was reported favorably from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. It will take only a moment to pass it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed upon application of the owner, the Kinney Steamship Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, to change the name of the steamer Caldera, official No. 204864, to A. T. Kinney.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALEXANDER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed was laid on the table.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 9054), disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Agricultural appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to say to the Members of the House and to the gentleman from South Carolina that I have no desire to delay the consideration of this bill. On the other hand, I would like to expedite its consideration. I do think that the question involved in the amendment put on the bill in the Senate about the guaranteed price of wheat is of very great importance from whatever viewpoint it is considered. When this matter was up on Saturday the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] seemed to be fair and reasonable about it; and all I want is that there shall be a reasonable time for discussion of that proposition, and also that we shall have an opportunity to vote directly on that. I do not wish to embarrass the gentleman from South Carolina or to ask any assurance that it is not proper for him to give; and, assuming that what he said on Friday and Saturday will be the basis on which he will act, I shall not object this morning.

Mr. LEVER. I assure the gentleman from Oklahoma that the House will have an opportunity to vote on this proposition, and that a reasonable time for discussion will be had, as far as I am able to control the latter part of it.

Mr. GILLETT. Has the bill been reported from the committee?

Mr. LEVER. No; the bill is on the Speaker's table.

Mr. GILLETT. I thought it was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. LEVER. No; it is on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cancels the reference. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. LEVER, Mr. LEE of Georgia, Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi, Mr. HAUGEN, and Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan.

HOUSING FOR WAR NEEDS.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 10265.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, has an order been made displacing the Unanimous-Consent Calendar for this Monday?

The SPEAKER. Last Friday the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] got a unanimous-consent order that this housing bill should be a continuing order. Now, if we get through with this housing bill at any time to-day, the Chair will order the taking up of the Unanimous-Consent Calendar. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 10265.

The question being taken, Mr. WALSH demanded a division.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. Does not the House automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union under the order of the House made on Friday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. Originally it resolved itself in that way, but not now. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 81, noes 0.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10265.

The CHAIRMAN. When the bill was last under consideration the gentleman from Florida had 28 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Tennessee 23 minutes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ELLIOTT].

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is hardly necessary for me to talk for any considerable length of time this morning about this measure, and were it not for the fact that I am a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which reported this bill, I would not take up the time of this committee in impressing my views upon it.

I wish to say, however, that this is a most important war measure. The bill as it stands appropriates the sum of $50,000,000 for the purpose of building houses and dormitories around various factory districts in the United States where the United States is now engaged in manufacturing munitions for use in this war.

As I understand it, the bill authorizes in some instances the transportation of men from the cities out to these munition plants. In other words, the bill authorizes the taking care of these men who are called to the various places to work, either by housing them in permanent homes or in dormitories and in other instances furnishing transportation. I think that the membership of this House is fully cognizant of the conditions surrounding these great manufacturing institutions which have been hurriedly thrown together for the purpose of manufacturing munitions of war, and I believe the membership of the House realizes that this bill will have to become a law in order to carry out the purposes of the War Department.

But there are some other things connected with the bill. For instance, there will be an amendment offered on the floor of the House by the committee asking that this appropriation be increased from $50,000,000 to $60,000,000, an increase of $10,000,000; and this amount of money is to be used, as I understand it, for the purpose of building dormitories and houses in the city of Washington to take care of Government clerks brought here for work incident to the war.

The president of the Civil Service Commission appeared before our committee and stated that owing to the congested condition of the city at this time it was absolutely impossible to keep clerks here in the city of Washington after they were brought here, for the reason that the rents charged for board and rooms are so high that they could not live on their salaries and that they would stay here but a short time and then go home.

I believe that this amendment should be voted into the bill, for I believe it is a long step toward taking care of the profiteering about which we have heard so much complaint on the floor of the House in the last few weeks. I for one am not only going to support this bill but I am going to support this amendment, and I believe it is absolutely necessary as a war measure.

There is another thing, that while I believe the bill will pass I would like to call the attention of the Committee on Labor to. The Committee on Labor is called on under this bill to administer the expenditure of this vast sum of money. There has been a lot of complaint over the country, especially out in my country, from the fact that our people are called upon to leave business and work, labor night and day, to put the liberty loans and other war matters across, and then when there was to be an expenditure of money in the manufacturing of munitions of war, or the doing of any other war work, the manufacturing interests of the Middle West, although fully equipped to do so, have not been treated like the manufacturing interests of other parts of the country have been.

Now, if we are wanting to keep up the high degree of loyalty and patriotism in the country which now exists, it is only fair for us to see to it that the people who put up their money out in the country and far away from the seacoast have the same opportunity, when they can do it, to engage in the manufacturing of these war munitions and in these building operations that they do in other parts of the country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT].

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have the same interest in this bill that all patriotic Americans have, in that it is essentially a measure for the proper prosecution of this war. I have a special interest in it because this bill will affect the lives and well-being of thousands of men, women, and children in my district.

All of you, or many of you, know that the city of Bridgeport, Conn., is one of the great munitions centers in this country. That city in the census of 1910 had a population of 102,000 and in 1917 a population of 152,000, an increase of 50 per cent. Twenty-five or thirty thousand of these people have come into that city within the last two years. It is perfectly evident that any such influx of people constituting so large a proportion of the total population of a city must tend to great congestion and greatly overtax the housing facilities, the trolley facilities, the market facilities, and all other social facilities of a city. Brdgeport has for years been a prosperous manufacturing city, and is a self-reliant and well-governed city. Accordingly, as soon as this situation developed, the manufacturers individually and through housing associations and manufacturing associations started in to meet it. They raised several million dollars by stock subscriptions and by loans from the banks. They took care of, I suppose, approximately half of the additional population, and in normal times would have cared for all, but, as we all know, it has now come to a point where they can get neither men nor money nor materials without Government cooperation. Hence the necessity for this bill. That is patent to everyone, and I should not have taken up your time to argue on that general proposition because it is so self-evident, but there are one or two provisions in the bill that relate especially, I think, to certain manufacturing cities like Bridgeport, which should receive the attention of the committee.

I believe that the committee which reports this bill, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, has some amendments which cover these propositions, and I would like to ask the attention of the committee especially to paragraph (d) on page 2 of the first section of the bill and the report which relates to it. Paragraph (d) provides that the Secretary of Labor can use this money to aid in providing, equipping, managing, and maintaining houses, buildings, improvements, local transportation, and so forth, by loan or otherwise, to such person or persons as he may determine. In the report of the committee this reference is made to that section:

The bill provides—where, in the judgment of the Secretary of Labor, that is feasible—for the loan of money to persons for the construction of these houses, the committee being of the opinion that in proper cases, with the money properly secured, loans will be preferable to construction and ownership by the Government.

I think in that conclusion the great majority of this House will concur. Then the report says further:

The bill provides that houses erected by the Government shall, whenever the same is practicable, be of a temporary character, the idea of the committee being that where new plants have been established away from any permanent community it would not be wise to build permanent structures, as the same in all probability will be abandoned after the war is ended.

I suppose that may be true, and probably is true in many cases, but I must say it rather hurts my economic notions to start in to build houses with the idea that they are going to be torn down. That would especially be true in connection with any city like Bridgeport. Anyone knows who has had anything to do with social work in manufacturing cities that the housing problem is one of the great and constant problems. That is especially true of Bridgeport, and I may say it is true of every city of corresponding character. Therefore I hope that when the committee reports this amendment, which they propose, it will apply to the next section or to the end of the section, which says:

Provided, That houses erected by the Government under the authority of this act shall be of only a temporary character whenever it is practicable so to construct them.

In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, it would be better to make this sentence read just the other way; that is, that they shall be of a permanent character whenever it is practicable so to construct them.

And it is clear also that in a city like Bridgeport any construction of this character should be done in connection with the builders and contractors of the city itself. They know the local conditions; they know the workmen and where best to get materials. If it should be possible to build these buildings in partnership with these contractors, that, in my opinion, would be the ideal way, so that the citizens of Bridgeport would own the buildings when they are completed, subject only to a lien to the Government for such money as it might loan. In that case you would be sure of efficiency and sure of economy, because the contractor could not spend any Government money without spending his own at the same time. The contractor would be building in a community which he knows and which knows him and in which he would have to live after the buildings are completed. And then at the end of the war these buildings would be a permanent addition to the facilities of Bridgeport and they would be owned by people interested in Bridgeport and not by the Government. It is clearly undesirable that after the war is over the Government of the United States should be competing with private owners.

I am sure that it is the intent of the committee, and I hope that the act will be so administered that the general principles which I have laid down will govern, namely, permanency in construction and also economy in construction gained by cooperation between the Government and local contractors.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to Mr. MERRITT to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART].

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, of all the bills that have come before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds since I have been a member of it, I believe the one now before the House has had the most thoroughgoing and fullest consideration that I have ever seen exercised by that committee. The proposition to enter into a building plan for the housing of Government employees is a new enterprise for this country, and, first of all, the committee inquired specifically of the Secretary of Labor whether this step contemplated a permanent housing plan for Government employees. He emphatically said that it did not; that it was not the purpose to inaugurate such a permanent system, gave strong reasons therefor, and therein, I think, met with the approval of all of the members of the committee.

The situation confronting the Government at this time is one of unusual complexity. We have coming into Washington thousands of Government employees. They are sorely needed; in turn they need healthy living room; and in this connection we made inquiry as to the reports frequently circulated that many large houses in Washington are being occupied by a very few people, who refuse to offer any accommodation to the clerks that are coming here to help serve their country in the successful prosecution of this war. It was reported in one instance that a woman living practically alone in Washington has a house of 18 rooms and when she was appealed to by a local committee to set apart a few of these rooms for the occupancy of Government employees she flatly refused to comply with the request. There are many, many instances of this kind, not only here but elsewhere in the country where war work is being done. A part of the money that is authorized in this bill is to be used for the purpose of making surveys in cities like Washington, and I mean by surveys that a thorough canvass of all of the housing possibilities in such cities will be made, recorded, and, if need be, requisitioned, and thereby it is hoped that a great saving will be made of the money authorized in this appropriation.

It may be found by the Secretary of Labor that in many of the munition-making cities where employees are needed housing can be found by commandeering quarters and using them until the end of the war; and it is the consensus of opinion of the committee that if the boys going to the front are making these sacrifices, and if the people of the country are furnishing the means for the prosecution of this war, it is certainly up to the people who own large houses in munition manufacturing centers to make some provision and some sacrifice to the end that employees in Government work may be taken care of in a reasonably satisfactory way.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is possible now to commandeer such a house as the one the gentleman spoke of, where there were 16 available rooms not used?

Mr. BARNHART. I do not so understand it. I understand it can be commandeered for office purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will it be possible if this bill is passed to then do it?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; requisitioned.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That authority is carried in this bill?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; in lines 10 and 11 of first page.

But, Mr. Chairman, I want to especially call attention of the House to the precautionary features of this bill—the safeguarding of the Public Treasury and at the same time the expeditious plan of providing housing for Government employees. The Department of Labor is delegated to take charge of this important work. This is done at the suggestion of other departments of the Government and on approval of the President, I understand, as the Department of Labor is really the clearing house for all labor matters, and housing for Government laborers is so closely allied with the efficiency and the availability of labor that this function of proper and efficient housing belongs to that branch of the Government having to do with the diversified interests of labor in its relation to Government activities at this time of imperative need. But while we have delegated to the Secretary of Labor the management of this proposed housing enterprise, we have, in section 6 of this bill, provided that Congress shall know at the opening of each session just what has been done in the way of building, and, in detail, what expenditures have been made for. We also provide that this housing plan is only for temporary and emergency purposes, and that some of this authorization may be loaned to communities to build houses; some of it may be used for temporary dormitories; some of it for building permanent housing, to be sold at the end of the war; some of it for paying for improvements for requisitioned housing; and some of it for providing local passenger transportation from shops and offices, where Government work is done, to near-by cities, where good housing is available.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that the committee has been diligent in applying safe business methods in the preparation of this legislation and at the same time arranged it so the greatest possible speed can be made in the undertaking, which is an important war-time necessity.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. I will yield.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does the gentleman think it necessary even then to provide overhead expenses of over $300,000 in order to accomplish that purpose?

Mr. BARNHART. Well, the gentleman is not prepared to say because there are no means of ascertaining what these needs may be. The heads of the departments who appeared before the committee said that they were at sea as to just what these expenses might be. They might be less and they might be more than possibly could be estimated because——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend and revise his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], a member of the committee.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall not oppose this bill, because those charged primarily with the responsibility of conducting this war say that its enactment is indispensable to certain victory over our enemies. At the same time I can not refrain from expressing my doubts as to the wisdom of the policy involved. Sometimes when considering these vast and apparently reckless measures, I have wondered if Shakespeare did not have a prophetic vision of this fateful hour when he wrote:

> Oh, judgment, thou art flown to brutish beasts, and men have lost their reason.

I bow to the judgment of those who ought to know the situation better than I do, but I must confess that I have grave doubts as to the justice and expediency of so vast an enterprise. Perhaps I shall be criticized for it, but my heart and conscience compel me to say that I regret to see these millions of the hard-earned money of the people expended to furnish comfortable homes for those who are to labor at good wages and without being subjected to the dangers of war, while our boys, who are getting a mere pittance and sending part of that to the loved ones at home, are eating out of tin pans, sleeping in tents, wading through the grime and mud of the trenches and the battle fields, and baring their bodies to the deadly missiles of the Hun barbarians. It may be one of those inevitable sacrifices that must be made sometimes for the cause of liberty, but I must express the doubt that is in my mind as to whether the verdict of history will sustain it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. LANGLEY. Not at this point. I will later, if possible.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is most unfortunate that there are some people who are ever ready to impugn the motives of those who presume to criticize things that are done in connection with the conduct of the war. In my humble judgment those who do not permit the menace of being charged with pro-Germanism to deter them from just and helpful criticism, and who have the courage to say what they think, are in reality the most patriotic of public servants. I have a brother-in-law and three nephews who are already over there somewhere. I do not know where they are, but I do know that their highest ambition is to serve our country and to die if need be in its cause, and I know, too, that there is not a drop of blood in the veins of the families to which they belong that would not be proudly shed, if necessary, for the preservation of the Nation's honor and liberty [applause], and I think it would be monstrous to question my motives if in the execution of the high public trust which the people of my district have placed in my hands I should question the wisdom of some measure that may be proposed or seek to point out a better way. No one's contempt for the Kaiser can exceed mine. I look upon him as an egotistical, debased, bloodthirsty, sacriligious monster, the seven-headed beast rising up out of the sea, as foretold in the prophecies of Holy Writ, and when I think of the unspeakable outrages that he has caused to be perpetrated, of the women who have been debauched and the children who have been mutilated and sacrificed at his behest, of the rape of peaceful Belgium, of the torpedo that sank the Lusitania, and the other things he did that forced us into the war, of all of the atrocities committed by drunken Prussian libertines, of the crimes that he has committed against the civilization of the world, of the anguish and agony he has brought upon my own people and the balance of the human race, of his blatant claim of partnership with the Supreme Ruler, while he is violating every law, both sacred and profane, I sometimes fear that my hatred of him goes beyond the uttermost limits of the religion of the Holy Bible in which I so devoutedly believe. Surely the God of our fathers has ordained that there will be enacted over again the scene of the rich man and Lazarus, when the Kaiser, sizzling in fire and brimstone, will call on some of his victims for a drop of water to cool his parching tongue.

GERMAN INSCRIPTIONS AND BOOKS.

Mr. Chairman, sometimes I feel, when I think of all these things, that I would like to see every monument or inscription in this country that recognizes the German Kaiser as a civilized and Christian ruler demolished and effaced, and I know that my contempt for the so-called German kultur, as exemplified in this war, is such that I would like to see a bonfire made of every book in our schools and libraries that teaches it. [Applause.]

Feeling as I do toward him, no one can justly accuse me of aiding our enemies merely for the reason that I seek to point out evils which, if remedied, would, in my judgment, strengthen our country in this struggle, or because I conscientiously opposed conscription and favored the volunteer system, or because I believe and am willing to say that I think commercial greed helped to get us into this war, and, so believing, that I regard it as our duty to conscript the money of the rich as well as the bodies of the poor to help us win it; or because I favored the adoption of the McLemore resolution warning our citizens to keep off belligerent ships which I thought at the time would decrease the danger of our getting into the war; or because as an American citizen I object to things that I think ought not to be done. As well might it be contended that President Lincoln was disloyal to the Union because he did not agree with all that was done by those who were associated with him in defending it, and because he did not hesitate to displace any subordinate who did not measure up to the standard he required. It will be recalled that he even put a man of opposite political faith in his Cabinet because he thought the Union cause would be better served thereby—an example worthy the emulation of our present Chief Executive. I can not be justly criticized because I express my sympathy for the anguished families of the boys who have gone to the colors and seek to better their condition. As well might President Wilson be so arraigned because he has spoken words of sympathy even for the poor and struggling masses in Germany, who are suffering because of the errors of those in control of their Government.

Now, I yield to my friend from Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does not the gentleman feel that the time will surely come when the people will demand a reckoning for unnecessary expenditures?

Mr. LANGLEY. I thank my good friend for the suggestion. Of course they will demand a reckoning, and that was one of the thoughts in my mind when the gentleman interrupted me a few moments ago. You and I may not live to see it, but the day of reckoning will surely come. The people of our country are patient, self-sacrificing, and patriotic to a degree that, in my judgment, will challenge the admiration of generations yet unborn, and yet I fear that there is a disposition to be too reckless in these hasty and exciting times, when billions mean no more than millions used to mean to the average legislative mind. I think I know what is in the minds and hearts of the people on this question. It will not do, gentlemen, to gamble with the people's money. [Applause.]

I voted for the war resolution because I felt that the step, momentous as it was to us, was necessary in order to preserve the honor of our country and maintain its high status among the nations of the world and to guard and protect its future welfare. I have also been voting for these stupendous and staggering appropriations and tax bills and bond issues and for the grant of unprecedented powers to the Executive because I was persuaded to believe that they were essential to the winning of the war. Those who were charged by the supreme law of the land with the responsibility of conducting the war said so, and I felt it my duty as a patriotic American citizen to accept their word and give them my loyal support, which I have been doing, and shall continue to do, but I do not think it is my duty as a Member of the American Congress to do so blindly and without using my own best judgment as to what is right and what is wrong. If we have seemed to do so thus far, I can only plead in extenuation, so far as I am personally concerned, my most earnest desire to stand by the legally constituted authorities of our Government in this great crisis to the very limit of my judgment and conscience.

Mr. Chairman, I am a partisan in times of peace, and while I do not abandon my political convictions in time of war with a foreign foe, I think it is unpardonable to inject politics into our deliberations upon these war measures. I doubt if the political wrangle in another body has elevated the American Congress in public opinion, and I am quite sure that the partisan interference in pending local political struggles from a still higher source has not had a tendency to help make the world safer for democracy. [Applause.] As I have said before in this body, I believe that when the impartial historian writes the history of our participation in this war he will record an example of tolerance, patience, and patriotism on the part of the Republicans of the country, both in and out of Congress, that is unparalleled in the political history of the world. I am not going to mar that record by talking politics now. At the same time, Mr. Chairman, I can not resist the temptation to say that I hope, for the sake of the honor of our country and of a great political organization which has rendered much patriotic service at times, that the same historian will not be compelled, in the interest of truth and justice, to write another chapter recording that in these times of national stress and peril there were those who played the biggest and deepest game of politics that was ever staged since parties were first organized in this country.

Gentlemen, my fellow colleagues, let us be fair and square with each other, and above all let us not deceive ourselves. I wish to impress you above all things with the fact that I have naught in my heart but the highest regard and esteem for each and every one of you, and I could not forgive myself if I felt that I had said anything to-day, or since the beginning of my service here, which was intended to wound or do injustice to a single one of you. I am proud of the honor of serving in this great body, composed, without exception, of honorable, earnest public servants, and I wish for the good of the country that there was not a citizen in this land who has a less understanding and appreciation than I have of your integrity, your faithfulness, and loyalty to the country. I believe that, with a few exceptions, the people do so understand and appreciate this membership. We are all human beings, all citizens of a great Republic, temporarily entrusted with honor and power by the people whence springs all power of government in a democracy. Our service here, as well as our lives, must end in the not distant future. We are all devoted alike to the cause of our country and are earnestly desirous of performing our high duty with credit to ourselves and our people who have honored us. Hope and fear, joy and sorrow, good luck and bad, affect us all just as they do the balance of our fellow beings. Let us all rise above the motives engendered by selfish ends and meet these new duties and responsibilities with that true, patriotic spirit born of self-sacrifice, doing unto others as we would have others do unto us. [Applause.]

The President has said that the hand of God is upon the nations of the world. For aught we know God in his infinite wisdom may have permitted this catastrophe to come upon us in order to teach us some great lessons of human life that we need to learn, or having learned have forgotten, for I firmly believe that out of it all will come a truer conception of the real brotherhood of mankind. I believe that this war, terrible as it is, will teach us many needful, invaluable lessons. It will teach us economy, self-sacrifice, and tolerance. It will teach us how much we have been favored by God's merciful providence. It will teach us the importance of the development of the matchless resources He has given us and their proper conservation and uses. Above all, it will give us a better understanding of how the poor and needy of our land live, the privations they endure, and the importance to them of wise and protective legislation. It will teach those who, by inheritance or other good fortune, are able to live by purchasing the products of the labor of others; how much they owe to those who tread the slippery decks of the cars by night and by day; who till the soil on the hillsides, in the valleys, and upon the plains; who toil in the darkness and dangers of the mines and amid the whir of the spindles and the wheels; to those whose hands and faces scorch and burn before the seething, blazing fires of the furnaces; to those who stand upon their tired feet during the long, weary hours on the street cars, in the blacksmith shops, the lunch and dining rooms and kitchens, in Government buildings, and elsewhere; to those who rack their brains and strain their muscles to give the best that is in them to the service of our Government; and to those who suffer and bleed and die in rallying to its colors—to all this grand army of nature's noblemen who earn their bread in the sweat of their faces and who, mid trials, worries, and tribulations eke out an existence for themselves and their dependents—it will, I say, teach that other class of our more fortunate citizens how much they owe to these their humbler brothers and sisters. It will put more of the milk of human kindness in many callous hearts. And all this will make better legislators, better judges, and better executives, bringing us all, poor and rich alike, closer together, giving us a wider application of the precepts of the Christian religion, thus guaranteeing real liberty, equal rights, and justice to all mankind, the underlying thought of which is so beautifully expressed in the following anonymous lines:

Did you give him a lift? He's a brother of man,
And bearing about all the burden he can.
Did you give him a smile? He was downcast and blue,
And the smile would have helped him battle it through.

Did you give him your hand? He was slipping downhill;
And the world, so he fancied, was using him ill.
Did you give him a word? Did you show him the road?
Or, did you just let him go with his load?

Do you know what it means to be losing the fight,
When a lift in time might set everything right?
Do you know what it means—just the clasp of the hand—
When a man's borne about all a man ought to stand?

Do you know what it means—why the quivering lip?
Why the half-suppressed sob, and the scalding tears drip?
Were you a brother of his when the time came of need?
Did you offer to help him, or didn't you heed?

[Applause.]

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman kindly yield right there for a moment? I have been trying to get some information from this general debate by sitting and listening. I understand it is the purpose of the committee to offer an amendment to increase this appropriation in the sum of $10,000,000 for the purpose of housing Government employees here in the District. I would like the gentleman, if he will discuss it, being a member of the committee, to state as to what plan shall be put in operation for the expenditure of this. Whether there shall be buildings rented or new ones built, and if new ones are to be built, how they are to be conducted, and the gentleman's idea as to whether or not, if there are to be buildings erected, they will be on the idea of dormitories, such as are built for students at colleges, and only those go there who are compelled to do so?

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I will try to answer that question befcre I consume the five minutes alloted me, if I can. When the committee began the consideration of this bill I confess I had very grave doubts as to its wisdom. It presents a scheme of legislation to which I have always been opposed and may launch us upon a sea the end of which nobody can foretell; but during the hearings upon this measure I radically changed my view. We were confronted with testimony which could not be questioned, convincing us of the great and urgent necessity for legislation along this line. It was made clear to the committee that at many places where munitions and arms and other supplies for the Army are being manufactured that there is a scarcity of labor, due in many cases to the fact that houses could not be obtained for the workmen to live in, and that it is absolutely and imperatively necessary at certain points to build houses in order to mobilize experienced and skilled workmen at those places to facilitate and expedite the manufacture of those things which are essential and necessary in war, and having accepted that view we then at once accepted the principle of this legislation with utter disregard to the precedent we may be setting.

I state frankly I am not afraid of a precedent when our country is at war. I think I can safely say that no man on the committee in normal times, under normal conditions, would stand for this legislation, but the morning papers tell us that thousands of American citizens to-day, at this very hour, are on the firing line in France, and we know it is necessary to supply those soldiers as well as the allied soldiers with supplies and equipment, and therefore I for one am heartily in favor of this legislation, believing that it will tend to give strength and success to our Army.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. I will yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Perhaps the gentleman does not care to go into this phase of the matter, but I would like to know where they got the figures for the $50,000,000 required. I have gone through the hearings and I do not find that any one has made a definite calculation.

Mr. RUCKER. I will state to the gentleman briefly that the Secretary of Labor recommended those figures as being approximately correct as far as we can now tell, but I will say frankly that no one has undertaken to say that $50,000,000 or $60,000,000, as the bill will probably be amended to read, will accomplish the purpose. Fifty million dollars is all that can be spent now. Hereafter there may be other legislation along this line; I hope not, but I fear further legislation along this line may be necessary. Let me say to the membership of this committee that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was not indifferent to the fact but we are greatly concerned at present about the manner in which contracts for Federal buildings have been made and which led to wasteful prodigality in expenditures, but in this bill we have sought diligently to safeguard the expenditure of every dollar of public money authorized by this bill, and if it is not safeguarded, so far as I am concerned, I say to you that I will welcome any suggestion from any source which will more carefully and thoroughly safeguard this expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to submit as evidence of existing public sentiment in Tennessee in this present crisis the following telegram and ask to have it read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the telegram.

The Clerk read as follows:

McKENZIE, TENN., March 30, 1918.

Hon. T. W. SIMS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Citizens of McKenzie and community, in patriotic meeting assembled, unanimously urge national legislation drafting into the service of the Government everybody, regardless of age, and all resources during the war.

C. F. YOUNG,
JAMES A. ROBBINS,
Committee.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if that would include Brother SIMS?

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for this bill, as I have for all measures that have come before the House in the last year having to do with our better equipment for carrying on the war. It seems to me the item in the committee's report, which says that it is for the housing of industrial workers who are engaged in industries connected with and essential to the national defense during the existing war, is the real purport of the bill. The report also says that the committee desire to express the opinion that the only justification for the proposed legislation is the condition confronting our country, as shown in the hearings. It is exactly on that basis, it seems to me, that we can consistently support this measure. I do feel, however, that there should be attention called to the fact of the amendment which the committee says it intends to introduce, namely, for $10,000,000 additional money for a housing proposition in the District. I have made inquiry as to the number of employees in the District actually residing here at the present time, who seems to me to have to do probably with war measures, but who could better be located elsewhere than in the District of Columbia and avoid some of this extravagant expenditure of $10,000,000.

Any Member of this House can see the enormous outlay for building going on here now. We are spoiling our parks, taking up beautiful shrubbery and trees, and going to extravagant expenditures for locations here. I agree fully with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] in his statement on Friday last as to conditions in the expenditure of this enormous sum for overhead charges. But I want to refer specifically to the boards which have no occasion to be in Washington and the number of employees that they have. I have obtained the following figures by inquiry of each bureau to which I refer.

The Food Administration has in its employment here in Washington 1,834. The center, Mr. Chairman, of food measures and distribution in this country is certainly in Chicago. And why the Food Administration should have its headquarters in this city is beyond me to understand.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I have only a brief time, and I prefer not to do so.

Mr. LITTLE. It is a very brief question.

Mr. TREADWAY. The Fuel Administration is employing here in Washington 700 persons. The center of fuel distribution of the country is Pittsburgh. Why is the Fuel Administration located in Washington?

The Emergency Fleet Corporation is employing 1,381. The Shipping Board is employing 145. The center of the maritime interests of the country is in New York. Why are not those employees taken to New York, the center of the shipping interests of the country? There are employed by the Committee on Public Information here in Washington 325 persons. From recent exposures the title is wrong, it should be called the Committee on Public Misinformation. Another body of this Congress looked into the matter of the usefulness of the Committee on Public Information last week, and I refer the Members of the House to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as to the need of the continuance of these employees in Washington. The misinformation that the public is receiving through the so-called Committee on Public Information will fill a very large volume, not only of printed matter but of photographs. So that we find of these very few commissions—there are several others—a total here in Washington of 4,385 employees on the pay roll, for whom we are asked, in order that these may remain here, to appropriate $10,000,000 in order to secure better housing facilities in the District of Columbia. Those that are called here, Mr. Chairman, for the direct purposes of the Government we should provide for, but there are at least 4,000 of the employees to whom I have referred that can very well be spared from the city of Washington, making room for 4,000 other employees who may be needed here. I fully agree with the attitude of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] in the extravagance of the appropriation contained in this bill, particularly in the amendment. [Applause.] Let the boards and commissions not needed here make room for the new employees who may be needed before we appropriate such an enormous sum for additional housing accommodations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, how does the time stand?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has 2 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Florida has 10.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment, there is no question as to the time and the necessity for this absolutely important legislation. Perhaps Congress has been amiss in not providing for these activities before this late day, but this measure was originally referred to the Committee on Labor, and afterwards transferred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. If we are to have the highest amount of efficiency from our munition and other industrial workers, we must provide healthy and satisfactory accommodations for their living. If we are to obtain the full capacity of our manufacturing and munition plants, we must be prepared to have not only a day force but a three-shift force in all of them before we attain that maximum of output which will be absolutely essential to the success of our Army and Navy.

Now a great many of the men who are connected with these plants are finding unsatisfactory conditions, no provision for their families, and no modern, up-to-date, healthy, sanitary houses or quarters even for the single men. So that if we secure and hold laboring men it is absolutely essential we must provide for them what humanity demands and what reason and common sense dictate. These activities run into the hundreds, and this great army of munition and industrial workers into countless thousands. The hearings disclose the fact that in four of these plants alone 5,000 houses are needed, not counting hundreds of other similar plants scattered over more than 20 States of the Republic.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Does not the gentleman think that for some of this housing proposition there could be some relief obtained by distributing these contracts more to smaller firms throughout the country, that could take care of the people to the extent that they need them?

Mr. AUSTIN. The chairman of the housing committee for the Council of National Defense, Mr. Otto M. Eidlitz, of New York City, presented this matter pretty thoroughly before the committee, and the assurance given to the committee was that the policy would be pursued in line with the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL]; and the committee intends to offer an amendment to this bill providing for competitive bidding in connection with the construction of these houses.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Is it not in connection with shipbuilding that the greatest need of housing exists at the present time?

Mr. AUSTIN. That has been provided for by an appropriation of $50,000,000. But take, for instance, the Bethlehem plant.

Mr. SNELL. I want to ask the gentleman one more question along that line.

Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman knows that my time is limited.

Mr. SNELL. All right.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Bethlehem plant requires 2,000 houses, to cost in the neighborhood, perhaps, of $9,000,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. AUSTIN. The Bridgeport plant requires 1,500 houses; the Fore River (Mass.) plant needs 500 houses; Erie, Pa., a thousand houses; and Norfolk and Portsmouth, in the State of Virginia, must provide for 9,000 employees.

Now, I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. By what authority and by whom was this man Eidlitz appointed chairman of this commission?

Mr. AUSTIN. As I understand it, the President of the United States telegraphed or wrote to Mr. Eidlitz to come to Washington. I want to say in all fairness that I have carefully investigated Mr. Eidlitz, and no man stands higher for honesty and integrity and competency than Mr. Eidlitz. I think the Government of the United States would be extremely fortunate if there were more men of his type and character looking after the affairs of this Government. As far as I am concerned, I would be perfectly willing to intrust this entire proposition to the care and keeping of such a man and would feel sure that there would be faithful and honest administration if it were controlled and supervised and directed by Mr. Eidlitz, of New York City.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for seven minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss briefly some essential and improtant provisions of the bill. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL] who presented the rule under which we are operating, went as fully as possible during his limited discussion of the rule into the merits of this bill. The chairman of the committee and others who have followed have gone so fully over the subject matter that it leaves but little to be said.

Now, I want, in the first place, to combat the idea advanced by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] during the discussion of the rule in regard to the $300,000 that will be spent for the purpose of administering this business. It was found upon investigation by the heads of the different departments that if each department had to control the particular housing matters germane to that department there would be duplication of work, congestion, and increased expense. Therefore at least three of the heads of the departments got together—those that were mainly interested in the housing proposition—and under the sanction and advice of the President it was agreed between the Secretary of Navy, the Secretary of Labor, and the Secretary of War that this all ought to be concentrated under one head; and as this proposition of housing was mainly a labor proposition, it was thought that the Secretary of Labor should supervise it and that that department was the one in which it should be lodged. Therefore it was so agreed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this work will extend from the Lakes to the Gulf and from the Atlantic to the Pacific. I do not remember offhand as to the number of these enterprises that have sprung up all over the country, enterprises that are making munitions, arms, ammunition, clothing, and various other things to aid us in winning this war, but they are diversified and numerous. It would simply be impossible to concentrate that work under the office of the Supervising Architect, with the multifarious duties that it has to perform already.

Now, we provide that the genious and intelligence of the Supervising Architect's Office may be utilized, including its employees—inspectors and others. Wherever it is possible to do so the board is to use the Supervising Architect's Office.

In regard to the amount of $300,000, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] tries to make a mountain out of a molehill with respect to that, and yet when you consider that starting off with a minimum of $60,000,000 of expenditure, considering that men have to go all over the United States in looking after these matters, it seems to me that it will be one of the most economically administered concerns of perhaps any bureau or board or commission now operating under this Government. If it is held down to $300,000, as was stated by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN]—and I agree with him in this belief—it would be cheaply administered. If we undertook to administer this through the different departments we would find that the extra expense would amount to more than $300,000 before the work could be finished.

Mr. Chairman, in the brief time that I have I am not going to discuss the necessity for this legislation. Men from all over the country came before us and showed the congested conditions at these great munitions plants and other governmental activities. I remember, when I addressed the Committee on Rules in favor of the rule, my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] referred to the fact, as I recall it now, that an industry in his district that a year or two ago employed only 300 or 400 men is now employing 4,000 or 5,000 men. These men have to be sheltered. It was stated by the secretary of the Federation of Labor, Mr. Morrison, that some of the strikes—not all, but some—throughout the country were due to inadequate housing facilities. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, it is a war exigency and a war emergency, and something must be done, and done right away.

Complaints are coming up all over the country as to the delays that have been brought about in the building of ships, in the manufacture of munitions, in the construction of guns, in the production of clothing for the soldiers. All of those things, in some part at least, are due to inadequacy of labor, and that inadequacy of labor is due, in some degree at least, to inadequate housing for men desiring work.

Mr. Chairman, if anybody has the idea that the Government is going to build these houses and let the employees have them rent free, he is mistaken—that is not the case. It is expected that they will pay a reasonable rent, just as they would if they rented the houses from private enterprises or private individuals.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. I wish to ask the gentleman if this housing will stop those "turning over" conditions of labor?

Mr. BURNETT. Exactly. That was one point that was stressed by gentlemen who appeared before the committee, who stated that that condition is a very serious condition, and that that would be improved.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In the town where I happen to live the city hall has been made over for Government activities, a hundred men living in the hall. Is it not probable that that commission would want housing to be built for those Government employees, and the same in all the towns, so that $50,000,000 will be spread out as thin as a wafer?

Mr. BURNETT. I think not. It will be $60,000,000 if the amendment that will be proposed by Chairman CLARK is adopted; but a member of the committee, Mr. CANTRILL, who is also a member of the Committee on Rules, stated frankly to you the other day that it is not his opinion that $60,000,000 will be the maximum amount that will be reached.

As was said by my friend from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL], in speaking to the rule, it was stated before the committee that England has already expended $700,000,000 for housing purposes. Now, whether we like it or not, if we are really in favor of the earnest and rapid prosecution of this war, something must be done in order to relieve these acute conditions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time for general debate has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, may I have about three minutes more, by unanimous consent, just to call attention to the conditions in Washington. I did not know the time was running so fast.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, in the first consideration of this bill the committee decided that they would not undertake to consider the housing question in Washington, but it was brought to our attention that the situation was so urgent that we decided there ought not to be two bites to the cherry, but that the whole business ought to be cared for in one bill. It was shown to us that we will have 18,593 more Government employees between March 1 of this year and July 1, and we will have, in addition to that, 12,982 more between July 1 and December 31, making 31,575 in all, and all that the housing committees can see in sight or any prospect of is housing for 14,600 of these employees, which would be more than 4,000 less than those who will be here between now and the first of July and over 20,000 less than those who will come by December 31. For that reason we believed something should be done at once. The committee believe, further, that the building and opening of these houses for Government employees at moderate rents will of itself to a great extent neutralize the profiteering of those cormorants here who have been feeding upon those who come here to serve the Government.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. Was the matter discussed in the committee, as suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] a moment ago, of taking some of these departments to the cities where they belong?

Mr. BURNETT. I do not know that it was, but that would be impracticable. The gentleman and I have to spend a third of our time in running down to these different bureaus and getting information from the Food Bureau and the other departments; and how impracticable it would be if these bureaus, as suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], instead of being in Washington, were scattered all over the country. Not only that, Mr. Chairman, one of the troubles of Congressmen in matters of legislation to-day is that the buildings which house the Government activities even in the city of Washington are not near enough together; that we have to run all over the city to get to these various bureaus and transact our business. I believe it would be utterly impracticable to adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

The CHAIRMAN. All time allotted to the general debate has expired. The Clerk will read.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first section of the bill may be read by paragraphs for amendment and the remainder of the bill read by sections.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that the first section of the bill be read by paragraphs. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. That general consent can not be given in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Labor, for the purposes of providing housing, local transportation, and other community facilities for such industrial workers as are engaged in industries connected with and essential to the national defense, and their families, only during the continuation of the existing war, is hereby authorized and empowered, within the limits of the amounts herein authorized.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Amend by inserting, after the word "families," in line 7, page 1, the following: "and employees of the United States whose duties require them to reside in the District of Columbia, and their families."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I prefer that the gentleman should make his point of order, if he intends to make it. I do not want to take up time in discussing it.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman has offered this amendment to take care of the situation in Washington, I presume?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. I desire to bring to the attention of the Chair the fact that this measure is general in its character, and the paragraph of the bill which has just been read is the paragraph which sets forth the purpose of this legislation, which is to take care of "housing, transportation, and community facilities for industrial workers engaged in industries connected with and essential to the national defense." Now, as I understand, the amendment of the gentleman from Florida——

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. Is it the gentleman's opinion that employees of the navy yard, for instance, in the District of Columbia, would come under this bill as it now stands?

Mr. WALSH. I assume that they might. As I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Florida, it is to take care of the employees of the Government who may be located here in the District of Columbia and who are not connected with industries essential to the war, and it is not limited to those who are connected with the activities of the Government essential to the national defense. In other words, extra employees in other branches of the Government that have nothing to do with the war activities of the Government could be taken care of under this amendment. I submit that under the rules of the House a provision general in its character as to the territory to which it must apply, but for a specific purpose as to the particular class of activities or persons to which it should apply, can not be amended under a clause such as the gentleman from Florida has offered as an amendment, making it applicable to a specific section or particular part of the general territory of the United States, and that the amendment is not germane, because it makes a specific provision in a restricted area for particular classes under a measure which is designed to take care of a general territory—namely, the entire country—and for particular classes of people engaged upon a particular work. The whole tenor of the measure, as reported by the committee and the report which they have offered, in the hearings which have been held, so far as I have been able to gather it, is to take care of housing requirements in cities and towns where industries are being conducted or work is being carried on in connection with industries that are essential to the national defense.

It is in connection with the munition plants, I think, in connection with the building of torpedo boats, and in connection with other activities that are being carried on as a result of the contracts or arrangements that have been made or entered into between the Government and private individuals in the nature of corporations or partnerships.

Now, this amendment does not contemplate that class of activity, but relates solely to the District of Columbia, and applies in the District of Columbia only to those employees that have been brought here or who have come here in the various departments. Many of the departments, I will admit, have direct supervision over these industries and war activities, but the employees are not the employees of the people carrying on the activities, but are the Government employees; they are not industrial workers, although they may be industrious workers. In my judgment, it is not in order to amend a measure taking care of the needs of the various activities scattered throughout the country by this amendment; in other words, the amendment is not germane as it is offered by the gentleman from Florida.

It is not germane inasmuch as it is seeking to put another class of beneficiaries who are not related, according to the terms of the measure, which the committee has reported, to the beneficiaries that it has sought to take care of by this legislation, namely, the employees of private corporations or partnerships working on Government activities as the result of agreement or contract. I maintain that you can not put into that legislation the employees of the Government, those who are employed directly by the Government in another class of work. Therefore I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Florida desire to be heard?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Not unless the Chair has some doubt about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule, but the Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word on the point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman from Wisconsin is going to argue the question, I want to say that this bill authorizes the Secretary of Labor to provide housing facilities——

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, did I understand the Chair to say that he was ready to rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule, but he is glad to hear the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not care to say anything now.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. This is an important measure for the committee and for the public.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman will not hurry it along by any such interruption as that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word. This is a very important question. As the Chair knows, and as every Member of the House knows, this committee has no information whatever as to the form of the amendment that has been tentatively agreed upon by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which they seek to offer, to provide housing facilities for the departmental employees in the District. The House is fully advised of the measure presented to the House for consideration by the rule of the Committee on Rules. That rule did not make in order any amendment suggested by the gentleman from Florida, unless that amendment is within the general rules of the House under parliamentary procedure.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman is not contending that an amendment is not in order under the rule?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. This amendment is a committee amendment and was agreed upon in committee as fully as was the measure.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would not take any such ridiculous position as that in an argument on a point of order.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.
Mr. DEMPSEY. Was it not contemplated in the bill as originally drawn that it should include the housing of Government employees in the Government shipyards as well as other employees?
Mr. STAFFORD. I could not go to that extent; I can only read the bill as it is. As far as the housing of employees in the shipping industry is concerned, we provided for them in the bill S. 3389, which has since been approved and is now the law of the land.
Mr. DEMPSEY. Does not the bill itself provide for the housing of Government employees who are employed in the Government shipyards as well as for those employed by private capital?
Mr. STAFFORD. I have not been able to find any such language as would grant the Secretary of Labor the right to provide housing for Government employees.
Mr. DEMPSEY. Is not the language general—"for such industrial workers as are engaged in industries connected with and essential to the national defense"? Does not that mean, necessarily, whether they are employees of the Government or private companies?
Mr. STAFFORD. I think perhaps you might make an argument that an amendment would be germane along lines indicated by the gentleman from New York, but that is not the question before the committee.
Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.
Mr. McKENZIE. There is certainly a wide distinction between industrial workers and Government clerks.
Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; I am glad the gentleman from Illinois has anticipated my argument by that suggestion. The bill in its purpose is defined in its first paragraph, which we are now considering. It has only one general purpose, and that is to provide housing facilities, local transportation, and other facilities for such industrial workers as are engaged in industries connected with and essential to the national defense. That is a class to which this paragraph is confined. It is limited to provide these facilities for such industrial workers as are engaged in industries connected with and essential to the national defense. I respectfully submit that this bill must be considered as having one purpose, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE], and that is to provide facilities for whom? "For such industrial workers as are connected or engaged in industries essential to the national defense." If such is its purpose, and, scanning the other paragraphs of the bill, you will find nothing in the subsequent sections that controverts that purpose, I respectfully contend that an amendment like that offered by the gentleman from Florida providing for housing facilities of an entirely different character, namely, employees of the United States whose duties require them to rent in the District of Columbia—departmental employees—is of a class entirely different and not related at all to the subject matter as carried in the bill.

It comes, therefore, within the established precedents of this House that where a bill is limited to one subject matter an amendment related to another subject matter, even though it be related, is not germane, and therefore not in order. The fundamental reason for that is to protect the House, so that amendments will not be proposed upon the floor of the House that are not germane, so that the membership may not be taken by surprise. There is no one here who knows anything so far as an argument in the form of a report is concerned on the amendment as presented by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that refers to the need of public buildings in the District for housing departmental clerks. I am not arguing upon the merits of the proposition. Personally, I believe that there is need for it, but I say, for safeguarding the interests of the committee, it is absolutely necessary that we should limit these amendments to those that are germane. As the Chair knows, under parliamentary law any amendment may be in order, but the rules of the House limit the general parliamentary law which will permit any amendment to be offered, so that no motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment. There are many precedents that are found on page 345 of the Manual which hold that two subjects are not necessarily germane because they are related. Of course, there is some relation here, but if the Chair goes back to the philosophy of the rule of germaneness he will see that in this case the very essence requires that the House should be advised in advance of the nature of the legislation that is going to be presented for consideration, and the Chair knows the House has not been advised in any way by the report from the committee having jurisdiction of this matter as to the reasons for a tentative recommendation providing $10,000,000 additional for the housing of departmental clerks in the city of Washington. I can refer to the various precedents upholding that general statement under subdivision (d) of Rule XVI, to which I have referred:

To a proposition for the appointment of a selective committee to investigate a certain subject an amendment proposing an inquiry of the Executive on that subject was held not to be germane.

To a bill granting a right of way to a railroad an amendment providing for the purchase of the railroad was held not to be germane.

To a provision for the erection of a building for a mint an amendment to change the coinage laws was held not to be germane.

And I go back to my fundamental position and shall then close the argument—and I regard this as a very serious question, because this committee is entitled when a subject different in its character is presented for its consideration to have the report in the form of an argument presented to the attention of the committee in advance so that it may be able to determine is merits and vote intelligently upon it.

I go back to the fundamental proposition which can not be controverted as it is presented and as every person must read it. This bill is limited to one subject and one subject matter alone. It provides for certain facilities, namely, housing, local transportation, and other community facilities. For whom? For one general class and only one. For industrial workers such as are engaged in industries connected with and essential to the national defense. There may be any germane amendment touching the character of those facilities providing for these industrial workers who are engaged in industries that are essential to the national defense, but you can not include housing facilities for departmental workers who are not industrial workers engaged in industries connected with the national defense. It needs no argument, Mr. Chairman, to say that that is entirely distinct and apart, not related to the one provision of this bill, namely, facilities for industrial workers.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.
Mr. REED. It is in order always to strike out words, is it not?
Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.
Mr. REED. And if the gentleman would strike out four words from line 4 he would have it read "for such workers as are connected with and essential to," and he would accomplish the same purpose.
Mr. STAFFORD. That is not the question before the House. There has been serious question by parliamentarians whether you could, even by striking out, accomplish by indirection what you can not accomplish by direction.
Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, as I understood the argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], it was that the amendment proposed by the committee could not be adopted and was not germane for the reason that the amendment would change the character of the employees to be accommodated; that instead of being employees of private companies or individuals it would make the law provide for including employees of the United States. The language is broad enough as it is to include such employees, so that argument, it seems to me, has no solid foundation.

In answer to the first argument presented by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] we should go first to the title of the bill, and we find that the title, while it is not a part of the bill, bears on the purposes of the bill, and is always to be taken into consideration, and that title is—

To authorize the Secretary of Labor to provide housing, local transportation, and other community facilities for war needs.

Let us now go to the bill itself and see what we find. The bill says that it provides for "industrial" workers who are engaged in industries connected with and essential to the national defense. Let us see whom that would include. Who are industrial workers? What does "industrial workers" mean? "Industrial" means relating to either manufacturing or commercial production. That, whether right or not, is the dictionary definition. Let us see what that means as enlarged by the amendment. We have here in Washington, for instance, the Ordnance Department, and what do these men who are employed here do? Their work relates to both manufacturing and commercial production. Take the aeroplane department. What do the workers here in the aeroplane activities do? They tend to promote production, both by manufacturing and by distribution. The same may be said to be true of the shipbuilding industry and of each and every industry if you go over the entire list.

So I say in the first place we have language broad enough to include all workers who are employed by the Government or privately employed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. And next I say that these workers—in one moment—are engaged in industrial pursuits within the strict dictionary definition. It is as essential to have the office force, it is just as essential to the clerical department, it is just as essential to have all those who work here as it is to have those who are in the field, and those who are here tend to promote manufacturing and distributing, which is the commercial side of it. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Florida extends to employees of the United States whose duties require them to rent in the District of Columbia. Under that general phraseology I assume that would extend to employees connected with the Indian Service. Does the gentleman believe that those employees are in anywise related or connected with the industries connected with or essential to the national defense?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will answer that in this way: This congestion has not been caused by the employees who were in the city of Washington before the war. It has been caused wholly by the bringing in of additional Government employees for war purposes. In other words, as the original act recites, their services are connected with and essential to the national defense and they are brought here solely for that purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the amendment of the gentleman from Florida is so broad that it provides for employees who are in no wise connected with or essential to the national defense.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for just a question?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Would the gentleman contend that the employees mentioned in the amendment of the gentleman from Florida, if it were adopted, would then be included within the phraseology of industrial workers engaged in and essential to the national defense?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Well, I say it seems to me the industrial worker, in the broad and liberal view, is not simply a man who is in a shop operating a lathe or a machine, but it can fairly take in a man whose work is just as essential to the carrying on of that industry.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for one further question?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. If the amendment were adopted, it would include, I assume, some of the large force that has come here in connection with the publication of the Official Bulletin, some of these highly paid editorial special-article writers; the gentleman would agree that they would be included within the phraseology of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Well, I do not regard those as industries essential to the national defense.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will.

Mr. McKENZIE. I am somewhat interested in the definition of the gentleman as to industries applying to this bill, and I was somewhat interested in his description of the men engaged, for instance, in the aviation section of the Signal Corps——

Mr. DEMPSEY. Such as spruce production.

Mr. McKENZIE (continuing). In the city of Washington.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Take the spruce-production division; that would be a fair example.

Mr. McKENZIE. But they happen to be out West.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, no; they have them here as well as out West. We send them from here to the West.

Mr. McKENZIE. What I wanted to ask the gentleman, because I think his judgment would be worth something, is, Would he classify as industrial workers the gentlemen engaged in the aviation section who wrote the headlines on the photographs of the flying machines which was disclosed in the Senate hearing a few days ago?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I would not want to classify them.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, if I can get the attention of this committee so as to stop this eternal talk, I would ask leave to amend my amendment by adding after the word "Columbia" the following:

And whose services are essential to war needs.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I ask to have the amendment again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Maryland asks to have the amendment again reported. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modify the amendment by inserting after the word "Columbia," in the last line, the words "and whose services are essential to war needs," so that as amended the lines will read, "Insert after the word 'families,' in line 7, on page 1, the following language: 'and employees of the United States whose duties require them to reside in the District of Columbia and whose services are essential to war needs and their families,'"

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order to the amendment just reported.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that this amendment is not germane. The Chair believes that the philosophy of the rule prohibiting the introduction of amendments not germane to the subject is, as has been stated, to prevent two opposing propositions being incorporated in the same measure. However, there has been an unbroken series of precedents to uphold the principle that a general proposition may be amended by adding a specific proposition of the same class.

This bill provides for housing facilities and other community facilities for war needs at any place in the country. This amendment is a specific provision for the District of Columbia. Therefore, the Chair holds the amendment to be germane and overrules the point of order.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think the committee is entitled to some information as to whether or not the committee intends to offer any further amendments so as to provide for housing facilities of the employees of the District.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The committee proposes to offer a number, and the gentleman can see them if he desires to do so. They are right here.

Mr. STAFFORD. And those amendments will be offered, I suppose, to the respective paragraphs.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does not have them in the form of a bill so that the committee can examine them?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I have not. They are amendments agreed upon by the committee after the rule had been granted, and the committee did not feel at liberty to put them into the bill. So the committee decided that we would come upon the floor and offer them as committee amendments. There has been no occasion or opportunity to print them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, the gentleman could have obtained permission to print them in the RECORD and indicate the places where they would be offered. Will the gentleman advise the committee whether any of the amendments seek to change the general character of authority in the way of buildings as provided in this bill for industrial workers?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I did not get the question.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am seeking information as to whether those amendments seek in any way to change the general character of authority for buildings for departmental clerks and the authority as carried for industrial workers?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Not at all. There is an amendment, I will say to the gentleman, which provides for the taking over of the Maltby Building and the block of houses below it, and any other residential property in the District of Columbia belonging to the Government which is suitable and not devoted to some other purpose. We also propose to amend it and make it more clear that the department is to construct temporary houses only in localities where the institution is liable to be suspended after the close of the war.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is, as far as the housing of these departmental clerks is concerned?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. All of them.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the bill there is a provision limiting the character of the buildings to that of a temporary character.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I say that we have amended that so as to make it clearer, or we propose to amend to make it clearer, than it is in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I inquire, in that connection, whether the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has given any consideration to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Kentucky, that in providing housing facilities for departmental clerks we should undertake the erection of permanent structures in the nature of dormitories that could be utilized either for office purposes or for hotel purposes after the war and sold after the war to private concerns?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is the understanding of the persons who are to execute it. Of course, the committee could not put in the bill every minute detail of just what was to be done, but we have provided for the construction of permanent buildings at such places as might be thought advisable. And those who are to administer the law are given authority, if they see fit, to build dormitories or buildings of the character the gentleman indicates, and they have ample power in the bill to do so. In other words, we have left a very broad discretion with the administrators of the bill.

Mr. WELLING. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will.
Mr. WELLING. Your amendment provides not only for erecting the housing facilities for employees of the United States, but also for the families of the employees? Now, I do not refer to those in industrial pursuits, but to those who are employed here in the civil branch of the Government. Is that what is contemplated in the amendment?
Mr. CLARK of Florida. It is certainly meant that when they build a house a man's family is to occupy it with him if he rents it from the Government.
Mr. WELLING. You build the houses for the employees and their families as well?
Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes, sir; to be occupied by the employees and their families; certainly.
Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman anticipate that an amendment would be in order, instead of appropriating $60,000,000, making it $160,000,000?
Mr. CLARK of Florida. We intend to authorize an appropriation.
Mr. CANNON. I mean to authorize an appropriation.
Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.
Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman think that if you are going into the building of houses for the families of employees of a permanent nature in the District of Columbia that you will get out with two or three hundred millions of dollars?
Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will state to the gentleman that the hearings indicated that before this program was finished it would cost from three hundred million to five hundred million dollars in the United States.
Mr. CANNON. And half of it or two-thirds of it in the city of Washington?
Mr. CLARK of Florida. Well, there was no intimation as to how much would be spent here.
Mr. CANNON. This is a camel's nose, then?
Mr. CLARK of Florida. Something like that; yes.
Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will.
Mr. BUTLER. As I understand the gentleman to state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], it was contemplated that this movement was going to cost the Government from $300,000,000 to $500,000,000?
Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is the estimate of those who are charged with its execution.
Mr. BUTLER. I want to make an inquiry of the gentleman, so as to get his opinion. Unfortunately I could not hear his opening statement.
Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will be glad to answer anything I can.
Mr. BUTLER. My questions will not be hard ones.
Now, this bill provides for what is called local transportation. Do we understand from the provisions in this bill, if it becomes a law, the Government will have authority to acquire railroads?
Mr. CLARK of Florida. That was meant to cover this situation, I will state to the gentleman. We understand that there are a number of cases where large plants are situated a few miles from a large city, connected by an electric line.
Mr. BUTLER. Yes.
Mr. CLARK of Florida. And there may be ample housing in the city. It was intended, in cases like that, that instead of building houses the Government, through the Secretary of Labor, would either assist the owners of the electric line to enlarge its facilities; or, if the owners did not give sufficient service, he was given the power to take the line over.
Mr. BUTLER. To house them near the works or else to haul them back and forth?
Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.
Mr. BURNETT. The bill, as it was originally introduced, did not contain the word "local," and fearing that it might be understood to extend, as suggested by the gentleman, so as to include all kinds of transportation by railroads all over the country, the committee inserted that language, which applies only to local transportation in the locality in question, in connection with the particular industries that will employ these people.
Mr. BUTLER. I understand the interpretation of the act must be reasonable. But suppose a workman lived as much as 10 miles away. Would that be considered local?
Mr. BURNETT. If it were necessary that they should live 10 miles away and should have transportation, it would be so construed; but it would not cover 100 miles or anything like that.
Mr. BUTLER. Of course you could not take them back and forth that distance.
Mr. CLARK of Florida. It applies to places within easy reach of the work.
Mr. BURNETT. For the day's work, for the time they are to be employed.
Mr. BUTLER. And it is intended to relieve congestion in transportation as well?
Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is the very purpose of it.
Mr. BUTLER. The reason I asked that question is this: I know a situation in this country that ought to be relieved.
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. BUTLER. I ask that the gentleman may have a little more time.
Mr. CLARK of Florida. I ask unanimous consent for three minutes.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?
There was no objection.
Mr. BUTLER. The congestion occurs 4 or 5 miles from an immense plant manufacturing munitions for the Government. I asked the question in order to be satisfied in my own mind that the conditions would be relieved by the passage of this bill. The railroads there are not sufficient to transport these employees. Will it be within the power of the Government, if this bill becomes a law, to build temporary railroads from those plants? Will it enable the Government to build a railroad, say from Chester to Hog Island—an additional railroad?
Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.
Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.
Mr. SNELL. There are a great many small industrial plants all over the country which, on account of the slowing down of private work, have very little to do at the present time. These plants could do a certain amount of this Government work. Does not the gentleman think it would be better to distribute some of this work among the small plants, instead of trying to concentrate all the work in the big plants, where you are obliged to build housing facilities to accommodate the employees?
Mr. CLARK of Florida. I understand that they are doing that now by subletting contracts.
Mr. SNELL. I have been told by people in my own State that it is impossible to get contracts for anything to do, although they have the factories and machinery and expert men right there at home, who do not want to go away from home to work. I have especially in mind at the present time a small shipbuilding firm which built 10,000 tons of wooden ships last year and delivered them.
But the Government has now commandeered all their timber supply, so they can not continue their regular business with private corporations; and they wanted to get contracts from the Government to build wooden ships there, but they were informed by the Shipping Board here that they did not need that kind of contractors or plants. Those people have 170 ship carpenters at the present time, and they have available 300 carpenters that they can put to work right away. It would not cost a cent to house those men. They are willing to take the contracts at the prices offered. I would like to know why those firms can not get some small contracts for this work.
Mr. BARNHART. The fact of the matter is that while these Government contracts are let mostly to large contractors, much of the work is being done by subletting. I have in mind many plants in the district in which I live that have contracts, some for steel, under a Philadelphia contractor, and so forth. Some have doubled or quadrupled the capacity of their plants in order to meet the obligations of the contracts they have made with the main contractors, so that I know that contracts are being let to smaller factories that are trying to get them, but the Government looks to a few main contractors rather than many.
Mr. SNELL. But with so many of these small contractors out of work, I am against building houses until these outside places are filled up with such work as they are equipped to do.
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has again expired.
Mr. SNELL. May the gentleman have three minutes more by unanimous consent? I would like to ask another question.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
Mr. SNELL. The information I am trying to get is why the man I am interested in can not get one of these contracts.
Mr. BARNHART. I can not answer that.
Mr. SNELL. Can anybody answer this question: Why this man, who has a shipbuilding yard up here, whose ways are lying idle, who has carpenters who know the wooden shipbuilding game, can not get a contract?
Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I can answer the gentleman's question.
Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. The gentleman should put his question to the Shipping Board and not to the House of Representatives.
Mr. CLARK of Florida. I can not answer as to that, because the shipbuilding proposition is with the Urgency Fleet Corporation and the Shipping Board. I do not know what their program is, or how they let their contracts, or anything of that kind. I have nothing to do with that.

Mr. SNELL. Does not the gentleman know that there is a shortage of shipbuilding contractors and a shortage of ship carpenters all over the country? We are appropriating money to provide housing to take care of them——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I would like to see every shipbuilding plant running day and night to get out ships; but my friend ought to know that I do not know anything about it. I am not on the Shipping Board.

Mr. GILLETT. This affects the housing question. If there are shipyards which will house their own men, and which are willing to take contracts, and do not get them, it is very important to know it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to say to my friend from Massachusetts that we have already passed a bill here to provide for the housing of employees at shipyards.

Mr. GILLETT. That is true. That does not apply to this.

Mr. SNELL. But it would apply to the general proposition of housing, and my question is why a man who has everything ready, and who does not ask this Government to advance one cent, can not get a contract?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. My friend will have to ask the Shipping Board that question.

Mr. SNELL. I have asked them, and have received no answer from them. They agreed to write me a letter a week ago, but they have not done it, and I can not get any answer from them.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I hope my friend will not charge me with that.

Mr. SNELL. I thought if I called attention to it on the floor of the House I might get a proper answer from the Shipping Board. That is the reason why I have made these remarks here.

Mr. WALDOW. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the amendment, which I should like to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. WALDOW. After the words "District of Columbia" insert "and in the city of Buffalo, State of New York."

I only wish to state that under the ruling made by the Chair I believe my amendment is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send his amendment to the desk.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to offer an amendment, too.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Columbia," in the committee amendment, insert the words "the city of Buffalo, State of New York."

Mr. WALDOW. I have no desire to make an argument, Mr. Chairman, except to say that under the ruling of the Chair I believe my amendment is germane.

Mr. MADDEN. I should like to be heard on this.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Florida make the point of order?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No, Mr. Chariman; but I want to say a word.

Mr. MADDEN. I should like to be heard against the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WALDOW] is pending now.

Mr. MADDEN. They are both pending.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Who has the floor, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] is recognized to oppose the amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I want to say this right now, and I want to say it with all the best feeling in the world: I have no pride of opinion in this bill. I have no possible personal interest in it of any character. If gentlemen want to make sport of a bill of this character on the floor of this House, and want to pursue tactics which are meant to delay and hobble the bill, that is their concern. If they see fit to do that, I think I should not complain. There are no civil employees, outside of industrial workers, who to any great extent have been brought into any of the cities of the country, face to face with a condition of congestion, except here at the capital. It seems to me that it is playing with a very serious proposition to attempt to amend it by sticking on Buffalo, Chicago, Brooklyn, and all the other cities in the land. The bill already provides for their congestion which, if it exists, is caused by the influx of workers at industrial plants and manufacturing establishments. Here is the capital of the Nation, where we are bringing thousands of employees whose work is absolutely necessary, and who are crowding this city beyond its limits. I stated a day or two ago that a lady in this city had told me that there are over 2,000 girls in Washington to-day who have only temporary abiding places, who have been taken in by good people temporarily until some arrangement could be made to permanently house them. We do not object to proper amendment of this bill. If it is not right, we are perfectly willing that it be made right to accomplish the important purpose which it is intended to accomplish; but I do protest against amendments being offered which can serve only to delay and impede it and to make it worse than it is to accomplish its purpose. We have done the best we could in drafting the bill, together with the amendments that we propose to offer, and we are perfectly willing to accept the amendment of any gentleman on this floor that will make this bill better answer its object; but I hope that the Committee of the Whole will vote down amendments that are offered to no purpose, or the effect of which will be not to improve the bill a particle, but only to hamstring it and to injure it.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. For a question.

Mr. SNYDER. I agree with the gentleman that there should not be any delay in having this bill enacted, and I shall undoubtedly vote for it, but I should like to get this thought into the minds of gentlemen here: I have had many requests from construction contracting firms throughout the country, making complaint that they are unable to get an opportunity to bid upon any of this construction work. As I understand it, these buildings are to be built at the important parts of the country where great governmental activities are to take place or are now taking place.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Where there is congestion.

Mr. SNYDER. And it would seem to me that if something could be put into this measure that would make it possible for an ordinary well-equipped construction contractor somewhere within the locality to have an opportunity to bid on the job it would facilitate the purpose which the gentleman's committee are seeking to accomplish.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I see what the gentleman is after. I catch the gentleman's point. I want to say that the committee has an amendment which it will offer later on to cover that thing.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think the hearings will disclose that the contractor who is to expend that $50,000,000 or $500,000,000 has already been appointed, or has appointed himself, a New York contractor.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say this in justice to that man; I knew nothing of him, never heard of him in my life until a few weeks ago.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, the committee is not responsible for it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. This gentleman from New York, Mr. Eidlitz, I knew nothing of; but when I understood that he had been selected by the Secretary of Labor as the administrator of this fund I did take occasion to investigate him, and I have not heard of a man but who has given him the highest reputation for honesty, for integrity, and for everything that goes to make up a real good, honest American citizen. I want to say further that Mr. Eidlitz is not getting a penny for his services, nor has he since he has been in the service of the Government. He has absolutely declined to allow his firm to make a contract for the Government for a penny's worth of work, although his firm has done millions of dollars worth of work every year.

Now, he is not going to do this work, but he is going to offer to the Government his great brain and his magnificent service to see to it that other contractors and material men do not rob the Government in carrying out this work.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. I would like to corroborate what the gentleman from Florida has said with reference to Mr. Eidlitz and say that I do not think there is a man in the State of New York, or anywhere else in the country, who bears a better reputation or in whom people have more confidence than they have in Mr. Eidlitz to carry on this work.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, of course we ought to do everything necessary to carry the war to a successful conclusion. That is the first proposition. If it involves the expenditure of money for housing people at different parts of the country, we ought to do that. That is a part of the war work, but there ought to be some means devised by which we who are called upon to appropriate the money should have some influence in the distribution of the work that is necessary for the conduct of the war, so that we would not have to expend millions of dollars for housing where housing is not necessary if the work was distributed properly. That is the point. That is the criticism that is justified under this act, if it becomes an act.

My belief is that the contracts ought to be distributed fairly throughout the United States. I am speaking for no contractor. I do not care who gets the contract. I am not interested in any contractor. All I care is that the ordinary activities of the country should not be disturbed by the movement of men from one section of the United States to another, thus making it necessary by reason of that movement to appropriate millions of dollars to house the men in the place to which they have been sent, when the work could as well have been done where they were without moving them or spending a dollar for housing. That is the criticism. It is a criticism that is justified and ought to have some weight.

Now, the committee proposes to amend the bill by including the District of Columbia, to build houses to accommodate the clerks that have been brought here. Of course the clerks ought to be housed somewhere, but they have no business here. They ought not to have been brought here in the first place; it was not necessary. These activities could have been performed in other places in the United States and not disturb the equilibrium of conditions in the District of Columbia as it has been disturbed by putting all the activities in one place. Everybody knows that the District of Columbia has no accommodations for a vast horde of people such as have been brought here, and who ought not to have been brought here. In addition to what we are doing in this bill we have been called upon to build temporary offices costing millions of dollars to accommodate the clerks that are coming here, and we have rented every building that could be rented in the District of Columbia, at fabulous prices, enough in a single year to pay the cost of the improvements. Why do not we move some of these activities to other places where they will be in close proximity to the work they have to do. Take the Food Administration. What necessity is there for having it in Washington? None, whatever. It ought to be in some other place. If it were, we would not be spending millions of dollars to disturb the people of the United States as we are to-day. It is not too late to change; the administration ought to consider this, and do it now. It ought to do it now without waiting another minute. We have been spending money that we ought not to have spent, and we are going to spend more. In God's name why do not we stop it. Have we any influence? I doubt it. All we are useful for is to appropriate the money. The chairman of the committee comes here without information. He says he does not know how this appropriation is to be distributed, that he can not tell where the money is to be spent.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Oh, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman does not want to do me an injustice.

Mr. MADDEN. I have just repeated what the gentleman said a few moments ago.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I beg the gentleman's pardon, with all due respect to him, I did not say that. I said that I did not know why the gentleman from New York could not get work for some persons.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman said that he did not know why they did not make the proper distribution of war contracts, that he had not any influence, and that he ought not to be held accountable for that. Of course, I am not seeking to hold him accountable.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I did not say that. I said this, that I knew nothing about the general distribution of Government contracts. I do not haunt the departments following around Government contracts.

Mr. MADDEN. I am not interested in Government contracts. I am interested in the proper distribution of the activities of the Government, and I think we have a right to demand that they shall be properly distributed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the District of Columbia ought not to be included in this. If, perchance, where we have great war activities, where artisans and mechanics are called from different sections of the country to places where they have no kind of living facilities, where they are building plants outside of a municipality, and they have got to build a town to meet the new conditions, well and good, we ought to spend the money to do that; but before we entered upon its expenditure we ought to have given proper consideration to the conditions involved, and if we had—I say "we," though I can not properly say "we"; I mean the administrative branch of the Government; they claim the right to make the distribution and to make the expenditure, and all that we are asked to do is to ratify what they have already decided to do—and if they had given proper consideration to these conditions we would not be confronted with the situation which exists to-day.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman said the District of Columbia ought not to be included in this bill, for the reason that the clerks ought not to have been brought here.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. But they are here.

Mr. MADDEN. They ought to be sent away from here and the activities moved to other places.

Mr. REAVIS. Would the keeping of the District of Columbia out of this bill send them away?

Mr. MADDEN. It might.

Mr. REAVIS. What are we going to do with them now that they are here?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know. What we ought to do is what is right and compel the administration responsible for the congestion everywhere to find a means by which to prevent and remove the conditions which call for the expenditure of unnecessary millions, because they did not have the foresight or vision or disposition, whatever it may be, to make the proper distribution at the proper time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. By placing the District of Columbia in this bill, then the District of Columbia receives all of the benefits that are included later, including the purchase and leasing, and so on, of community facilities, whatever that may mean.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know what that means.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It may mean sewers in a new town that is to be constructed or a public forum in the city of Washington.

Mr. MADDEN. If they receive anything at all they are entitled to receive what any other place receives.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. Does not the gentleman think it is pretty good business judgment to distribute the contracts among the industries; first, along the Atlantic seaboard, because of the rapidity with which the manufactured product can be moved to the field of activity?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not.

Mr. HOWARD. Is it not the economical and businesslike thing to do?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think so, because all the material required to complete the contracts must come from the interior of the country, and the congestion is caused by the accumulation of all the activities in a single place. There is no wisdom in it, because, my dear friend, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], whom I love as I love no other man in the House, must realize that there are other sections of the United States that are called upon to pay the cost of the war. The great State of Illinois, for example, pays at least 10 per cent of all the expenditures of the Government of the United States, and I undertake to say without fear of successful contradiction that not one-half of one-quarter of 1 per cent of the activities of the war have been distributed to the State of Illinois.

Mr. HOWARD. Would the gentleman advise the movement of munitions, especially shrapnel and heavy artillery and things of that sort, from the city of Chicago to the Atlantic seaboard.

Mr. MADDEN. I would advise the manufacture of vital munitions at points where the danger of invasion from a foreign foe would be the least, and it is certainly not the least on the Atlantic seaboard. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Does not the gentleman know that three years ago a board selected by the War Department recommended that no Government depot containing munitions of war be located east of the Alleghenies or west of the Rocky Mountains?

Mr. MADDEN. A very wise determination, but not successfully carried out. They evidently had nothing to do with the distribution of the work. They could conclude what was wise, but they did not have the power to carry it out. It was turned over to some interested party somewhere who had friends in the location that was most dangerous and where the activity ought not to have been conducted. And so we find ourselves with congestion here and with idle men there. In all the great cities of the United States west of Fort Wayne everywhere there are idle men looking for employment and they can not find it, and yet we are moving men from these places to other places, where we are compelled to take millions of dollars out of the Treasury of the United States with which to find housing facilities for them. Oh, there is no wisdom in it, there is no justice in it, it ought not to be done, and if I had my way, if I had the power to change it, I would change it now. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], on the mention of the name of Mr. Eidlitz, of New York, answered, with some heat, that he believed in the honesty and integrity of Mr. Eidlitz. I take no issue with him on that question. I never saw Mr. Eidlitz, I do not know anything about him, but the point I make is this: Mr. Eidlitz has undertaken, without the action of Congress, to obligate the people of the United States to spend anywhere from fifty to five hundred million dollars, and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have brought to the floor of the House authorization for the first $50,000,000 of that amount. A few days ago $50,000,000 was appropriated by Congress to be used by the Shipping Board for housing purposes.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; I can not yield. When members of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds appeared before the Committee on Rules to get this bill before the House all the argument that was made in behalf of housing facilities was made in the interest of the Shipping Board.

Mr. Eidlitz was mentioned as the authority by those who appeared before that committee. He was represented as a New York contractor working for nothing, but arranging for the United States Government to spend in building operations anywhere from fifty to five hundred million dollars; $50,000,000 of that has been provided and $50,000,000 more are asked for here and another $10,000,000 will be offered as an amendment to this bill. In the name of the people who pay the bills, when will this saturnalia of reckless expenditure of public money stop? [Applause.] The expenditure of much of this is without the consent of Congress.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No. All this is being done at the suggestion of Mr. Eidlitz, who is working for nothing. If many more such men give their services to the United States for nothing the Nation will soon be bankrupt.

A MEMBER. Is he a contractor?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. He is a contractor; yes. The man who represented him before the Committee on Rules is a polished orator, who works upon the emotions and understands the art of persuasive oratory as few men understand it. Where did Mr. Eidlitz get the authority to outline and prepare an overhead organization, that is to cost the Government $300,000 for the first year? It is said that this organization is now in operation. The gentleman from Florida shakes his head. Will the gentleman call up the Secretary of Labor and ask him if this organization is not already completed and if Mr. Eidlitz is not the author of it?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman will permit me, I shook my head because they are undoubtedly making arrangements——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is just what I said.

Mr. CLARK of Florida (continuing). In anticipation of this bill; but there is not a single human being on the pay roll in connection with this legislation.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, they are working for nothing. Gentlemen who appeared before our committee are working for nothing, but their services will cost the people of the United States hundreds of millions of dollars——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. IGOE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On March 30, 1918:

H. R. 9571. An act to authorize the appointment of officers of the Philippine Scouts as officers in the militia or other locally created armed forces of the Philippine Islands drafted into the service of the United States, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 9903. An act to provide for restoration to their former grades of enlisted men discharged to accept commissions, and for other purposes.

On April 1, 1918:

S. 389. An act to extend the time for cutting timber on the Coconino and Tusayan National Forests, Ariz.

HOUSING FOR WAR NEEDS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the vigorous remarks made by the gentleman from Kansas, I would say that during the consideration of this bill by the committee the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] and myself, from the very beginning, took the precaution to inquire very carefully into this whole matter as to who Mr. Eidlitz is, the general plan he has in mind, and from where this proposition comes. We readily ascertained that the proposition comes from the advisory commission of the Council of National Defense, of which Hon. Samuel Gompers is the chairman, L. A. Coolidge is the chairman of the committee on welfare work, and Philip Hiss is the chairman of the section on housing. During the hearing I asked Mr. Eidlitz to tell us frankly who and what he is. I have a letter from Mr. Hiss which goes into considerable detail as to this, and I think the record of the House ought to show just what was said as to who Mr. Eidlitz is. I do not know him—I never heard of him before this bill was under consideration—but this letter from Mr. Hiss gives interesting information. It says:

FEBRUARY 16, 1918.

Hon. HENRY A. BARNHART,
Congressman from Indiana,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BARNHART: In answer to the very proper question that you asked Mr. Eidlitz as to who he is and what expert knowledge he has on the subject, I take the liberty of placing before you the various positions of trust which he has occupied.

Mr. Eidlitz has for thirty-odd years been the means of keeping labor adjusted in New York, and no man is better able than he to understand the labor situation. He brings an exceptionally clear perception and sane judgment to this housing problem, which he has had under most intensive consideration for more than four months. You can depend absolutely upon his statements and suggestions. My valuation of his attainments is shared by the clearest-headed business men of this country.

Very sincerely, yours,

PHILIP HISS,
Chairman Section on Housing.

Attached to the letter is the following business-life biography of Mr. Otto M. Eidlitz:

Trustee of the Bank for Savings, New York; director of the Mutual Bank; director Colonial Fire Insurance Co.; appointed to the tenement house commission of New York City by Gov. Roosevelt in 1900; appointed member commission on workmen's compensation and unemployment of labor in New York State by Gov. Hughes in 1909—

That would indicate that the gentleman's politics could be in harmony with the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not necessarily. Republican governors appoint men without regard to their politics. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BARNHART (reading)—

first chairman of the board of governors in the Building Trades Employers' Association; adjusted labor disputes for 33 years in the building industry; member of arbitration board of the New York Chamber of Commerce; member of the American Society of Civil Engineers; member of the American Society for Testing Materials; appointed one of the five members on the arbitration board representing the public in adjusting dispute between the 52 railroads east of the Mississippi River and of the locomotive engineers—appointment by Chief Justice White; member of the New York commission on heights of buildings and restrictions in zoning the city as to occupation; graduate Cornell University, 1881.

After I read this biography of Mr. Eidlitz, I changed my mind somewhat on the advisability of his appointment, because I believe he comes with the highest possible recommendations, and I believe, furthermore—for we had him before us hour after hour and plied him with all sorts of questions—that he is fully trustworthy and sincere in this undertaking——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Not now. And he asked that we protect this legislation in every way possible to make it perfectly secure for the United States Treasury, and under those conditions I changed my mind wholly favorable to the gentleman, although I thought at first, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] now indicates, that possibly he was a financial adventurer. Instead, I now believe that he is a whole-hearted, patriotic, honest, and competent business man and trustworthy American citizen. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. This letter, however, does not disclose the authority that he has for obligating the Government to spend anywhere from $50,000,000 to $500,000,000.

Mr. BARNHART. But, Mr. Chairman, he has not so obligated the Government. He could not obligate the Government. He has no legislative authority whatever to do so.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. He started with $110,000,000.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Young, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 19.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it being a duty peculiarly incumbent in a time of war humbly and devoutly to acknowledge our dependence on Almight God and to implore His aid and protection, the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to recommend a day of public humiliation, prayer, and fasting, to be observed by the people of the United States with religious solemnity and the offering of fervent supplications to Almighty God for the safety and welfare of our cause, His blessings on our arms, and a speedy restoration of an honorable and lasting peace to the nations of the earth.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 2617. An act to ratify the compact and agreement between the States of Oregon and Washington regarding concurrent jurisdiction over the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries in connection with regulating, protecting, and preserving fish; and

H. R. 10365. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Forsyth special road district of Taney County, Mo., to construct a bridge across White River at Forsyth, Mo.

HOUSING FOR WAR NEEDS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. RUCKER and Mr. O'SHAUNESSY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], a member of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I will not consume five minutes, I hope.

I merely want to say that I am surprised that when every message that flashes across the ocean warns us that American boys are this moment bleeding and dying for our country, gentlemen will stand here and discuss for an hour the character of the distinguished gentleman from New York, Mr. Eidlitz, who is now connected with public affairs. I think it is time this waste of time should come to a stop. I, like the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], at one time thought "this fellow" was probably "butting in," but I came in contact with the gentleman from New York. I interrogated him. I found that he is one of the large contractors of America and stands supremely high in the estimation of those who know him. I do not think it is a part of legislative function, duty, or privilege to stand here and denounce and criticize and refer in a contemptuous way to "this fellow," as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has done, referring to a gentleman who has won high place in the confidence of the American people, and who is to-day showing more patriotism, may I say, than is manifested by those of us who stand here and discuss his personality when our boys are dying in foreign lands. And I hope it will stop.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have listened patiently to the discussion centering around Mr. Eidlitz. First of all, I want to congratulate the committee on its efficient labors in the field which is presented to it, and I wish to express my gratification on the preparation of Mr. Eidlitz for the stupendous task before him. We have heard continually in the United States before and during the war of our lack of preparation, the fact that we lacked that prevision and foresight so necessary for efficient action. Here is presented the case of a man anticipating legislation by surrounding himself with an efficient force. Thank God that the time has come in America when we have some efficient men in bureaus dealing with the war's vast problems. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. It is a very wise provision to select a man who has knowledge of the subject. Personally I do not criticize that at all, but I am criticizing the policy.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. The gentleman is opposed particularly to making appropriations for taking care of the people who now find themselves in Washington.

Mr. MADDEN. No; I am opposed to the method of distributing the activities and making this necessary.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that frequently method or policy changes with conditions. For instance, when a general goes into war the policy he has outlined for the conduct of the war is materially changed in one, two, or three days or a week thereafter, and he must be ready to do whatever is necessary. There is no question in the world that this Congress, when the proper facts are presented to it and when they see the necessity for a different distribution, will take those necessary steps.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for one suggestion?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. In a minute.

I listened with interest to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT], who came to us with facts concerning matters within his personal knowledge, not vagaries or speculations. He tells of the city of Bridgeport, that has grown in leaps and bounds in population, its munitions factories growing day and night, and men coming there ready and willing to do the allotted work but finding no housing accommodations.

I read a couplet in a paper the other day, as follows:

Your work is good, your wages are fine;
But where shall we sleep and where shall we dine?

That is the situation in Bridgeport. It is the situation in Washington to-day. It is the situation wherever we pour a great amount of labor into any industry. And now that this situation confronts us, we ought to be ready to embrace this opportunity by making efficiency out of inefficiency and dispel the notion that we are not capable of great performances.

Mr. MADDEN. The point I wanted to impress upon the other gentlemen present is that we are doing all that and we must make preparation where it is necessary to house them, but we ought not to take people away from places and throw all the activities out of joint.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. You can not make every provision for changing circumstances and arrange to keep labor in one particular place. There is bound to be a shifting of labor and readjustments. The only thing is this, that we have got to do everything in our power to win the war. [Applause.]

I was gratified when Congress passed the bill to provide housing for the shipbuilders. Now, what did we find with the shipbuilders? We found them going to shipyards where there were no housing accommodations, and naturally they had to run away because they had to have houses in which to live; they had to have the common, ordinary facilities that go along with human life. And that necessity has been met. It is in the process now of construction.

Now, I will say that down in my State we have a condition where a number of men have been working in one of the Government munition plants. I speak of the torpedo station at Newport. Of course, the war has increased the capacity there. Thousands of men are there now where before there were hundreds. Now, we find they are without the proper accommodations with which to live. They have got to go a distance in order to enjoy them. I trust that under the provisions of this bill the needs of the torpedo-station employees will be fully cared for.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Rhode Island has expired.

Mr. WALDOW. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALDOW. What is the regular order?

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment to the amendment pending. There are two amendments before the committee, and the time has been exhausted upon both of them. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WALDOW].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask that both of these amendments be reported, so that we may know what we are voting on.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], a member of the committee, moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Congress, it seems that this discussion is circling around Mr. Eidlitz. Now, Mr. Eidlitz is not a self-seeking or self-appointed superintendent of this work. Mr. Eidlitz was written to by the President of the United States after the question of who would administer this fund was discussed in the Cabinet. He was selected as a man suitable and as a person they thought to be fitted for this work.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. May I ask the gentleman what fund?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The fund that is now in this bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There was no fund available. There was no fund then provided for.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, it is not a very far distance, when you are providing a large fund like this, to talk about the person who is going to administer it. Would you go to work and appropriate or ask an appropriation of $50,000,000 and not have anybody to administer it, or know who would administer it? One would not contemplate any expenditure or improvement without considering who would do it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There was already an organization in the Government that has existed for years and which has expended hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. To-day the Army and Navy organization is spending millions of dollars in this city without taking steps such as are taken by this bill. The organization that was and is in existence was the Department of Labor of the United States, one of the principal departments of the Government.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] thinks that these activities ought not to be centralized here in Washington. I can say to the gentleman that very little or none of this $50,000,000 is going to be expended in the city of Washington for the making of munitions. Those expenditures are to be made at the great plants where we must make the powder and shot to whip from the face of the earth the worst vandals that ever lived. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. But we can not whip them in this House, can we?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We can help and make the appropriations that will whip them.

Mr. BUTLER. There is no Hun here that we can whip.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We must get up the organizations and provide the sinews to do it.

Mr. BUTLER. We can not fight them here.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We must get up a fighting spirit here and not talk about details that are not material.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Sometimes gentlemen speaking say "$50,000,000" and sometimes they say "$60,000,000." The gentleman himself says $50,000,000. What is the amount that is proposed to be appropriated by this bill?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Fifty million dollars is appropriated for this purpose, and an amendment will be introduced by the Committee on the District of Columbia for $10,000,000 additional to construct buildings here to house the people that are coming to Washington to help win.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That amendment has not yet shown up?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That accounts for the variation.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman says we ought not to talk about the details.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I said immaterial details.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That we ought not to attempt to save something of the hundreds of millions of dollars that are asked for and which are not intended to produce arms and ammunition.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We do not talk enough about the material details. Everything should be subservient to the winning of this war—the manufacture of powder, bullets, ships, aeroplanes, and guns.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. COX. I have not kept up with this legislation as I ought to have done. As to this $50,000,000 appropriation in this bill, will any part of it be expended in Washington?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Not much. If the gentleman will look at the hearings, he will find that great steel plants and munition factories, like the Bethlehem Steel Co. and Hammond, Ind., lack workmen to run to their capacity or near it.

Mr. BURNETT. If the gentleman will permit, the navy-yard employees and other employees will come under that.

Mr. COX. I understand an amendment will be offered for $10,000,000 to take care of the employees here, including navy-yard employees?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. What I mean is that there are numbers of men working out here in the navy yard, and if there are insufficient housing facilities for them they would come within the provisions of the $50,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may have further time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Now, in order to show the care with which this bill was considered in committee, I wish to say that Mr. Eidlitz himself took part in framing this bill, and consented to the proposition that this board should make reports telling what was done with this money at every session of Congress. That does not look like a man seeking self-interest. We put that provision in the bill. We heard the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], my colleague, recite a most scandalous condition in relation to the construction of buildings and cantonments in Mississippi. In this bill there is a provision by which contracts will be submitted to at least three competitive bidders, and they will not be let upon the cost-plus plan. Mr. Eidlitz said, "If I administer this work"—and he was not seeking the job—"I will use that office for the purpose of letting these contracts in competition, and I will not let these contracts upon the cost-plus plan." Does that look like self-interest or self-seeking?

If we are to go into this activity, if we are to supply these munition plants with labor, we must have these houses constructed. We can not get this war material unless we make it, and there is no telling how much we must make. How soon this war will end depends largely upon the energy we put into it. We are strong enough in material and man force to win this war alone, but we will win quicker if we realize and understand the enormity of our undertaking. The more we do and the sooner we do it the quicker we will get caught up with Germany, which has for 40 years been preparing. We have our soldiers "over there," and to-day they are singing the Star-Spangled Banner while marching toward the face of the enemy, and we will back them up here. I am pleased to see the sentiment here. They can rely upon the United States of America, their country and their home. While they are fighting we are working in unison with them and must do everything possible to aid them. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, of course everything that comes now comes in the name of "the boys in the trenches."

Certainly they are to be cared for, and cared for well. Sometimes I think that if we could be a little more practical and find out what the bills we consider mean, maybe the boys in the trenches would get along better than if we should merely be using language; it is action, not words, we desire. I want to understand about this bill.

Did I understand the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] to say that an amendment would be offered carrying $10,000,000 for Washington, contemplating the erection, not of temporary buildings, but of permanent buildings in Washington, going beyond the war, for the employees, and that this is a mere camel's nose, and so on?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. CANNON. I have only five minutes. I may need more. I am trying to get information.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to say that the idea of the committee was this, that it would be a waste of money to build temporary buildings in a community like this. We have a provision here to the effect that all these operations shall stop when the war ends, and that the Secretary shall have no further power, except to rent or dispose of these buildings. Our idea was that we could dispose of these buildings at a reasonable price to the employees.

Mr. CANNON. Does that refer to permanent buildings in the District?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, we are spending millions of dollars, to do what? To house in temporary buildings, down on the Mall and elsewhere all over the country, the clerical employees of the Government, these employees who work in the daytime. But now we are to construct permanent buildings. I understand the scheme to be to construct permanent buildings, with authority, if this bill passes with the gentleman's amendment, to build permanent houses in which the employees and their families are to live after the war.

Now, if I am right about that, I am against it. If temporary buildings will do for them to work in in the daytime, temporary for and during the war, they would be removed, or would they be removed, in peace times?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman will permit me, I hope the gentleman did not understand me to say that these houses would be permanent for the employees to live in after the war was over. What was in the mind of the committee was that after the war was over these houses owned by the Government could be sold to employees of the Government who were going to remain here permanently—sold on long time at a low rate of interest.

Mr. CANNON. My colleague wanted to make a suggestion along this line?

Mr. MADDEN. I just wanted to say to my colleague that I presume the purpose of making these buildings permanent was not so much to continue to beautify the city of Washington or the District of Columbia as it was to find employment for the men who are engaged in the building trades who are now thrown out of work on account of the war; and that is a legitimate proposition.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Where did the gentleman get that idea?

Mr. MADDEN. I know they are all out of work—every one of them.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want the gentleman to understand that this committee has not advanced any such idea as that.

Mr. MADDEN. The committee may not understand it, but it is as proper a thing to do to find employment for these men as it is to find employment for other men, or to find housing for other people.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. We are not trying to find employment for anybody. We are trying to take care of those whom we have employed.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say again, if permanent buildings are contemplated, under a $10,000,000 appropriation which is admitted to be for the purpose of housing employees in the city of Washington to work in these temporary buildings that we put up, that are to be removed when the war closes, then I am against it, because if they can work in the daytime in temporary buildings they can sleep in the nighttime in temporary buildings.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY rose.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Before the gentleman from Kentucky speaks, may we have these amendments reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the clerk will again report the amendment and the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. CLARK of Florida: Amend by inserting, after the word "families," in line 7, on page 1, the following language: "And employees of the United States whose duties require them to reside in the District of Columbia, and whose services are essential to war needs, and their families."

Amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. WALDOW, of New York: Insert, after the word "Columbia" in the Clark amendment, the words "the city of Buffalo, State of New York."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, that an acute housing situation exists in parts of the country there can be no question in the minds of those who are well informed. As to why this condition exists there may be many theories. It is only fair to say that some of the congestion that has taken place by virtue of the placing of munition and war orders in one section of the country was forced, first, by the expansion in that character of business under orders from foreign countries before we were at war, and, second, by the immediate necessity for skilled labor along similar lines.

But whatever be the cause, and whether or not it can be prevented from being further accentuated in the future, there is now a pressing need of dealing with the housing problem in the country at large. There is also a similar need here in the District of Columbia, and that need could not be avoided by taking from the District of Columbia any of the activities that are now here. It is not practicable to put most of these activities elsewhere. The men in charge of them must be at the seat of Government, to be in consultation with men at the head of other activities, and to be subject to immediate touch with the President and with the heads of the regular departments of the Government, but there ought to be a different policy pursued touching how we shall take care of this situation in the country at large and in the District of Columbia; and it is for that purpose that I have taken the floor. We will of necessity have to depend in large measure upon the intelligent administration of this law as to matters outside of the District, because Congress can not gather the information or take the time to undertake to see to it in what particular cities and in what particular manner the congestion may be relieved. But touching the District of Columbia Congress has more information, more accurate information, and more knowledge of influences that operate in the District of Columbia than any commission will have or can have. Therefore I for one should be opposed to the insertion in this bill of the provision including the District of Columbia, unless I believed that this committee would, in its wisdom, see fit to restrict the power that is conferred so far as it relates to the District of Columbia.

When we finish the end of the first section I propose to offer the following amendment:

Provided further, That the powers herein authorized shall not be exercised in the housing of governmental employees in the District of Columbia except upon detailed estimates and appropriations for such purpose.

That will bring to the Appropriations Committee an estimate as to what is proposed to be done touching the housing of employees, and where it is proposed to be done in the District of Columbia. That will require the Committee on Appropriations in turn to bring to the Congress concrete proposals for the housing of such employees in the District of Columbia. The differences of opinion which have been expressed by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] can then be thrashed out where they ought to be thrashed out, here on the floor, as to whether there shall be temporary or permanent buildings, as to whether they shall be on the Mall or on the Plaza, or where.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. In a moment. We can attend to these matters; and, I repeat, we know more about the District of Columbia and how to fit in this activity with existing ones here than any commission can know, and I would not be willing to trust any commission to spend $10,000,000 in the District of Columbia, for this purpose or any other purpose, without Congress having something to say as to the details. Now, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. The suggestion I was going to make was that the amendment of the gentleman ought to extend to the whole appropriation, because then we would get detailed information as to what was being done at every point.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will answer the gentleman simply to this extent: I trust that the Committee on Appropriations will have sufficient appreciation of its obligation to the House to obtain all the information that in reason can be obtained touching expenditures anywhere; but I submit to the House that it is manifestly impossible for that committee to obtain that information, and, having obtained it, to exercise a real judgment on it touching places all over America in the same sense that it could touching the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more, and I will try not to use it all.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman seems to understand, as I think a good many of the Members understand, that this amendment is only to apply to the $10,000,000 appropriation. I think the gentleman is entirely mistaken, because it is in the first section of the bill, and it applies to all the appropriations of the bill. In other words, all of the money——

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman did not catch the reading of my proposed amendment.

Mr. TOWNER. I am not objecting to the gentleman's amendment. I think it is all right, if it is to be adopted at all; but I am not speaking about that amendment. I am speaking about the committee amendment, which applies in general terms to all the appropriations of the bill; so that all the money could be spent in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, yes; it could be if we were fools enough to appropriate it, but we are not going to. There is no danger of the Committee on Appropriations appropriating for the District of Columbia, and there is no danger that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds would come in here, or that anybody else would come in here, with the idea of appropriating $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 to be spent in the District of Columbia. We have enough practical problems ahead of us without getting worried about those that are not going to arise. And, in answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], I repeat in my judgment it is not practicable to put such detailed restrictions around the expenditure of the money over the country at large as to enable this work to be done expeditiously, as it needs to be done if it is to perform the purpose for which it is to be spent. We ought as far as we can to check up, and I hope we will; but, touching the District of Columbia, there are a great many problems beyond that simply of housing these employees. We ought not to let these people house them without regard to a great many other activities and requirements of the Government; and we have the information, as I say, greater than they will ever have, touching the District and as to where and how the moneys should be expended.

I have a personal view, not a final one, because I try not to make final views in this day of rapid readjustment of ideas. I have a view that we can build fireproof buildings for housing the women—and those are the ones we need to look out for the most—in the District of Columbia at a price cheap enough to give them rooms infinitely cheaper than they are getting them now and at the same time take care of the interest and amortize most of the principal invested in the building. I think it is possible to build a series of hotels in which a single room can be given to a girl for $12 a month. If that is practicable—and it will be a matter to be demonstrated by actual figures—it is infinitely better than going into a program of building residential houses subsequently to be sold.

Now, the test is going to come here and elsewhere between doing this thing as a necessary incident to the war and doing it so as to carry out the theories of some gentlemen touching the social conditions that should surround the workers here and elsewhere. We might as well be frank about the matter. I have no objection to improving the conditions of mankind wherever possible, but I have not yet reached the point where I believe, under the guise of war necessities, the Government of the United States that is struggling now—painfully struggling—to carry out necessary functions, should go into the unnecessary and probably undesirable one of creating such a socialistic state as to guarantee by public building the environment of the people of America.

That is the actual line of cleavage that you will find all through this. I hope if the House concurs, as the necessities of the occasion make necessary, in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida, including the District of Columbia, it will also agree to the amendment I have suggested restricting it. It is manifest the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WALDOW] ought not to be agreed to because you ought not in this bill to specify every city where you spend this money. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Florida will accept the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky. If that is agreed to, I will be glad to vote for his amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I did not understand the gentleman from Kentucky to offer an amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have not offered it; it is not in order at this point.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment striking out the last two words.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not want to shut off debate, but I thought debate had been exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been exhausted on both amendments.

Mr. TOWNER. I ask for recognition in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on these pending amendments close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendments close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I object.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered to the amendment by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WALDOW].

Mr. WALDOW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from New York will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

The question was taken; and on a division there were—46 ayes and 9 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page 1, line 4, the words "local" and "other."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the comma after "housing" and strike out the word "local," and after the word "and" strike out the word "other."

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I wish to bring to the attention of this House again a solution of vital importance to this matter of housing. I realize that gentlemen may think I am merely speaking for Baltimore, but I want to say that if we could arrange in some way to have regular trains leaving here on time and taking employees back and forward between here and Baltimore we could relieve to a large extent this expenditure. We have a city of 700,000 people. You have a city here of 200,000 white people. England is mobilizing 50,000,000 of people, and she has the city of London with 5,000,000 people to center all of these activities in. France is mobilizing a people of 40,000,000, and has the city of Paris, with about 3,000,000, to center all that in. America, mobilizing a country of 110,000,000 people, has only the city of Washington, you might say, to which to bring all of these activities, a city of something over 200,000 white people. I submit that there is only a slight distance between Baltimore and Washington, only 40 miles, and if trains are put on and run properly, you can add to the city of Washington within 45 minutes a city of 700,000 people, and carry these employees back and forth, and relieve a large part of this expenditure and congestion.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. What would be the actual cost for commuters between here and Baltimore on such a special train?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I think the Government could very easily carry commuters backward and forward to Baltimore for somewhere about $8 or $10 a month. The railroads are now charging $16.60, including the war tax; the electric line several dollars less. This matter is not something that is going to take time, like building homes. You can do this thing inside of a day almost, by putting on trains that will leave at a proper time and leave the other end at the proper time. Immediate relief is what is needed. You can not do it well under the general railroad schedules, because you have trains late for various reasons, and in the wintertime it would be impossible to do it on the regular train schedule. The trains run so irregularly. I tried to commute, and I did it up until the 15th of January, and some of the days I spent six hours on the trains going backward and forward. That was under the general schedule. What we want is special trains. I would leave there about daylight and get back after dark, so that you can see that for the year around on the present railroad schedule it would be quite a hardship, though many do so in spite of the task. You must establish trains to carry the employees, to bring them from Baltimore here, and have these trains leave at a specified time. If we would do that we would save millions of dollars of these expenditures for buildings. Why, you can build a railroad from Baltimore to Washington for less than what some of these buildings are going to cost you. I do not want to take up too much of the time of the House, but I do want to tell you that this is a matter of very serious consideration, not alone for Baltimore but for the Government at large.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Can the gentleman inform the committee how he would avoid the question of getting through the tunnel at Baltimore? My experience in going to Baltimore is that you frequently spend more time after you reach the tunnel in Baltimore than you do in going from here to the tunnel. How are you going to avoid that?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I would say in reply to that, that the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. did have a great deal of trouble with its tunnel. It was enlarging it and making certain repairs, but that work has all been completed. So far as the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. is concerned there is no tunnel to Baltimore, from here, and so far as the electric line is concerned there is no tunnel.

Mr. PLATT. Why not move a lot of these offices right out of Washington to Baltimore bodily?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is a good suggestion, but the trouble is that they are now here, and you have to take care of them. If we had started that in the beginning we could have relieved the congestion.

Mr. PLATT. I understand that one branch of the Army has moved its office over there within the last week.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Then it has used good judgment, because they will get good homes there and be among good people.

Mr. ELSTON. Why would not the word "local" include the matter of transportation?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I do not know. I did not ask the chairman of the committee as to that. This is interstate traffic between the District of Columbia and Maryland, and I do not think the word "local" would include it.

I tell you we are in a position where people must crowd themselves a little. There are a great many homes in Washington where people could live, there are a great many families in Washington to-day living in a great many more rooms than they need, and the Government has got to take this matter in hand and see that the people do accommodate the workers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. There are plenty of homes in Washington that are not crowded, and if the matter could be brought to the attention of these people I believe a great many employees in Washington would be taken care of by them. But there are lots of private homes in Baltimore where the people would be willing now, on account of the high prices, to gladly take care of these young ladies who have come to Washington and who want homes. I suggest in all seriousness that Congress consider this matter of commutation. This is not the last $50,000,000 that we are going to talk about, and it is not the last $10,000,000 that we are going to talk about spending in the District of Columbia, because employees are coming here constantly, and when we look at these large office buildings going up we know that there will be thousands of them come here and millions of dollars will be appropriated, and yet within 45 minutes you have a city of 700,000 that will help you to take care of them.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. The director of the whole railroad system is now the Secretary of the Treasury. Would it not be within his power and that of the Interstate Commerce Commission to give you more trains without going to this Government expenditure?

Mr. LINTHICUM. It is not a question of more trains. We have plenty of trains, and at this time they are running on schedule splendidly; but you should have particular trains to carry these employees which will get them home and bring them back in time for business in the morning. We have plenty of trains, and they are running heavily loaded.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Could not the Director General arrange the schedule and accomplish that purpose?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I think he could. I do not think there is any question about that, but I think a direction from Congress would give the matter a strong impetus.

Mr. HICKS. In the gentleman's opinion, 80 miles a day is not an excessive distance for a person to commute. It seems to me that is a large number of miles.

Mr. LINTHICUM. There are plenty of employees living in the District of Columbia who take longer time to come to their office than the time to take a fast train to Baltimore. There are thousands now living in the vicinity of New York City who take an hour each way to go to their business.

Mr. HICKS. If my friend will permit, he will remember that after they arrive in Baltimore City they have to go on a trolley car 5 or 6 miles farther, perhaps.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to this fact: That the Pennsylvania Railroad lands right at Pennsylvania Avenue and at Edmondson Avenue, in the western section of the city. The Union Station is at the center of the city, and the Baltimore & Ohio lands in the southern and northern sections of the city. The electric trolley line runs to the midst of the business section and passes through the southern residential section, and these roads can land men almost within 10 blocks of where they desire to go.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the motion of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM]. The question of housing and furnishing community facilities has got to be taken care of in a practical way. You can not expect employees to live in Baltimore and waste a good deal of time going from their houses to the depot there and then coming 40 miles to Washington, and then from the depot to the departments in which they work, and expect to get practical results. Now, the same situation applies in different sections of this country where our Government has awarded contracts for the building of ships and the manufacture of munitions and other things essential to the winning of the war. Up in Pennsylvania they are taking men from 25 to 30 and 35 miles away from their homes daily to work in these munition factories, transporting them back and forth every day. The reason for it is there is no housing facilities at South Bethlehem and other places, and the men spend several hours each day traveling that could be utilized in productive labor, and this same condition applies to different sections of this country. Now, we have got to adopt some sort of a plan to give them a proper place to live if we expect to get results in the way of increased production of war munitions, ships—especially ships, the most important need of this country and our allies at this time. It has been testified to before the Committee on Labor, and I presume before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, that in many instances in munition districts three men occupied the same bed in 24 hours. Now, it is a common occurrence for two men to occupy the same bed in 24 hours. Men will probably put up with some inconvenience for awhile. They have brought thousands of men in from distant cities, and expect them to settle in those districts, without any thought as to the conditions under which these men were going to live. Wherever we have undertaken our war activities men of families have been brought to work. They come, look the situation over, and they leave. The statement was made that the labor turnover was such that in one instance one concern, in order to get 600 steady workers, were compelled to employe 11,000 before securing the required number. It is not a question of getting the right kind of labor and in sufficient numbers, but it is a question of providing facilities for labor when you get it where it is mostly needed, whether it happens to be a department in Washington where you want clerical or technical help, or in the shipyard or munition factory, where we need all kinds of skilled and unskilled labor for war work. You have got to provide proper housing and community facilities for these workers if we expect to get the maximum of efficiency and production. They will not work to the best advantage if their home surroundings are not made at least decent and comfortable.

Now, you can not get them even to work here in the District of Columbia at their best and travel back and forth probably anywhere from 90 to 100 miles a day and waste two or three hours going and coming from work. They are taking men from San Francisco and the surrounding bay region to the Mare Island Navy Yard, 2 hours a day on the train or 2 hours a day on the water each way. Those men put in almost 14 hours, leaving home in the morning and returning in the evening, to put in 8 hours work, and the Navy Department pays for their transportation. Is that proper? Can you expect to get the best results from labor in this way? You must furnish some sort of facilities for these people. If you are going to build houses, if you are going to plan houses in the District of Columbia, why not build them permanent and get something out of them for your investment? If we expend millions of dollars for buildings to be torn down after the war is over, we are doing that now in the Mall, where people will work during the day, they must have some sort of modern conveniences in their homes when they get there in the evening. They ought to be given modern conveniences, and this thing can be so arranged. I have no objection to a check on this expenditure for the District of Columbia; I think there should be some check on the expenditure, but when you do expend this money on a proper location in the District of Columbia you should build permanent buildings, and even if they expect, as I heard one man suggest, to get bungalows for each worker; give them bungalows and make them pay rental until such time as we decide to dispose of them permanently to the Government employees. Why not? We are furnishing the farmer with seed by loaning him money; we are relieving the banks of some of their obligations by the war-finance bill, why should not the Government employee here and in the vicinity of the navy yards and arsenals throughout the country have an opportunity to buy this land and these houses either now or after the war? Why can not we realize after this war is over on something? We are spending hundreds of millions and billions of dollars for war purposes, which is to go up in smoke. Let us try to save something out of this money. You can make your buildings permanent, and you can dispose of this property so you will get the most beneficial results, so far as rentals are concerned, and as far as getting back all of the money we spend in constructing permanent buildings or homes, the bill confers this power to so dispose of all these buildings and other properties.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NOLAN. I will.

Mr. BARNHART. I just wanted to inquire of the gentleman if he had in mind the fact that there may come to the city of Washington forty or fifty thousand Government employees in addition to those already—emergency employees—and that if the war should end those emergency employees would be out of the service; and if we should build permanent houses for those, and they should then of necessity have to leave the city, the Government would have a lot of permanent houses on hand which it could not sell and probably would not want to sell.

Mr. NOLAN. I will say to the gentleman common-sense administration of the provisions of this bill, I think, would take care of that. I believe we should try to build permanent houses for all those who might stay here after the war, giving preference to those who desire to buy, whether they are newcomers or old-timers. Let me call attention to this fact: Before the 1st of July of this year the alley law says that 8,000 people must get out of the alleys of Washington. What are you going to do with them? Some provision will have to be made for housing these people, if the law goes into effect; either that or this Congress will have to repeal or suspend temporarily the provisions of the act doing away with these alley houses. We can not drive these people out on the streets. They must be allowed to live in these houses, or else the Government will have to build immediately houses to take care of them. The gentleman from Indiana need have no fear that we will overbuild in a permanent way the city of Washington with the $10,000,000 provided in this bill for the District of Columbia.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute to the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, by striking out the words, in line 4, "local transportation."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 1, line 4, after the word "housing," strike out the words "local transportation."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I would like to hear the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM]. I understand this is an amendment to his amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. A substitute for the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Oh, all right. Go ahead.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, we are launching upon a policy which, if this war continues for a year, will involve, in my opinion, an expenditure of half a billion dollars, at least. Every community throughout the country where industries are located that are engaged in war activities will be besieging the local representatives for some of these funds for the erection of buildings in those respective localities. I think we will be going fast enough in this bill if we authorize the erection of housing facilities, without extending it to transportation facilities. And the reason why I am strongly urging that amendment is that in the war finance bill now pending in conference we authorize the banking corporation to advance money on long-time loans directly for the purpose of improving transportation facilities of public utility companies which are engaged in transporting people to industries connected with the war. It was stated in that debate that it was presented informally to the attention of the Ways and Means Committee that there were certain street railway companies, such as that in Detroit, which was in need of financial assistance and could not receive it because of the uncertain status of their franchise. And I assume that there are other railroad companies which are in need of similar financial support.

We have provided a means in the war finance bill to help that character of transportation facilities. But why should we here delegate to a different agency entirely authority to build or to lease or to advance money for the same character of work? We should never duplicate the same help that is going to be granted to the same character of utility. We should especially avoid that. And I believe it is far better for the War Finance Corporation to advance money directly on long-time security so as to allow the local corporations to expand and develop rather than for the Secretary of Labor, as here provided, to advance money directly to even build transportation facilities and to meet the same purpose.

So, I say, we should not try to duplicate endeavor, but should be satisfied with allowing the money to be advanced to private interests on adequate security, as is done in the war finance bill, rather than to authorize the Secretary of Labor here to either direct transportation facilities or to advance money to the same character of corporations.

Mr. McKENZIE. I take it that the gentleman from Wisconsin has read the hearings very carefully, and I would like to ask him——

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is mistaken. I have not read them carefully, but I have glanced over the hearings, and I have listened to the general debate, and particularly to the argument of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] in justification of this transportation feature.

Mr. McKENZIE. What I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin is whether he has any knowledge of any particular situation in the country where it would be necessary for this power to be given? If not, why put it in?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will state an instance where perhaps the Secretary of Labor will advance money to meet conditions in Detroit. The Government has advanced about $50,000,000 to the Dodge Bros. for the erection of a very large plant 6½ miles from the business center of the city of Detroit. During the Christmas holidays I chanced to take an automobile ride out there where those employees were busy——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where those employees were busy erecting the plant which is going to be engaged in the manufacture of munitions. Everyone who is acquainted with transportation facilities in Detroit knows that private capital refused to advance money to the D. U. R. because it is operating under a temporary franchise. I suppose that corporation will come to this War Finance Corporation for a loan of money so as to improve its facilities for transporting the large number of employees from one portion of Detroit to the other. And so, also, as was stated in the consideration of the Emergency Fleet Corporation bill, it was necessary, in the district which has grown so rapidly since the war began, from Philadelphia south to Wilmington, that the suburban railway was in need of money to be advanced in order to transport the large number of employees from Philadelphia down to Hog Island, and to Belmont, where the Baldwin Locomotive Works are established, and to those large establishments all along the Pennsylvania line southward from Philadelphia. Having made provision in the war-finance bill and also in the Shipping Board bill for the ship industry itself, I do not see why we should duplicate it, and so I wish to limit our authorization solely to housing facilities. Let us provide first the housing facilities for a large number of employees in those districts which have grown up so rapidly and where local capital, perhaps, will not advance money because they think the establishment will only be temporary in character and there will be no need for homes after the end of the war.

Let us meet that situation, but do not let us duplicate the authorization by providing transportation here, when we have provided money through the War Finance Board to meet this same condition by loans and advances made on long-time security to the private corporations that are now operating these railroad facilities.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. On the transportation question, I wish to ask the gentleman this question, which came up in the hearings: A munition plant is within a reasonable distance of a large city, like Hammond, Ind.; that, for instance, is 6 miles out from Chicago; would you think it would be better to erect buildings at a large expense of millions of dollars or run a little transportation line out there?

Mr. STAFFORD. I would say the practical business solution of that question would be to advance money through the War Finance Corporation to the present interurban road that is now operating from Chicago down to Hammond rather than for the Secretary of Labor to build a line. There are transportation facilities, as the gentleman may know, running down to Hammond and Gary, and if they can not get adequate facilities the War Finance Corporation can advance money, as authorized in the war finance bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ESCH. I would like recognition for three or four minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. ESCH. I wish to call attention to a feature of this bill that may have escaped the attention of those who framed it. In the railroad compensation bill recently enacted we inserted on the floor of the House a provision giving to the Director General of Railroads authority to take over short-line roads, but we specifically exempted from that provision urban and interurban lines. But subsequent sections of the railroad bill give the Director General the power to take over electric, urban, and interurban lines, and I call your attention to the proclamation of the President, issued on the 26th day of December, reading as follows:

Nothing herein shall be construed as now affecting the possession, operation, and control of street electric passenger railways, including railways commonly called interurbans, whether such railways be or be not owned or controlled by such railroad companies or systems. By subsequent order and proclamation, if and when it shall be found necessary or desirable, possession, control, or operation may be taken of all or any part of such street railway systems, including subways and tunnels.

The railway compensation bill therefore gives the Director General practically the right to take over, to commandeer, to lease any urban or interurban line. It also gives him the power to take over terminal lines, or even to construct terminal lines, or make extensions to existing roads.

That power already having been granted in the railroad compensation act, it seems to me in this pending bill we are duplicating the power, because almost in every section and provision of this bill we give to the Secretary of Labor the right to control, the right to lease, to purchase local transportation. It may be that giving this power to the Secretary of Labor may bring him in conflict with the powers already granted to the Director General of Railroads. I merely make that suggestion for the consideration of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, my attention has been called to Senate bill 3388, a bill introduced by Senator FLETCHER, of Florida, granting power to the Emergency Shipping Board to take possession of, lease, or assume control of, or purchase the street railways and interurban roads and short lines. Is that in conflict with the provisions of this bill?

Mr. ESCH. I think it would raise another cause of friction.

Mr. ELSTON. I see that bill has been reported favorably.

Mr. ESCH. You will notice that subsection A, on page 1, gives to the Secretary of Labor power "to purchase, acquire by lease, construct, requisition, or acquire by condemnation or otherwise such houses, buildings, furnishings, improvements, local transportation, and other community facilities and parts thereof as he may determine to be necessary." What for? For the proper conduct of the existing war. It does seem to me, after you have given the Director General of the Railroads all these great powers for the successful conduct of the war, we ought not to dilute that power by giving it to any other department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely trust that neither of these amendments will be adopted. The committee spent some time on this very portion of the bill. It was realized that it was absolutely necessary in some cases for the Secretary of Labor to render assistance by way of loans of money or making increased facilities or taking over the roads, or portions of them, in order to transport laborers from the place of work to their homes. Now, the law with reference to giving the Director General the power was enacted to give him power for the purpose of promoting general transportation. Here is a power for a specific purpose, which we propose to confer on the Secretary of Labor. There will be no conflict. It is not possible, it is not thinkable, that there will be any conflict, because if the Secretary of Labor should ever take over any of these transportation lines they would be little short lines from some plant to the place of residence of the workmen. That is all.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. NOLAN. I understood that the Secretary of the Treasury had looked this bill over and had finally given his assent to it. Is that right?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I understand that is true.

Mr. NOLAN. Carrying that provision in it to commandeer local transportation?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM], if adopted, would mean to throw this bill wide open and take over any railroad or transportation line in the United States. If the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is adopted, then it deprives the Secretary of Labor absolutely of the power to increase the facilities of transportation lines from the place of residence to the place of work. Neither of these amendments should be adopted, and I hope they will be voted down.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not in the hearings anyone appeared before the committee and submitted any particular case that tended to influence the members of the committee in writing this provision in the bill?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not remember any particular instance where they said it was necessary to do it. But I do know that they stated generally that it might be necessary.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will permit, does he not think it rather a dangerous form of legislation to put in blanket provisions like this unless there is some crying need and necessity for it?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Well, it was mentioned, for instance, I believe, that it might be necessary at Hog Island to increase the local transportation. But whether it was or was not, the committee thinks that this whole legislation, of course, is absolutely foreign to all our ideas of legislation in ordinary times. If it were not for the war, if it were not for the conditions existing that confront us, it would not be here at all.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will permit me, I can see very clearly—and I think every man in the House can see—the necessity for a provision in this bill for housing the industrial workers in these various plants. We know the facts about that, but there is not a single particle of evidence before this committee, or at least I have not heard of any, that will justify a man in voting against the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] in striking out this language from the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Well, Mr. Chairman, I think the case of Hammond, Ind., was one case where the workers might live in Chicago and go back and forth. The inclusion of that can not possibly do any harm. We thought it would be much better for the Government, rather than go into a great house-building operation, if it could loan money to a company already in operation and enable it to increase its facilities and transport workers from their residences to the place of work to do that. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered as a substitute by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 33.

The CHAIRMAN. On this vote the ayes are 26 and the noes 33, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. STAFFORD. I demand tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I make the point of order that that demand comes too late.

Mr. STAFFORD. What has intervened, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think it comes too late. The gentleman from Wisconsin demands tellers. [After counting.] Seven Members, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused. The amendment is rejected. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer another committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert a new paragraph immediately following paragraph (d)——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That part has not been read yet, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that has not yet been reached.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I withhold it for the present.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I want to perfect the paragraph by an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas: Page 1, line 3, strike out the words "that the Secretary of Labor," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That a commission composed of the Secretary of Labor, the chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the chairman of the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the chairman of the building committee of the Council of National Defense, and the Superintendent of the Capitol."

Mr. DYER. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Let the gentleman make the point of order, if it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. DYER. I make it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri makes a point of order. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. DYER. I make it on the ground that it is not germane to that section.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas desire to be heard?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; I do not desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order and recognizes the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in the vain hope of saving $300,000 for the fiscal year 1918. I know that it is almost useless to try to save money to the Treasury of the United States at this time. We should serve no useful purpose. eW have an organization in the boys in the trenches rather than providing fat jobs for deserving Democrats, taking men out of the productive activities of life and placing them in jobs here in Washington, where they can serve no useful purpose. We have an organization in the Treasury Department that can be utilized in connection with the commission I propose in this amendment without the additional expense of a single dollar. Will gentlemen take that organization, or will they reach into the Treasury and take $300,000 to make jobs for their friends? Washington is already congested with men and women who are producing nothing, and many of them doing nothing to earn the salaries which they are paid.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield for a question.

Mr. LONDON. Does not the gentleman think this talk is rather too late to be of any influence in to-morrow's election in Wisconsin?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, unlike the gentleman from New York, I have my mind on things that do not pertain to elections. I am interested in conserving the money in the Treasury of the United States [applause] and saving the people from having to pay additional taxes, buy bonds and war-savings stamps to pay the salaries of the friends of the gentleman from New York who, I take it, are being provided for out of this $300,000. This amendment, if agreed to, will keep the Congress in close touch with the Treasury and with the activities of the building operations that are necessary.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; I can not yield.

Mr. MEEKER. For a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have but five minutes.

Mr. MEEKER. Just one question.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I can not yield. We must have some control of the expenditure of these colossal sums of money. It is said hereby gentlemen who discuss these matters that it is unpatriotic to inquire into details, but somebody must save the Treasury, somebody must protect the taxpayers, somebody must do something to save the money to buy arms and ammunition. Already billions have been spent, and we are without arms, without ammunition, without flying machines and aeroplanes, without facilities that would give our boys in France a fighting man's chance. Billions have been spent on trimmings, while arms and ammunition have not been provided. Men are more interested in providing for organizations, overhead expenses, jobs for their friends in Washington, than they are in providing arms and ammunition for the boys in the trenches.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to perfect the text, to strike out the words——

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Chairman, is there not an amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. LUNN. I wish to speak against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to offer an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. LUNN. I want to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Chairman, there was a time when the question was asked—I do not know why it was asked nor when, but it went all over the United States—"What's the matter with Kansas?" Now the question is, "What's the matter with the gentleman from Kansas?"

I am beginning to wonder what is the motive that causes such anxiety on the part of the gentleman. I do not want to suggest that his ambition to save the Treasury is not perfectly sincere, but I would dislike to think that he is the only Member of this House who is interested in the Treasury of the United States. If he expects that $50,000,000 can be properly expended without some organization adequate to the expenditure, he is not very convincing, and the parts of his speech that do not appeal to me as being consistent with his claim for saving the Treasury are those parts which are susceptible of the interpretation of being decidedly political. I have heard two political speeches by the gentleman from Kansas during the past two days. I think it was on Saturday—or it may have been on Friday—that I first heard him, and in speaking he used the phrase "deserving Democrats." He has just repeated that cunning couplet. Now, I do not care a rap for "deserving Democrats" or "deserving Republicans." I do not care a rap, in this emergency, whether a Member is a Democrat, a Republican, a Socialist, or a Prohibitionist. My only concern is that he be an American; a man who is looking at legislation, in these serious days, purely and solely as an American. [Applause.] To inject a political phrase into our discussion arouses my blood——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Is the gentleman interested in the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. LUNN. Assuredly I am interested in the Treasury, and that is the reaon I do not want thousands of dollars wasted by political speeches on the floor of the House.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Kansas, who refused to be interrupted, has no right to interrupt the gentleman from New York without his consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The gentleman from New York will proceed.

Mr. LUNN. To my mind we are absolutely called upon without question to provide houses for these workers in the munition plants, and the thing for us to do is to get these houses, and to get them as quickly as we can. Any word that we utter unnecessarily is a word that costs blood. These wasted words, these wasted speeches, these political flurries, and this very amendment are consuming precious time while our boys are on the battle front. I almost feel like apologizing for taking even five minutes to protest against waste of time. Some gentlemen are arguing along lines that are not in the interest of real saving for the Treasury. They seem to have some ulterior object, if we are to judge by their remarks. The crux of the question is, Do we need the houses? No one doubts that. Can we get them without paying for them? And that is answered in the negative. Then we must estimate about how much we need. The committee, after consideration, says $50,000,000 for housing throughout the country. That is the issue, and should be settled quickly.

There are some here who, instead of thinking about this as a problem, are worrying more about setting precedents. Why worry about precedents? The old order has gone forever. When this war is over these men who have been in the trenches are coming back, and your old Bourbon ideas—I do not care whether they come from a Bourbon Democrat, or a Bourbon Republican, or a Bourbon Socialist, or a Bourbon Prohibitionist—are going into the discard. We are advancing toward a new day with new ideas. The new dawn approaches. The immediate necessity is to provide dwellings for thousands of loyal workers and do it now. Fifty million dollars is needed as quickly as we can provide it to be expended as efficiently as possible. I am therefore opposed to this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not be adopted. I stated the other day that after very full consideration the members of the Cabinet, when this matter was first talked of, agreed that it ought to be administered in the Department of Labor. The Secretary of Labor was selected as the man and the best agency through which to execute it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman did not agree with that contention when he took the measure away from the Committee on Labor to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Oh, yes; there is a vast difference between the Department of Labor and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. This is a proposition to allow an executive department to administer a law. The other was a proposition to take from the committee a jurisdiction which it did not have and was not entitled to under the rules of the House and give it to a committee that did have jurisdiction. The question whether it was a labor proposition or not made no difference. The gentleman talks about it costing $300,000. The Supervising Architect's Office has no building organization. It has architects, draftsmen, and clerks, and so forth. If this work was given to the Treasury Department, they would have to build up a building organization the same as the Department of Labor will have to.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Not now, but later. They would have to build up a building organization the same as the Department of Labor will have to. They have got their draftsmen and their architects and other clerks, and we have made provision in the bill for the use of that force by the Department of Labor in administering this trust. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman being chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I would like to have him explain to the House and the committee the purport of the observation which he made, and that is this: It is well known that the Supervising Architect, who builds the public buildings, does not build them himself; we know that. He makes the contracts. Now, what would the Secretary of Labor do? Do you mean that he would personally supervise the building of the houses himself, or would he give them out by contract? Does it not all amount to the same thing?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, the whole plan is thoroughly understood. There has been no concealment about it. The Secretary of Labor has selected Mr. Eidlitz to take charge of and administer the trust under him without cost to the Government. Mr. Eidlitz is an experienced contractor and will make the contracts. He will give out contracts to people to build these houses wherever necessary; and that is to be determined by the Secretary of Labor. That is all there is to it. There will be no unnecessary force, no greater expenditure of money under the Secretary of Labor than there would be under the Secretary of the Treasury. In addition to that, we propose to use the force in the Supervising Architect's Office as far as we can. We can not have all of it, because they are engaged in drafting plans and doing their ordinary work. This is an emergency, and we want an organization that will put it through promptly and expeditiously, so that the boys in the trenches, which the gentleman likes to talk about so much, will have the benefit of it.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. KEATING having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9352) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for an assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3714) to provide further for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes.

HOUSING FOR WAR NEEDS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a few minutes on this subject, because it has been discussed so much under a misapprehension. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has been talking against this function being granted to the Secretary of Labor. I think the gentleman fails to perceive all the problems involved. This is not simply a proposition to build houses. That in some respects is a less difficult problem than the others involved. One problem is the problem of getting out workmen who will work. The Supervising Architect has no experience in that, although he may be and undoubtedly is a capable man. It is a question of getting labor to live in certain localities, and a question of providing for them certain accommodations.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. No; I will not yield. If I had time I would yield, although the gentleman did not yield to me. It is a question of accommodating labor as it ought to be accommodated. A man with a family must have decent kinds of quarters, and if you do not give him decent quarters you are not going to get him to work. You are going to lose effectiveness. There are many other problems concerned which I have not the time to take up. But let me suggest that there is the problem of providing the real estate, there is the problem of leasing houses, there is the problem of condemnation of land and houses, and the problem of procuring boarding houses and hotels and tenements, and perhaps the combination of all three.

There is the question of the amount of rent to be charged; there is the question of disposing of the houses after they are built; there is the question of selling them to the workers. All of those things which are more or less social in their nature rather than a matter of construction are involved, and those matters of social or economic nature constitute the difficult phases of the problem. The question of building houses themselves, drawing the plans, and constructing them is in some respects the easiest of all. So that while the Supervising Architect's office has had experience in building public buildings, it has had no more experience than anyone else in dealing with these problems which I have suggested. When all this was gone over by the various administrative officials, Cabinet officers, and the President, it was finally decided that the best place in which to center authority was the Secretary of Labor; and let me point out that we are giving the Secretary of Labor tremendous powers. When we first took up this bill I think every member of the committee wanted to restrict, wanted to limit the powers given in the bill, wanted to put on safeguards to protect the expenditures of money, but here is what we are facing. We must construct these buildings with the utmost speed if we are going to continue this war as vigorously as we should. We have let many valuable months go by now when good labor has been lost and production lessened, because we have not had the places to house the labor. We are looking for speed, we are looking for an energetic speeding up of production, and if we are going to get quick results we have got to lodge the power some place, and we have to grant it without too many restrictions. The more restrictions we put on it the less we can get speed and quick action. It is all important to get haste and to use speed, and for that reason we have given great powers, much greater powers, than any of us originally wanted to give. I now yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has proceeded to argue for the bill so many things that there is no provision in the bill for that I was wondering where he got the basis for his argument. This is a housing proposition, as I understand it.

Mr. PHELAN. The gentleman evidently has not read the bill as carefully as he should.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have read it very carefully.

Mr. PHELAN. I will tell the gentleman that I got my information from a better source than he got his information.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I got mine from the bill.

Mr. PHELAN. The gentleman says that Mr. Eidlitz has already made contracts for the expenditure of, or obligated the Government to expend, $50,000,000 or $100,000,000. I say that statement is not so, because Mr. Eidlitz has no power to do so. Mr. Eidlitz, who has been appointed by the Secretary of Labor to look into this question, and who undoubtedly will be appointed if this bill becomes a law, has started his organization, and he has done a good thing in starting it. We want to get this thing through as soon as possible, and Mr. Eidlitz has done a good work when he has prepared his organization in advance.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with much interest to the speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN], with which I in large measure agree. It is no answer to the necessity for this bill to say that manufacturing plants have been located where they should not have been placed; that we have created the necessity for this measure by placing the activities where these workers must go at places that are remote; that we should have given these contracts to other places and have distributed them through the country. The provision has been made otherwise, and to-day it is of the highest and gravest importance that we proceed as rapidly as we can, and to do that we must avail ourselves of all that has been done. We must continue from where we now are. We can not undo the work of the year which has passed since war was declared.

I have no sympathy with the condemnation or censure of Mr. Eidlitz. It is obvious from what was read by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] that Mr. Eidlitz is a man of standing worthy of this great trust that is to be reposed in him, and I for one condemn any attempt to censure a man unless there is basis for the criticism. It is our privilege and duty to condemn when we see a basis for condemnation. We should condemn whenever we see a ground for censure, but here we have none. We have simply the fact that a man apparently prominent, a man who has made a place for himself in the world, is about to perform for the public a duty commensurate with the important things he has done in private life.

I am in sympathy with the purposes of this bill. I believe these workers should be adequately housed. I believe they should be provided with all the facilities contemplated by this law, but I can not see, and I am not saying it in a partisan sense—I am advocating it from a business standpoint—I can not see why the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] should not prevail. The Secretary of Labor, moreover, has many duties. Why would it not be well to provide for just such a commission as this amendment contemplates? It includes Mr. Eidlitz; it includes the Secretary of Labor. The Secretary of Labor alone can not do this work. It includes the distinguished chairmen of the two committees on public buildings—one in the House and the other in the Senate—who would keep the legislative bodies more closely in touch with this work and enable us to see that the spirit and purpose of this law are observed.

In England to-day, while the Government itself is hampered for funds and has to come to us to borrow money, and in France, too, the industrial worker is better off than he ever was in the history of those countries. I believe that he will be more prosperous in this country, but we should start by providing for him in such a way that he will be happy and contented while he grows prosperous. He is sure to have work at high wages as long as this war lasts if only we provide proper housing conditions about the various plants which will produce our war munitions and supplies, so that he can do the work we must have done.

I favor the enactment of this bill. I favor also the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas, not upon the grounds upon which he has placed it, not upon partisan grounds, not because I criticize Mr. Eidlitz; on the contrary, I commend him and say that he is an admirable citizen of the city of New York—but because I believe that its adoption will mean a more complete realization of the purposes of this necessary and highly commendable measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas) there were—ayes 25, noes 36.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk a further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the words "only during the continuation of the existing law" and the comma following the word "law."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, those words were not contained in the original bill as presented by the Secretary of Labor and as introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Labor. While I realize that we are dealing with a war emergency, with an extraordinary situation which must be met now, and while our immediate object is to satisfy an immediate need, we must not lose sight of the fact that the end of the war will bring with it certain problems. We must not tie the hands of the Secretary of Labor. This provision will, as soon as the war is concluded, prevent the Secretary of Labor from making repairs and from taking care of the buildings constructed at the expense of the Government of the United States. It will compel the Government to practically throw away all the resources expended in the construction of those buildings. It will force the Government to throw upon a demoralized market all the constructed buildings.

Mr. CANTRILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. In a moment. By the retention of those words "only during the continuation of the existence of the war," and, on page 2, line 2, of the phrase "for the proper conduct of the existing war," and then in lines 24 and 25, page 2, and in lines 1 and 2, on page 3, by a repetition of those words, we make it impossible for the Secretary of Labor to retain any structure or retain control of any structures except for one purpose, and that is to sell them and dispose of them at any sacifice to private individuals. That is my objection to retaining these phrases in the bill. That is my objection to this vicious amendment to the bill as presented by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Why should we preclude the Secretary of Labor from utilizing—why should we now preclude the Government from utilizing—the structures built at the expense of the United States? Why should we now compel the Government to sacrifice all the money invested in building these structures? Why should we now tie ourselves to private interests in localities where those buildings will be reared? Why should we now tie the hands of the Government? I realize that we are dealing with a temporary emergency. Why should we fly in the face of every experience of every other country? England is to-day discussing the construction of 1,000,000 houses, with an expenditure of $1,200,000,000; to begin the construction, two years after the war, in addition to the structures built during the war. The French Government has adopted a policy of constructing Government buildings for the purpose of compelling the private landholder to lease his buildings cheaper; in other words, to act as the competitor of the private landholder. Here we are tying the hands of the Government in advance. We are failing to prepare for the really crucial moment, that crucial hour, when, after an expenditure of $50,000,000—of hundreds of millions of dollars—the Government will find itself with buildings on its hands, some 90 per cent ready or 95 per cent ready, some only half completed. When the war ends shall all this wealth be squandered? Are the private interests of the private real estate holders to prevail over the interests of the entire people? During the hearings on this bill before the Committee on Labor this very important fact was brought out by Mr. Ackerman, an architect of experience. I am reading from page 159 of the hearings—last page. Mr. Ackerman was asked what was the difference in cost between a temporary structure and a permanent structure, and his answer was:

When you consider that in temporary housing operation you have to put in roads, sidewalks, sewers, gas, electricity, plumbing, etc., you have a total—I know from conditions in England—of cost in the case of temporary operation amounting to between 80 and 90 per cent of the cost of permanent structures.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to speak for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LONDON. The difference between temporary structures built for temporary purposes and permanent structures is only 10 per cent. At the conclusion of the war we may find ourselves with buildings constructed——

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. I will yield.

Mr. MADDEN. I think that statement ought to be modified—that there is a difference of only 10 per cent in the cost of temporary and permanent——

Mr. LONDON. That is, speaking of a certain class of buildings.

Mr. MADDEN. It would be true if all the underground work and all the overground work, such as sewers, water plumbing, and so forth, had to be carried in, but if you construct a building where all those improvements were already in, then, of course, the condition would be different.

Mr. LONDON. I understand that is on the suggestion of building, as it were, new cities——

Mr. MADDEN. It is a question whether that will be done, or hotel buildings.

Mr. LONDON. I know. But we may have to build new cities. All the provisions wherever they occur in the bill and which have the effect of restricting the Secretary of Labor to temporary structures only should be stricken out. That would leave it to the judgment and good sense of Congress to deal with the problem when it presents itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from New York and the question raised by him in offering his amendment, I desire to call the attention of the committee to section 5 of the bill, which answers fully and completely the issue raised by the gentleman from New York. That section of the bill says:

That the power and authority granted herein shall cease with the termination of the present war, except the power and authority to care for and rent such property as remains undisposed of and to conclude and execute contracts for the sale of property made during the war.

Now, the bill absolutely takes care of the situation presented by the gentleman from New York, because after the war the Secretary of Labor can fully protect in every way the interests of the Government in disposing of this property which he has had constructed or leased. I do not think there is any necessity at all for the amendment offered by the gentleman, because the bill fully and completely meets that very situation.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANTRILL. In just one moment. In further answer to the gentleman from New York (Mr. LONDON), in rather criticizing the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds——

Mr. LONDON. I want to withdraw that statement, because it was an unfair implication.

Mr. CANTRILL. I am glad the gentleman withdraws that, because the committee thoroughly understands that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds had before them all of the hearings presented before the Committee on Labor, and, of course, it would have been simply a waste of time for our committee to have examined men who had already been examined and whose testimony was in those hearings, and I am glad the gentleman realizes that fact and withdraws his statement.

In further answer to the gentleman from New York as to his criticism of the present bill, I beg to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the original bill (H. R. 9642) which was before the Committee on Labor, specifically stated in section 5 that the power and authority granted in paragraphs (a), (b), and (d) shall cease with the termination of the present war with Germany, showing that it was clearly the intention of the Committee on Labor and the Secretary of Labor and all others connected with this proposition, except probably the gentleman from New York, to keep this idea in view, but the bill presented by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, in order to safeguard the interests of the Government in every particular, has added section 5 to the present bill, which gives full authority to the Secretary of Labor to protect the Government.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, may I have one minute in order to ask a question of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL]?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that by unanimous consent debate was limited to 10 minutes on this amendment.

Mr. LONDON. I now ask for one minute in order to ask a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Regular order is called for, and regular order is the vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois: Page 1, line 5, after the word "in," insert "arsenals of the United States and in."

Mr GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee. I believe from what he said on the floor of the House Friday that this amendment will not be regarded adversely by the committee. If this is adopted the section will read as follows:

That the Secretary of Labor, for the purposes of providing housing, local transportation, and other community facilities for such industrial workers as are engaged in arsenals of the United States and in the industries——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman will permit me, Mr. Chairman, I hardly think it is necessary, but the committee is perfectly willing to accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I think it is a safety provision that ought to be in there.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. LONDON. Let the amendment be reported, please.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again read.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DALLINGER: Page 1, line 3, after the word "Labor," insert "when so requested by the Secretary of War or by the Secretary of the Navy."

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee on this matter, because it seems to me that some restriction of this kind is absolutely necessary if the Treasury is to be properly safeguarded. In other words, my amendment simply provides that if the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy shall request the Secretary of Labor to furnish housing for employees in certain particular places where they know that it is necessary, then the Secretary of Labor shall proceed to furnish the housing facilities.

Now, to show that this amendment is necessary, I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to what has happened in my district. From the time when the question of housing was first broached I have been deluged with correspondence from people who want to sell property to the Government in connection with the Watertown Arsenal. It was rumored—and the town of Watertown as a municipality, through its board of selectmen, opposed the idea—that certain parties were proposing to unload upon the Government a large amount of real estate, some buildings already constructed and some in process of construction, and the town officials asked me to look into the matter. The Ordnance Department, which has jurisdiction of the Watertown Arsenal—and that department, I may say, is now presided over by Gen. Wheeler, who formerly was commandant at the Watertown Arsenal, and whose right-hand man is now Gen. Dickson, who was Gen. Wheeler's successor at the Watertown Arsenal—stated to me that there was nothing of the kind in contemplation; that it was not necessary for the Government to acquire any land or dwelling houses in connection with the Watertown Arsenal; that the problem at Watertown was a question of transportation; and that if certain things were done in the way of improved transportation facilities which this bill gives the Secretary of Labor the power to do, it would not be necessary to spend any money there for land and dwelling houses. I found, however, that the rumor still persisted. And it was confidently asserted by certain real estate operators in Boston that if the Secretary of Labor was given the authority which this bill gives him that a large tract of land and dwelling houses would be purchased by the Government, whether the Ordnance Bureau or the War Department approved of the idea or not.

Now, it seems to me that the Secretary of Labor ought to be given the power to furnish all the housing that is necessary, and I am heartily in favor of the bill. I would not delay the passage of this legislation for one minute, but I submit that the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy are in a better position to know in what parts of the country they need to have this housing provided than the Secretary of Labor can possibly be. We all know that parties who have an ax to grind may come down here to Washington and see Mr. Eidlitz or some of his subordinates, and may apparently make out a good case, and Mr. Eidlitz may recommend the purchase of land and buildings; and the first thing we know a contract may be entered into and property may be purchased which the War Department or the Navy Department may think unnecessary or may even oppose.

Mr. BARNHART. It was developed in the hearings that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, and even the Secretary of the Treasury, considered that this housing question was so completely and so fully attached to the question of labor itself and the securing of labor that they should go hand in hand, and they all conceded that the Department of Labor was the department it should be referred to.

Mr. DALLINGER. I admit everything that the gentleman from Indiana has said, but I still insist that the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, ought to first request the Secretary of Labor to furnish housing in certain particular places before that housing is furnished. In support of this contention I have cited a concrete case, where the Ordnance Department, which has charge of a particular Government arsenal, does not think it necessary for the Government to take a large amount of land and buildings, and yet the Secretary of Labor may go ahead and do it. Now, it seems to me a simple matter for us to say that the Secretary of Labor shall do what you have given him the power to do, but that he shall do it only at the request of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy whenever they deem it necessary in the carrying out of their war program.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment. Will the Clerk read it again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment proposed by Mr. DALLINGER: Page 1, line 3, after the word "Labor" insert "when so requested by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy."

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, we have been hearing recently a great outcry against red tape, and too much formality, too many administrators having to be consulted, too many bureaus having a hand in matters. Now, as has been said by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART], partly for the purpose of preventing just such circumlocutions as that, the various departments agreed that the Department of Labor should handle this proposition. If the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts is adopted, the very machinery that has been provided for, and that the gentleman from Kansas has had so many fits about to-day because $300,000 is to be expended, would still have to be used, and the procedure would be, first, to bring it to the attention of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, and then perhaps to the Shipping and the various other commissions, whereas it should be done immediately. Surely skilled contractors, surely men expert in housing laborers would be informed about the various plants in the country and as to the needs of housing the laborers at those plants, and should be the ones to suggest the relief, if any is necessary. Ought they to wait and delay? Why not, wherever they find that necessity exists in their rounds examining these various activities, at once order that it should be done without the Secretary of War having to make an investigation or the Secretary of the Navy having to make an investigation, and then report to the Secretary of Labor, and have the Secretary of Labor order it to be done?

Mr. DALLINGER. I know that the gentleman from Alabama wants to be fair. He is putting up a straw man, however, and hitting at it. Does not the gentleman think that the Ordnance Department, that has absolute control of the Rock Island Arsenal and the Watertown Arsenal, would know more about the needs of the men at those institutions than the Secretary of Labor, who has ordinarily nothing whatever to do with them?

Mr. BURNETT. If they do, Mr. Chairman, they could communicate with the Secretary of Labor without submitting their wants to the Secretary of War and having the Secretary of War submit them to the Secretary of Labor. Surely they could bring it directly to the attention of the Secretary of Labor or the men who have charge of the actual construction.

Mr. DALLINGER. The gentleman does not understand the purpose of this amendment. I have no doubt, if there is a demand for this thing, it will be done. What I am trying to guard against is the expenditure of millions of dollars in my district, or in any other district, where there is no demand for it. The Ordnance Department are in constant touch every day with the Watertown Arsenal, and they know just what are the needs of the men who work in the arsenal, and I contend that this thing should not be done over their heads when it is not necessary. If they want it, they simply say to the Secretary of War, "We need the housing done," and the Secretary of War says to the Secretary of Labor, "We want housing at Watertown," and the Secretary of Labor goes ahead and provides it.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has made a speech in my time longer than the speech that I have made. If the gentleman is right, that it will be properly submitted, then why have it stated in the law? He talks about it not being needed there. I venture the assertion that he and his people will be among the very first to come down here and ask that houses be built, and I suggest that the gentleman should not let some of his remarks go into the RECORD, because they might rise up to plague him hereafter, when the people of Watertown are coming to the Secretary of Labor and asking him to build additional houses to take care of the increased number of laborers that they have there.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not be adopted. What we want to do is to cut out red tape. The gentleman's amendment would tie us up with red tape. [Applause.]

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. I want to say that I heartily agree with the gentleman from Alabama on that subject. Let us put some one in who has responsibility, and hold him responsible, and do business.

Mr. BURNETT. I am glad the gentleman has so much confidence in the Secretary of Labor. I have much confidence in the opinion of the gentleman, and am glad that he has so well fortified and strengthened the views that I have tried to express.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

(a) To purchase, acquire by lease, construct, requisition, or acquire by condemnation or otherwise such houses, buildings, furnishings, improvements, local transportation, and other community facilities and parts thereof as he may determine to be necessary for the proper conduct of the existing war.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "for the proper conduct of the existing war" on page 2, line 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LONDON: Page 2, lines 2 and 3, strike out the words "for the proper conduct of the existing war."

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, the phrase "for the proper conduct of the existing war" is absolutely meaningless in this paragraph. The Secretary of Labor has nothing to do with the conduct of the war. He can not by constructing a dozen or two buildings or by entering into leases help properly conduct the war. But from the use of this phrase, "the proper conduct of the existing war," you can see the fear of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that the time might come when the Government might desire to utilize some of these structures, erected at the expense of Uncle Sam, and use them permanently, for the permanent benefit of the community in which these buildings will be reared, or for the permanent benefit of the Government employees, or for the permanent benefit of employees in munition industries which may some day be taken over by the Government, and this the committee is determined to prevent. The expression "for the proper conduct of the existing war" is absolutely meaningless, and the necessity of striking it out should be apparent to you, notwithstanding the fact that I have offered the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. I do.

Mr. CANNON. If it is meaningless, why strike it out?

Mr. LONDON. Because the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is a good lawyer, and I do not like to see his handiwork spoiled by meaningless phrases. To be serious, the phrase is either meaningless or its meaning is bad.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

And to equip, manage, maintain, alter, rent, lease, exchange, sell, and convey such lands, or any right, title, or interest therein, houses, buildings, improvements, local transportation, and other community facilities, parts thereof, and equipment upon such terms and conditions as he may determine.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLACK: Page 2, line 15, after the word "determine," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following language: "Provided, That no sale and conveyance shall be made hereunder on credit without reserving a lien on such property for the unpaid purchase money."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, under this paragraph C the Secretary——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman will permit me, the committee are willing to accept the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if it is contemplated under the provision of these sections that are now being considered, in view of the amendment adopted to the first paragraph of section 1, that the existing street railway facilities here in the District of Columbia may be taken over or leased in connection with the relieving of the congested situation, and whether there was anything of that sort brought out in the hearings?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I have heard no discussion of that at all. There has not been any.

Mr. WALSH. But the language would be broad enough to do that, would it not?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think they could do it; yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

(d) To aid in providing, equipping, managing, and maintaining houses, buildings, improvements, local transportation, and other community facilities by loan or otherwise to such person or persons and upon such terms and conditions as he may determine.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my amendment be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida has at the desk an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Amend by inserting as a new paragraph immediately following paragraph (d) the following:

"(e) To take possession of, alter, repair, improve, and suitably arrange for living purposes, to be used under the terms of this act, what is commonly known as the Maltby Building, as well as all other houses on square 633, owned by the United States, together with any other houses in the District of Columbia owned by the Government and not now occupied. The Secretary of Labor shall in the construction of buildings in the District of Columbia make use of any lands owned by the Government of the United States deemed by him to be suitable for the purpose and which have not heretofore been dedicated by act of Congress for specific buildings."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

As I was passing the Maltby Building this morning I saw considerable activity about the building in the way of removing old furniture that has been housed there since the building was last occupied. As I saw the furniture being removed, I thought perhaps the Government had taken or made arrangements to take possession of that building for office purposes. Has the gentleman any information as to whether any department has taken a position for that purpose?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; I have not. I will state that my last information from Mr. Woods, the Superintendent of the Capitol, was that this property was available for this purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of Labor may exercise any power or discretion herein granted, and may enter into any arrangement or contract incidental thereto, through such agency or agencies as he may create or designate: Provided, That houses erected by the Government under the authority of this act shall be of only a temporary character whenever it is practicable to so construct them: Provided further, That whenever it is practicable to use any part of the clerical or field force of the Office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department in or about any of the work contemplated by this act, the Secretary of Labor shall do so: And provided further, That every contract for the lease of ground upon which the Government contemplates the construction of a building under authority of this act shall contain a provision giving the Government an option to purchase the same for a stated consideration.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 2, page 3, the words "to so construct them."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I will state that the purpose of that amendment is this. The proviso reads—

Provided, That houses erected by the Government under the authority of this act shall be of only a temporary character whenever it is practicable to so construct them.

The committee thought that the words "to so construct them" would leave it to apply to temporary buildings everywhere, because it would be practicable to so construct them. The committee thought that the words had better be omitted.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to oppose the amendment, but I would like to state my position in this matter. I was opposed to the proviso at the bottom of page 22:

Provided, That houses erected by the Government under the authority of this act shall be of only a temporary character whenever it is practicable to so construct them.

I think it would have been better to have left out the whole proviso. It was afterwards voted to amend it as the chairman has proposed to amend it, and I am not going to object, but I think it would have been better to omit the whole proviso.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 24, after the word "designate" strike out down to and including the word "them" on line 2, page 3.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not a substitute for my amendment.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman, I believe the point of order is well taken. I would like to have the amendment pending and I will offer it later.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to the amendment. Between the word "is" and the word "practicable" on line 2, page 3, insert the words "desirable and."

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. STAFFORD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the position, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut was to insert after the word "is" the words "desirable and." I take it that that is a perfecting amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offered it as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is not the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut a preferential amendment inasmuch as the amendment of the gentleman from Florida is a motion to strike out?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offered it as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. If he had offered it as an amendment to the paragraph, would it not be in order before the amendment of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Florida is an amendment to strike out, while the motion of the gentleman from Texas was a motion to strike out the same language with additional language. I can understand that the Chair did not quite grasp that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offered his amendment as a substitute. He can offer it later.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, I offer my amendment as an amendment to the paragraph——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 2, after the word "is," insert the words "desirable and."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. CANNON. What does that mean, "desirable and practicable"? "Practicable" means to determine whether or not it is a good thing to do. "Desirable" means the exercise of discretion.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I suggest to the gentleman that the committee accepted the amendment because it leaves the whole thing to the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, anyway.

Mr. CANNON. Then what is the use of the amendment?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not see there is any use of it. I did it to save time.

Mr. CANNON. I think it does make a difference, because it allows the Secretary of Labor, or someone else who would control, to say that he does not think it is desirable to put up anything but a cement building or a brick building and finish it with mahogany, and so on.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not think it is at all necessary, but, as I say to the gentleman, I did it simply to save time and hurry on.

Mr. CANNON. If it does not mean anything, let us not put it in, because I think "desirable" is too broad. Suppose the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] was the Secretary of Labor, or suppose he occupied the place of Mr. Eidlitz, he would not think it was desirable at all to put up anything except a first-class residence or a hotel that would stand through the ages. I think we had better stick to the text.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Very well. Let us have a vote upon it.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The chair will recognize the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT].

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, in response to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has said, I would call the attention of the committee to paragraph (d), which provides, in certain cases, for loans. Obviously, if the Government is going to use other builders' or loan money, they must have some provision for loaning upon permanent improvements, and, therefore, I thought it was desirable, and I still think it desirable, to put in the words "desirable and practicable," so as to cover those contingencies. I think there will be some cases where only permanent buildings will be desirable, and others not.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to God the loan could be made all along the line upon good security for these buildings, because we would get the money back, and we would not be bothered further with it; the owner could deal with that.

Mr. MERRITT. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. But that is passed; (d) is passed.

Mr. MERRITT. That is true, but this has to do with (d). (d) provides that you can loan, and this provides that they shall always be made temporary where practicable, and "practicable" refers to the practicability of the building and not to the business practicability, and the word "desirable" refers to the business point of view.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard in opposition to the amendment. I think the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is eminently correct. There is a great deal of difference between "desirable" and "practicable," and by striking out the three words which we eliminated by the amendment just offered by the chairman we took away the very construction that the gentleman who offered the amendment put upon it. He said it is practicable at any time to construct buildings. That is the trouble with the bill without the amendment, it is always practicable to construct a temporary building, and if you just stop with the word "practicable" it leaves the question as to whether under all of the conditions—that is, taking into consideration the neighborhood in the city in which a permanent or a temporary building shall be constructed, and all other considerations—a temporary or permanent building ought to be constructed. By striking out those words we have left the practicability as to the character of the buildings open; it is all then to be taken into consideration as to whether it was practicable to construct a particular kind of building. But if you put in that word "desirable" you have enlarged the scope very much and you have then put it in the hands of the Secretary of Labor or some one else to say whether he desires a temporary of a permanent building, whether he desires a temporary building at one place and a permanent one at another. It gives him too much power. I would be glad, as suggested by some gentleman here to-day, if every one of the buildings could be of a temporary character, because I have never been imbued with the optimistic idea that after this war is over we are going to get back anything like the cost of the construction of the buildings. I believe that the Government is going to lose money when the war is over, but it is war emergency and we have to look it in the face even if loss has to be incurred. Therefore, as I said, I would have been glad, believing, as I do, that losses will be incurred, if all could have been constructed of a temporary character, but we knew that the regulations in some cities would not permit that, we knew that conditions were such that it would not do to erect temporary buildings in all localities, but we wanted to show that the desire of the committee was that whenever it is practicable buildings should be of a temporary character.

But I am not willing to go on and enlarge it so as to leave it to the unlimited desire of anybody, whether he is a Democratic or Republican Secretary of Labor, as to what the character of the buildings shall be. Therefore I believe that the amendment of the gentleman ought not to be adopted. Now I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. REED. Will my colleague permit me to offer a substitute to substitute the word "expedient" for the amendment of my friend?

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe it needs any amendment. I do not believe you can strengthen it any, and I am afraid you will weaken it because it now expresses something strong, and, so far as I am concerned, I want it to express something strong, and that is wherever practical these buildings must be of a temporary character, and that reflects the views of most of the members, if not all the members, of our committee, except, perhaps, my good friend Mr. PHELAN, who said awhile ago that his idea was that we ought to strike out the entire proviso. If we do strike it out, that is equivalent to saying that this Committee of the Whole does not care whether they build temporary or permanent buildings, but if it goes on in this way it is the expression of the committee that reported it and the committee that acted on it here to-day that wherever it is practical to do so we expect them to build temporary structures and no other.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given two minutes in which to answer some questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island that the gentleman from Alabama be permitted to proceed for two minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, I think this is a very important question. I was called away to the meeting of another committee, and I want to find out about what took place during my absence.

Mr. BURNETT. I could not undertake to tell the gentleman all that occurred.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. The gentleman could not tell me?

Mr. BURNETT. I could not.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I pity the gentleman.

Mr. BURNETT. Well, that is a compliment to me; whenever I have the gentleman's pity it is a compliment.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I meant to say to the gentleman the committee must have had a really hot time.

Mr. BURNETT. A good time; that is true.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I want to ask the gentleman if I understood him to say that if this amendment is rejected that we, in effect, say to the administrator, "We do not want you to put up any permanent buildings except where they are absolutely necessary; that we set our faces against permanent buildings."

Mr. BURNETT. That is not my idea; that is not what I want to do.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I understand that there will be a grave necessity in some places, of course, to put up permanent buildings; I mean permanent buildings, for instance, for workmen; and if the workmen will pay for those buildings on the plan indicated in the report, what objection would there be to that?

Mr. BURNETT. That is authorized under this bill, and this question of practicability comes in so we leave it to the commission or to the Secretary of Labor. What I want is that I do not want these buildings to be ornamental buildings that some civic organization of a city wants to undertake to put up in order to help beautify the city. That is not what these appropriations are intended for in these extreme war times.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that that was the explanation I was looking for, if it contemplated homes for workmen.

Mr. BURNETT. Oh, absolutely.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. That is in the inhibition.

Mr. BURNETT. Just one moment, if the gentleman pleases, we realize if we want to get the most expert workmen, which we need in many of these factories, we will have to have some permanent class of homes, and all of this comes in the question of practicability.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, I favor the amendment if it means what I think it means, that it gives greater discretion to the Secretary of Labor. I have already stated I was opposed to the proviso. I think the whole matter as to permanent or temporary houses in each case ought to be left to the discretion of the Secretary of Labor. We have given him almost unlimited power in other parts of this bill. We let him arrange for the rent; we let him arrange for the terms of sale, if there are any terms of sale, for the price and number of years to be taken to pay for these buildings, if they are bought by workers; we have left to his discretion entirely the contracts he makes with individuals and corporations, and yet we tie him up in one of the most important parts of the bill.

Now, whether we put up temporary buildings or permanent buildings, the cost is not going to be a great deal different. The cost of temporary buildings, if they are going to be fit to live in, will not be a great deal less than permanent buildings, and when we get all through with them the temporary buildings will be worth absolutely nothing, while permanent buildings will be worth a great deal. Taking the point made by the gentleman from Illinois, if I understood him properly, he stated he hoped to see as much money loaned as possible. Under this bill is it intended, wherever practicable, money shall be loaned by the Government to firms, corporations, or even individuals who desire to put up the houses themselves, make advances to them, and let them build the houses and subsequently acquire them? If you indicate by the action of this committee that we prefer temporary buildings, the Secretary of Labor may be handicapped in disposing of those buildings to corporations. He can not dispose of temporary buildings and take back loans on them, if that should prove desirable, after the buildings are erected by the Government.

More than that, Mr. Chairman, if we are going to get the workers to live in these buildings we have got to give them decent places of abode. We could not get expert workmen with their families to go into places that are only temporary unless the temporary structures are mighty good ones. And if we have temporary structures with modern conveniences and fit to house men and women and children in a proper way, then we are going to spend almost as much money for them as for permanent structures. I believe from every point of view it is better to leave the discretion with the Secretary of Labor and not tie his hands and not limit him or restrict him. I think in the end we will get much better results.

To conclude, Mr. Chairman, I will repeat what I said before, that we have given almost unlimited power under the provisions of this bill to the Secretary of Labor. I do not think we ought to confine him in this respect. I think we ought to leave the matter in his judgment, and without any restriction or indications of how we feel in this matter, but leave it to him in the individual cases coming before him as to whether the buildings shall be temporary or permanent.

Let me add one thing. Let us see what we are doing with some communities. We are going into these communities and put up such buildings as the Secretary of Labor and those employed by him desire to put up. If, acting on this suggestion on our part, he puts up temporary buildings, what is going to become of them? Are they going to be left there as an eyesore, sold to some one and maintained in a dilapidated condition after this war is over? I say that we ought not to create the impression in this bill and indicate too strongly to the Secretary of Labor that we want temporary buildings, but should leave it, as we leave other matters in this bill, to his discretion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have one additional minute, so that I may ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman's reasoning was fast convincing me. He was going on the ground that some owner of land might want to borrow money and erect a good structure and lend it to the Government, but this proviso applies only to structures to be built by the Government and does not apply to parties who might borrow money from the Government and give good security for its return. That part of the gentleman's argument——

Mr. PHELAN. The buildings can be erected by the Government and still money be borrowed on them by private individuals. The buildings can be constructed. It can be done in any way the Government sees fit to do it. The loan might be made subsequent to the erection of the buildings.

Mr. HARDY. This is only for Government-erected buildings.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I want to see if we can not reach some conclusion. I want to ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment close in five minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This is one of the most important matters in the bill.

Mr. SUMNERS. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. How much time does the gentleman from Iowa want?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. SUMNERS. I want at least five minutes. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. On the pending amendment?

Mr. SUMNERS. A parliamentary inquiry. Will the gentleman permit me to make an inquiry of the Chair?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which proposes to strike out the provisio which begins at the bottom of page 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that amendment and will recognize the gentleman later for that purpose. There are two amendments pending now.

Mr. SUMNERS. There are two amendments pending to this proviso. My parliamentary inquiry was whether or not it would be proper to consider the motion to strike out the whole proviso at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. It would not. The motion to perfect the text has preference over a motion to strike out.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does the gentleman from Texas desire time on this amendment?

Mr. SUMNERS. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on these amendments close in 18 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment close in 18 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CANNON) is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Let me read that proviso:

Provided, That houses erected by the Government under the authority of this act shall be of only a temporary character wherever it is practicable to so construct them.

There is a proposal to strike out the words "to so construct them," to which I have no objection, and then comes the amendment, and later on comes the amendment to strike out the proviso.

Earlier in the bill it is provided that loans may be made to construct these buildings. Practically loans would be made to people who would desire to construct and own them, and they would have to give good security, and so forth. Therefore I said I was quite willing, because we would be sure then to get back the money in the end, provided the security was good.

Now, I do not know that I can add anything to what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] has said, and possibly what I may have indicated by asking the question. I am for the construction of these buildings as a war measure. Great heavens! Suppose the Secretary of Labor should die and my friend LONDON should be appointed Secretary of Labor, or my friend from California, or my friend from anywhere else, who proposes to accomplish a double object, namely, something as a war object exclusively, and also something as a peace measure. These buildings, wherever practicable, ought to be temporary. If we lose on them, well and good. That is a war loss. Peace will come, and let us go back without any clogs to consider what would be proper to do at that time.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. A gentleman from New York has just called my attention to another fact that I did not realize, and that is the immediate necessity of immediately constructing these buildings, and therefore temporary buildings could be more quickly constructed than permanent buildings.

Mr. CANNON. Absolutely. Good heavens! Are we not going to tear down these buildings that cost millions of dollars on the Mall and right across from the Lincoln Memorial? Certainly. They are temporary buildings. Why? We have to have them quickly to house the employees. They are sanitary. It is wholly a question of practicability. "Practicability" covers it. I would not trust myself, I would not trust anybody, where the policy is to build temporary buildings and where it is a war measure, to go out and to determine whether it was desirable or not, or how it should be ornamented, or how it should be finished inside, and all that kind of thing.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. What does the gentleman think about the provision passed here of vesting in the Secretary of Labor the power to appropriate such money as he may think necessary for the proper conduct of the war? I was absent from the Chamber when that section was passed.

Mr. CANNON. I think that has been passed.

Mr. GORDON. I would like to have the gentleman's opinion about it.

Mr. CANNON. That is a discretion that we have given to the President. Good heavens! We have given him enough power to move the world, and I hope and trust he will use the power when necessary for the successful prosecution of the war and only for such success.

Mr. GORDON. You have given it not to the President, but to the Secretary of Labor, to decide what is necessary to win the war.

Mr. CANNON. Yes. I take it that the Secretary of Labor, if he has any regard for his scalp, will not go to work at the Watertown Arsenal, for instance, and build something that is not necessary. I should guess he would find out whether it was necessary for the public interest to do it, and so on. I am not exactly pleased with this bill all around, but nevertheless I will vote for it if I can get it substantially as it stands, with an amendment or two later on to be offered.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion this provision ought to stand substantially as it is. It is the one limitation that is contained in this bill. It is the one indication that the framers of the bill cared how the money which was appropriated is going to be spent. It is the one indication that we have that they thought for a moment as to whether the resources of this Government could continue to be thrown out in the way that they have been poured forth by the numerous bills that we have been passing lately.

Mr. Chairman, not long ago we passed a bill here of the same character, in some respects worse, and in some respects better than this bill, providing for the appropriation of $50,000,000 to be used by the Shipping Board for the purpose of housing the shipbuilding workers. And what do we find? When we come to the hearings upon this bill we find page after page taken up with testimony as to no houses being built for these workers, and as to the need of houses for them, with the evident expectation that some of this money is going to be appropriated for that purpose. I doubt whether any of it will be, but it is one of the excuses why this bill is brought forward at this time. Even the gentleman from Massachusetts, last Saturday, told how they did not have any houses at Fore River for the shipbuilders there. Apparently he had forgotten all about the fact that we had appropriated $50,000,000 for the purpose of constructing building to house those workers.

Gentlemen have stated that six or seven hundred million dollars will eventually be expended in housing these workers, and that is given as a reason why we should pass this bill at this time without anybody knowing how much they expect to expend in any particular place, without having offered any estimates as to how much would be needed at any particular place, without any statement as to the kind of buildings that should be constructed, except this one bare statement here, which ought to be retained in order that there shall be some limitation.

Now, I say that it will run six or seven hundred million dollars that we will spend for the housing of these workers. It will run a billion dollars if we keep on in this kind of a way with these lump-sum appropriations, authorizing them to be spent in any manner whatsoever that the Secretary of Labor may determine. And I do not care whether it is the Secretary of Labor or the Secretary of the Treasury, or who it is, if there is no effort made to limit these appropriations there will be no limit to the amount of them. That is what we have got here. Gentlemen seem to think that the resources of this country are so boundless that we can go on appropriating in $500,000,000 here and $500,000,000 there, and $50,000,000 here and $50,000,000 there to all eternity, apparently forgetting the fact that we will need twice as much next year if this war goes on; and it will go on next year if we win it. Instead of coming in here with a detailed statement that so much is needed at Bethlehem for so many houses of such a character, we have not a word or a line of testimony in the hearings about that, not a word of information from anyone as to where this money is to be spent, as to how much is to be spent in this place or that place, or the kind of buildings to be constructed. We have only this bare limitation, which it is intended in effect either to strike out or so to modify that it will amount to nothing, namely, that whatever buildings are constructed by the Government shall be of a temporary character. That is what they should be. They will be constructed near some of these factories; they will be constructed where they will not be wanted after the war is over, because this demand is all abnormal. They ought to be of a temporary character. There is every reason why they should be of a temporary character.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman permit me just a moment?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to say to the gentleman that it was the purpose of the committee in drafting this provision to fix it so that temporary buildings would be built at those places where the communities were transitory.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Quite proper.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. And where the activities would be wound up after the war is over, but in cities it was intended to build permanent ones, if it was thought best to do so, because of the permanent demand.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It will be entirely unnecessary. If these buildings are to be constructed in places where there will be a permanent demand, then there will be somebody who will be willing to put up these buildings on a loan from the Government and own them afterwards. There is no necessity for the Government buildings being of anything except a temporary character, and nothing else ought to be built.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. REED] is recognized for one minute.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to take up a minute. I want to amend the amendment of my colleague [Mr. MERRITT] by striking out the word "desirable" and substituting the word "expedient." I think the wisdom of that will suggest itself to the Members without argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I need to take up very much of your time, but I do want to say that this is a very important section of this bill. I believe this bill is a good one, and that we ought to have confidence enough to leave with those who are going to administer it all the things that are in the bill. I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT], but I am more in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], to strike out all reference to temporary buildings. I am in favor of that for this reason. I believe that it will save this Government a great deal of money. There are two propositions, one to build houses of a transitory character and the other at places like Davenport and Rock Island, where there is a permanent community. In this instance the buildings ought to be permanent and built in connection with the corporations that only want to borrow the money. They will pay all of the money back to the Government, and you will save money in the end. If you have in this bill this provision that seems to bind the Secretary of Labor to build temporary buildings, you may interfere with the plans of these communities to make these buildings permanent.

Mr. BURNETT. That only applies where the Government is to build the buildings. If they want to borrow the money, there is no limitation.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If I was satisfied that the gentleman from Alabama was right, I would say it was all right, and you would not need to amend the bill. I am not satisfied that the language is not too vague. You have in it the provision that they shall be of a temporary character wherever practicable. I do not know how far that will go or how far some one will interpret it. I am in favor of striking out, as the gentleman from Texas proposes, all reference to temporary structures.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I again desire to emphasize the danger of prohibiting the Secretary of Labor from constructing buildings of a permanent character wherever and whenever permanency is to be preferred. The language to which I object will practically make it obligatory on the Secretary of Labor to construct buildings of a temporary character only. This is a direction to the Secretary of Labor to construct temporary structures. We will find ourselves with the work in the same position in which a great deal of the work is done under the river and harbor bill to-day. You will appropriate a certain amount of money in connection with river and harbor work, and then there will be an agitation throughout the country that it is pork-barrel legislation and there will be no appropriation for a year or two, and all the moneys expended in connection with the work is wasted and you have to begin all over again.

Wherever and whenever the Secretary finds it necessary to establish structures of a permanent character, and wherever and whenever the difference between the permanent and temporary structure is slight, it should be left to the Secretary of Labor and to his intelligence and to the men charged with this great work to choose whether the permanent expenditure of the people's money should not be applied to erect structures that will be of lasting value.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia to the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut to strike out the word "desirable" and insert the word "expedient."

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MERRITT) there were 21 ayes and 26 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], which the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 2, page 3, the words "to so construct them."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 3, page 3, the word "clerical" and insert in lieu thereof the word "office."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the Chair promised to recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] to move to strike out the proviso.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 24, after the word "designate," strike out all down to and including the word "practicable," on line 2, page 3.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I have a perfecting amendment to this same clause, and the question in my mind is whether if I waive my rights to ask for recognition it will be too late.

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to amend takes precedence over a motion to strike out.

The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 2, after the word "practicable," insert: "Except in cases where such buildings are erected for the purpose of the housing of employees or industrial workers at any arsenals of the United States, where such buildings may be permanent if the Secretary shall determine the same to be for the public interest and where such permanent buildings are capable of being used as a part of the permanent plant of such arsenal."

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee thinks that the substance of my amendment is already included within the section as it stands. If that is true, I do not care to press this amendment. However, I was in doubt about it. If the chairman is right about this thing there is no necessity for the amendment. Here is the object of the amendment, and the committee will judge for itself whether it is necessary. The amendment provides that these buildings shall be of a temporary character, except in cases where they are erected for the housing of employees at a Government plant or arsenal, where they may be permanent if the Secretary of Labor thinks it necessary and where they can be thereafter used as a part of the permanent plant of the institution.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. If your amendment was agreed to it would be a part of the act.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Then would it not apply to that just as it will to any other part of the act? Would not the construction of the buildings apply as well to that as a part of the act as to any other part?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; but let me ask this question, which will resolve the doubt in my mind: For instance, take the arsenal at Watertown. Suppose the Secretary finds it is necessary to build some buildings to take care of those employees. It may be quite practicable to build a temporary building, and under the language of the statute, if it is practicable, the direction is there to build them, while it may not be desirable or the thing to do or the thing that you want him to do. I think the committee agrees with me that wherever it is practicable to use those buildings at permanent plants, or necessary, we ought to make them permanent if we can; but if the language of the bill is broad enough to do that, I am satisfied. I agree with the committee in their idea.

Mr. BURNETT. As to the particular character of the buildings, in the debate it has been made apparent, it seems to me, that the matter of practicability took into consideration all the surroundings and conditions.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Let me ask a question of the chairman of the committee, if he will give me his attention. In the opinion of the chairman, is this bill capable of the construction now that if the Secretary of Labor goes to a Government plant and wants to take care of the employees there he has the right to build a permanent building?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Absolutely. It is entirely within his discretion. Your amendment, if adopted, would still leave it in his discretion.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Oh, yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is where it is now.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I would like the chairman to answer a question that I have in my mind. Does the chairman base that opinion on the presence of the word "only," in line 1, page 3?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. "Houses erected by the Government under the authority of this act shall be of only a temporary character whenever it is practicable." Otherwise they should be permanent.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. If the gentleman will permit, I think the opinion of the committee, if I may be permitted, would be this: That in case it is necessary to build permanent structures, we should give that right and give it specifically to the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. He has got it. We provide in the bill for the sale of those houses after the war.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. That has not got anything to do with the construction of permanent buildings. I doubt if this language effectuates the committee's intention.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I regret very much to oppose the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee, of which committee I was for a number of years a member. Especially do I regret to oppose my good friend, the able chairman, who has this bill in charge.

There are two ideas in the House with regard to these improvements. One is that wherever the Government can it ought to make these buildings temporary; the other is, wherever the Government can, where there is a community need for it, the Government ought so to construct these buildings that they can meet that permanent community need when the war is over. It has been suggested here that we have limited resources and therefore should erect temporary buildings. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] suggested that. It is true our resources are limited, but I call the attention of gentlemen to what really constitutes the resources of a nation. It is not money in the final analysis, it is lumber, concrete, iron, and things of that sort; that is what constitutes the real resources of a nation. These buildings will belong to the people of the Nation. They will be put up by all the people of the Nation out of their resources and as a tax upon their resources. I can not discover common sense in taking the people's money, buying lumber, sawing the lumber up, leaving spaces for doors and windows, driving nails into it and shaping it into a building, and then tearing down the structure at the end of the war, selling the lumber and other material for a song, while somebody else comes along, takes new lumber, and builds a permanent building on the same spot. That is not conserving resources; that is wasting them. We ought not to build permanent buildings where there is not a permanent need. But let us see what is in the mind of the committee. Why not leave the character of buildings to the Secretary's discretion by striking out this proviso?

Gentlemen, you do not leave that matter to his undirected discretion. You indicate to him what you want him to do, and that is to favor the temporary type. You are speaking as the legislature of the Nation originating this proposed activity, and you say to the Secretary of Labor, "You shall erect buildings of a temporary character in preference to permanent buildings." Now, why do you put in the word "temporary" unless you want him to give preference to the temporary buildings wherever he can? You not only do that, but you put the word "only" in there. I say to you, gentlemen of this committee, that no Secretary of Labor, if he respects the direction of the legislative body which confers authority upon him, will erect a permanent building where he can "get by" with the erection of a temporary building. No; it ought to be just the other way around. We ought not to take the people's money, invest it in lumber that is to be sawed up and driven full of nail holes and into concrete and other material which is to be used during the continuance of this war, perhaps for two or three years, and then torn down, when there is a community need for that lumber and material in houses of a permanent character. Why not put up such houses now and save the economic waste of labor and material? But the contention of the committee is that the Secretary of Labor will have the discretion to do that. Why not leave him with unbridled and unhampered discretion? Why do you put the word "temporary" here at all? Why do you put the word "only" in here? The fact is that when the Secretary of Labor is vested with the power to be conferred hereunder he will receive it with the mandate from the legislature of the Nation to put up temporary buildings in preference to permanent buildings, and that is contrary to every principle of conservation of material, money, and labor. The policy ought to be permanent buildings, unless there is a good reason for temporary ones, instead of the other way around as is provided for in this bill.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. It is contemplated that many of these buildings are likely to be built upon leased ground. Would the gentleman put up a permanent building on leased ground?

Mr. SUMNERS. I certainly would not, nor would I put up a permanent building where there is only a temporary need; neither would I put up a temporary building where there is a permanent need, giving due consideration to the urgency of the need and the difference in the length of time required to construct the two types of buildings. If the gentleman will note the language down near the end of this section, he will observe that it provides that whenever the Government puts up a building on leased ground it shall have the option to purchase.

Mr. BARNHART. If the gentleman will yield right there, the committee has an amendment to strike all of that out which will be explained when the opportunity comes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] I will say I think that matter of his proposed amendment was pretty well thrashed out a while ago.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds wished, and I believe this committee will wish, to make known, so far as they could, without laying down a cast-iron rule, the desire that these buildings should be of a temporary character wherever it was practicable, all things considered, to have buildings of that kind. I have as much confidence in the Secretary of Labor as anyone has. I have confidence in the board that it is anticipated will supervise this work; but, Mr. Chairman, I believe we ought, wherever we can, to manifest the tendency of the legislative mind on these questions without unduly hampering or restraining the work. One of the reasons, as ex-Speaker CANNON said a while ago, for these buildings being temporary where they can be, is the necessity for great expedition in their construction. Permanent buildings take more time to erect. Why, gentlemen, we had almost a scandal last year in regard to matters that grew out of the Shipping Board and delays, and delays in constructing shipping—delays all around. We want something to get men housed right now.

My good friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CLEARY], called my attention a few moments ago to the fact that over there at his place they have, as I believe he said to me, about 2,100 people now building ships; that they needed 5,000, and could not get them because they did not have the houses. Now, without unduly hampering the Secretary of Labor, we want expeditiousness, and demand it, and is there anything wrong in letting him and the country know that it is the expression of this committee that there ought to be such expedition as will bring about results? Temporary buildings, wherever practicable, will help to get these results.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Would not the word "preferable" instead of the word "practicable" be the right word?

Mr. BURNETT. No; that is worse than ever. I would rather have had the language of the gentleman that offered the amendment a while ago than that. Who is to prefer? When you say "practicable," you leave it to the judgment of practical men; but when you say "preferable," you leave it to the question of preference, without regard to expeditiousness or practicability or anything else, and that would be just as impractical as some of the other ideas and theories of the gentleman from New York who asked that question. I believe this is good just as it is. I do not believe you can improve it, and in the interest of hurrying this work I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] will prevail. It has become the fashion in this country to profit by the experience of our allies, and I think we should profit by that experience in the consideration of this bill, as we have in other things. I think I am safe in saying that not one witness who appeared before the Labor Committee, when that committee had this bill under consideration, not one witness who had examined into the experience of Great Britain, favored temporary construction, except in those emergencies suggested by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. Did the Committee on Labor have before it the Secretary of Labor himself?

Mr. KEATING. No.

Mr. BARNHART. He did not testify? He testified before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

So far as the intent of the department is concerned, it is purely an emergency proposition. We have not in contemplation, and do not believe it would be wise, for the Government to provide a general housing or continuous housing method of its employees.

And he went on to tell why it would be disadvantageous to labor generally to undertake to house it and furnish it fuel and light, and so forth.

Mr. KEATING. And still the gentleman feels in the face of that declaration that this proviso must be placed in the bill to prevent the Secretary of Labor from doing what he says the Secretary does not intend to do?

Mr. BARNHART. The Secretary wanted it there himself, by his own statement.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman will not say the Secretary of Labor asked for this proviso in the bill?

Mr. BARNHART. It was in the bill, and he did not object to it.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, the point I wanted to make was this—and I think I know something about the attitude of the Secretary of Labor—that England has abandoned this policy, and if this House goes on record as declaring that temporary construction shall be favored wherever that is practicable, it is merely beginning where England has left off. Because in England the very reverse is the policy adopted. They adopt temporary construction where that is necessary, but where it is practicable they adopt permanent construction.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Secretary Wilson testified before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, when the question came up of temporary or permanent buildings—I am reading from page 10, the tenth line from the bottom:

On the other hand, if you erected buildings, say, at Bridgeport, Conn., or at Newport News, or at Charleston, or Savannah, or Galveston, where there is an established town, an established community, the presumption would be that those buildings would be of value after the war emergency was over, except to the extent that there would be a reduction in value of them by virtue of a possible—in fact, a probable—reduction in the population through the decentralization of manufacturing.

In other words, in these cases it would be necessary to construct permanent buildings.

Mr. KEATING. I have not read the testimony of the Secretary of Labor, but I do know that the men who came before the Committee on Labor, representing the Labor Department, men who had been to England, men who had studied this question from the beginning, without exception advocated the policy of permanent construction where that construction was desirable. All that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] proposes by his amendment is that the matter shall be left to those executive officials who will be charged with the expenditure of this money. I think that we may trust the Secretary of Labor and those under him to see to it that the thing is done that is necessary to produce results. I do not think it is necessary for us to go on the theory that the Secretary will do a foolish thing.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Certainly.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I would like to supplement what the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] said in his question by quoting what Secretary Wilson said in answer to the question by Mr. ASHBROOK. I read:

Mr. ASHBROOK. In all probability, then, these buildings in the majority of instances wouldn't be used after the conclusion of the war?
Secretary WILSON. That is problematical. One doesn't know whether they will or will not, but you must work upon the assumption in some of the communities that they will not be used after the war. You would naturally move upon the assumption at a place like Sparrows Point or Hog Island, that after the war those buildings would not be used, and you would construct your buildings accordingly. It may develop, however, that both Sparrows Point and Hog Island will become permanent communities, but the erection of the houses now should not be made upon the presumption that they will become permanent communities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SUMNERS. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is asked for.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, before the Chair announces the vote I make the point of no quorum in connection with the vote. Do I get a vote in that way more quickly?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make or withdraw the point?

Mr. LONDON. I withdraw it.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 32.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment to strike out, on line 3, page 3, the word "clerical" and insert the word "office."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Strike out, on line 3, page 3, the word "clerical" and insert the word "office."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I want to state that the original bill had the language "clerical force," and it was thought better to make it read "office force."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. BARNHART: Page 3, line 6, after the word "so," insert a period and strike out all after that in line 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, by way of brief explanation, it has been decided by the committee that the provision carried in this sentence would limit the Government in the possibility of securing low rates on the leases it is about to make. There are many tracts of land, it has been learned, that are available for lease, some of them without any compensation on the part of the Government to the owner, which could not be secured at all if it were necessary to compel those making the leases to give an option on their land for sale. Therefore the committee decided it would be best to strike this out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman from Florida going to move to rise?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. In a moment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To offer an amendment. I move to strike out the words "Secretary of Labor," on page 2, line 21, and insert "President."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 2, line 21, strike out the words "Secretary of Labor" and insert in lieu thereof the word "President."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If this amendment carries I shall ask unanimous consent to offer the same amendment on page 1, in line 3, to strike out the words "the Secretary of Labor," where they occur, and insert the word "President," and so on throughout the bill.

Most of the war measures that have been brought in have put the responsibility directly upon the President of the United States, and it seems to me very proper that that has been done. The taking away from the President of the expenditure of so vast a sum as $50,000,000, and the transferring of the power in this way is an innovation. It has not been done up to this time. What is the reason for placing this particular power in the hands of the Secretary of Labor? Is it intended that he shall not consult the President about a matter of such momentous importance? Is it intended to break the practice that has held since the beginning of the war?

Mr. BARNHART. Did not the gentleman vote very recently for the bill giving the Shipping Board $50,000,000 for the purpose of building houses for the shipbuilders at Hog Island and other places?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I voted for such a measure, but my recollection is that the President's indorsement was required in that instance.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The President has certainly indorsed this or requested that this work be lodged with the Department of Labor.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But it is not so stated in the law.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman would not have us state in the law that the President had requested that the Secretary of Labor be clothed with this power?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not at all; but I call attention to the fact that in nearly all of the financial bills that have been brought into the House provision has been made that the President shall do so-and-so. If it is a matter that is to be executed by the Secretary of the Treasury, still the President is to be consulted as the business goes along.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Committee on Appropriations have given $100,000,000 to the Ordnance Department direct, and other sums to various branches of the War Department, without any reference to the President.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am raising the question whether we should digress in this case and permit the Secretary of Labor to proceed under our sanction without consulting the President as to the locations where this $50,000,000 shall be spent as to the purchase of ground, as to the leasing of ground, as to the construction of temporary or permanent buildings. Here is an opportunity for a great deal of favoritism, if any particular department head wanted to exercise it. Here is an opportunity for the employment of certain special agencies, if the particular department in charge wanted to avail itself of those special agencies.

Mr. BARNHART. What particular difference would it make whether the President were delegated to authorize the Secretary of Labor to do this or the Secretary of Labor were authorized to do it directly? Is not this method the best way of avoiding the red tape that we hear so much about all over the country?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No. Red tape is not an issue at this particular point.

Mr. BARNHART. But it is an issue that is being made.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It would be well to have the Secretary of Labor, in the expenditure of $50,000,000 in a lump sum, at least consult the President as to the wisdom of its expenditure.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHERLEY: Page 3, at the end line 6, insert:

"Provided further, That the powers herein authorized shall not be exercised in the housing of Government employees in the District of Columbia except upon detailed estimates and appropriations for such purpose."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The committee have no objection to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. KELLEY of Pennsylvania, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10265) to authorize the Secretary of Labor to provide housing, local transportation, and other community facilities for war needs, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. IRELAND, for 10 days, on account of illness; and

To Mr. LARSEN, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

WAR FINANCE CORPORATION BILL.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I present the conference report on the bill S. 3714 (No. 448), the War Finance Corporation bill, for printing, under the rule.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman from North Carolina care to indicate when he proposes to call up the conference report?

Mr. KITCHIN. To-morrow.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 2, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Bayou Dorcheat, La., through Lake Bitsineau and Loggy Bayou (H. Doc. No. 1007); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Arcata Channels, Humboldt Bay, Cal., with a view of dredging a channel leading up to the proposed municipal public wharf (H. Doc. No. 1008); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Gardiners Island, N. Y., with a view to the construction of a breakwater (H. Doc. No. 1009); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Bayou des Glaises from Simmesport, La., to the junction of Bayou des Glaises with Bayou du Lac and Bayou Rouge, 1 mile east of Cottonport (H. Doc. No. 1010); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation in the sum of $40,000 required by the Ordnance Department for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, for the erection of a permanent hospital building at Rock Island Arsenal, Rock Island, Ill. (H. Doc. No. 1011); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the Boy Scouts of America, transmitting eighth annual report (H. Doc. No. 1012); to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. SIMS, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10818) to authorize the county of Loudon, in the State of Tennessee, to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River near Loudon, Tenn., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 431), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DECKER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10745) to authorize Cole and Osage Counties, Mo., to construct a bridge across the Osage River, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 432), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 3009) granting the consent of Congress to the P. M. C. Coal Co. to construct and maintain a bridge across Tug River, connecting Pike County, Ky., and Mingo County, W. Va., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 433), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DILLON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10593) granting the consent of Congress to the county commissioners of Bonner County, Idaho, to construct a bridge across the Clarks Fork River at or near the village of Clarks Fork, Bonner County, State of Idaho, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 434), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SNOOK, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10021) granting the consent of Congress to the county commissioners of Trumbull County, Ohio, to construct, operate, and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mahoning River in the State of Ohio, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 435), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10613) to provide for the collection and disposal of garbage and miscellaneous refuse of the District of Columbia, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 445), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10894) permitting certain persons to purchase supplies from the commissary stores of the Army and Navy, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 446), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 3476) to authorize the extension of a spur track or siding from the existing lines of railroad in the District of Columbia across First Street NE., between L and M Streets, to the buildings occupied by the Field Medical Supply Depot of the Army, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 447), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. IRELAND, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9120) for the relief of Lizzie Wilson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 436), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WELLING, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3825) for the relief of Oscar Smith, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 437), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. STEAGALL, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1796) to reimburse D. H. Carpenter, postmaster at Seddon, Ala., for money and stamps stolen from said post office at Seddon, Ala., and repaid by him to the Post Office Department, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 438), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 3403) for the relief of Paymaster Alvin Hovey-King, United States Navy, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 439), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 3131) for the relief of Col. Littleton W. T. Waller, United States Marine Corps, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 440), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10998) to reimburse Tennie A. Anderson, postmaster at Maplewood, Fayette County, W. Va., for money, money orders, and postage stamps stolen, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 441), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CLAYPOOL, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6171) for the relief of Edward C. McGonigal, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 442), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2860) for the relief of Gertrude Becherer, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 443), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LITTLE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5576) for the relief of Hugh Cameron, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 444), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. NORTON: A bill (H. R. 11166) authorizing and directing the President to fix the price of binders, reapers, headers, mowers, wagons, and other farm machinery, and to provide for the regulation of the production, storage, and sale of same, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BRAND: A bill (H. R. 11167) to require cashiers, other officers, and employees of a national banking association handling its funds, books, or assets to give bond; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 2, 1918.

The Right Honorable and Most Reverend the Lord Archbishop of York (Cosmo Gordon Lang), Primate of England and Metropolitan, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray. O Almighty and Eternal Lord God, Thou strong tower to all them that put their trust in Thee, to whom all things in heaven and earth do bow and obey, we beseech Thee to hear the prayers of Thy people which rise to Thee at this time of trial with reverence and godly fear. We see Thy hand laid upon this Nation at a supreme moment in history and upon the nations who are joined with it in the defense of the peace and freedom of the world. We devoutly believe that Thou wilt show Thy favor if they will rise to the heights of Thy justice and mercy. Uplift them, we beseech Thee, by Thy strong and holy spirit, that they may find in Thee their refuge and their strength.

With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as Thou givest us to see the right, let us strive to finish the work we are in. Strengthen our hearts and our hands and confirm our purpose that contending valiantly for truth and freedom we may conquer by Thy might.

Imbue with wisdom Thy servant the President of the United States of America and the assembly of Congress, and with them the rulers and the assemblies of the people allied with them in the cause intrusted to their care.

Hear the prayers which we offer before Thee for all who bear command of our forces both by sea and by land. Stretch forth Thy almighty hand to succor and defend the men who are now defending the cause of truth and freedom in the awful battle being waged across the sea. Strengthen them that they may stay the hand and hold their place. To those who this day will be wounded give Thy soothing and healing touch; to those who are called to die give Thy peace; and for all who have laid down their lives for their country we beseech Thy mercy. God accept them; Christ receive them.

If it be Thy gracious will, grant success to our arms and overrule, we beseech Thee, the issues of this war so that through Christ we may be brought to a lasting and righteous peace, and that the nations of this world may be united in a closer fellowship for the promotion of Thy glory and the good of all mankind.

These, our prayers, we offer and present to Thee in the name of Him who hast taught us to pray: Our Father which art in Heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done, on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive them that trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. GALLINGER and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate, pursuant to law, the annual report of the Boy Scouts of America, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GORE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. GORE, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. GRONNA, and Mr. NORRIS conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9504) to amend section 4067 of the Revised Statutes by extending its scope to include women, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WEBB, Mr. CARLIN, and Mr. VOLSTEAD managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8696) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma, Mr. HAYDEN, and Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3714) to provide further for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and to supervise the issuance of securities, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the concurrent resolution of the Senate, requesting the President of the United States to recommend a day of public humiliation, prayer, and fasting.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BECKHAM. I present a communication from the president of the Rotary Club, of Louisville, Ky., inclosing a resolution adopted by that club on the 28th ultimo. I ask that the communication and accompanying resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ROTARY CLUB OF LOUISVILLE,
Louisville, Ky., March 30, 1918.

Hon. J. C. W. BECKHAM,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The inclosed resolution, adopted March 28 by the Rotary Club of Louisville, is earnestly recommended for your careful and immediate consideration.

The Rotary Club does not doubt that our Government, through its Secret Service agencies, is doing a great many things that we know nothing of; but we do know that in Louisville, and in every other section of America, traitors flaunt their treason boldly and arrogantly, and we feel that treasonable words should be dealt with as resolutely as treasonable acts.

Unless more stringent laws are enacted, or those that we have are more vigorously enforced, the people will be compelled to take this matter into their own hands, and thereby lay themselves liable to the unjustifiable charge of mob violence.

Respectfully, J. H. RICHMOND, President.

Whereas the newspapers of this country are daily reporting the activities and expressions of enemy aliens and pro-German sympathizers in the United States; and

Whereas such actions and expressions are calculated and intended to give comfort and aid to the enemies of this Government and its allies; and

Whereas such activities and expressions are the gravest forms of offense at this time and should be dealt with in the most summary manner possible; and

Whereas the punishment for such offenses has been ineffective either because of inadequate laws to provide proper punishment or because of failure of those charged with the duty to diligently enforce the laws with reference thereto or both: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Rotary Club of Louisville calls upon the President and the Congress of the United States to take action immediately to provide such laws as may be necessary to meet and remedy this indefensible situation, and also to take action to compel the proper enforcement of all laws dealing with such offenses to the end that our enemies and their sympathizers in this country shall be made to understand that they must cease their disloyal activities; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the Senators and Congressmen from Kentucky, and to the Louisville press.

Mr. FRANCE. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Maryland, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF MARYLAND,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Thomas W. Simmons, secretary of state of the State of Maryland, under and by virtue of the authority vested in me by section 59 of article 35 of the Annotated Code of Maryland, do hereby certify that the following is a full, true, and correct copy of a joint resolution of the General Assembly of Maryland passed at its January session, 1918, as the same is taken from and compared with the original.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and have caused to be affixed the official seal of the secretary of state, at Annapolis, Md., this 12th day of March, in the year 1918.

[SEAL.] THOS. W. SIMMONS,
Secretary of State.

Joint resolution 12.

Joint resolution and memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Maryland to the Representatives of the State of Maryland in the United States Senate and in the House of Representatives of the United States requesting that each of them endeavor to have the United States Government acquire, maintain, and operate during the period of the present war or longer the line of railroad commonly called and known as the Washington, Potomac & Chesapeake Railroad, now or formerly belonging to the Washington, Potomac & Chesapeake Railroad Co., and extending from Brandywine, in Prince Georges County, to Mechanicsville, in St. Marys County, in the State of Maryland.

Whereas the line of the Washington, Potomac & Chesapeake Railroad Co., extending from Brandywine, in Prince Georges County, Md., traverses portions of said counties and also portions of Charles County in said State, which are susceptible of great agricultural production, and which are entirely without railroad facilities other than such as have been heretofore furnished by said railroad company; and

Whereas by a decree of the circuit court for Prince Georges County, Md., the said railroad company has been dissolved, and has recently ceased to operate or exercise its franchises as a common carrier; and

Whereas, without adequate shipping facilities, the production of food products within the territory heretofore served by said railroad company will be greatly curtailed at a period when it is imperative that every possible impetus to food production be maintained: Therefore be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the Representatives from the State of Maryland in the United States Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States, respectively, be, and they are hereby, respectively requested to promptly bring to the attention of the Director General of Railroads of the United States the importance of acquiring or controlling and maintaining and operating the line of railroad heretofore owned and operated by the aforesaid Washington, Potomac & Chesapeake Railroad Co. during the period of the present war or longer, and to that end cause to be passed such legislation through the Senate and Congress of the United States as may be necessary in the premises.

Resolved, That the secretary of the State of Maryland be, and he is hereby, requested to immediate transmit, under the great seal of this State, a copy of the aforegoing resolution and memorial to each of the Senators and Representatives now in the Congress of the United States from the State of Maryland, with the earnest request that they lay the same before their respective Houses in support of the measure hereinbefore set forth.

[SEAL.] PETER J. CAMPBELL,
President of the Senate.
HERBERT R. WOODEN,
Speaker of the House of Delegates.

Approved March 12, 1918.

Mr. TILLMAN presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce and Agriculture of Union, S. C., praying for Government control of dogs and for the encouragement of sheep raising, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. THOMPSON presented a petition of sundry post-office employees of Hutchinson, Kans., praying for an increase in the salaries of postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of John A. Dix Post, No. 59, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Columbus, Kans., praying for an increase of pension of soldiers of the Civil War, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Hastings, Minn., praying for the repeal of the present zone system of postage on second-class mail matter, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Imperial Valley Typographical Union, of California, praying for an increase in the salaries of compositors and pressmen employed in the Government Printing Office, which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BANKHEAD. From the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 7237) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 350) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

PUNISHMENT OF SEDITIOUS ACTS AND UTTERANCES.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on the Judiciary, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 8753) to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARDING in the chair). The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to report the bill named by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, this is a very far-reaching and very important bill under the conditions now existing, and I trust every Senator will read it. I shall ask the Senate tomorrow to allow me to call the bill up in the morning hour, and, because of its importance, I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill reported this day by Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, with amendments, is as follows:

An act (H. R. 8753) to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of title 1 of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully make or convey false reports or false statements with intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States, or to promote the success of its enemies, or shall willfully make or convey false reports or false statements, or say or do anything except by way of bona fide and not disloyal advice to an investor or investors, with intent to obstruct the sale by the United States of bonds or other securities of the United States or the making of loans by or to the United States, and whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully cause or attempt to cause, or incite or attempt to incite insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty, in the military or naval forces of the United States, or shall willfully obstruct or discourage or willfully attempt to obstruct or discourage the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States, and whoever, when the United States is at war, shall utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States, or any language calculated to bring the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute, or shall utter, print, write, or publish any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted Federal or State authority in connection with the prosecution of the war, or shall display the flag of any foreign enemy, or shall by utterance, writing, printing, publication, or language spoken, urge, incite, or advocate any curtailment of production in this country of anything or things, product or products, necessary or essential to the prosecution of the war in which the United States may be engaged, with intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States in the prosecution of the war, and whoever shall advocate, favor, teach, defend, or suggest the doing of any of the acts or things in this section enumerated, and whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of the German Empire or its allies in the present war or by word or act oppose the cause of the United States therein, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both."

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. FRANCE:

A bill (S. 4239) granting an increase of pension to John Cooper; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr McNARY:

A bill (S. 4240) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel," approved August 10, 1917; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 4241) making provisions of section 5, Post Office appropriation act for fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, applicable to District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. WATSON:

A bill (S. 4242) granting an increase of pension to W. L. Heiskell; and

A bill (S. 4243) granting an increase of pension to W. T. Ferguson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 4244) for the relief of entrymen within the Castle Peak irrigation project in Utah; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. STONE:

A bill (S. 4245) granting an increase of pension to Thomas J. Lecey (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 4246) granting an increase of pension to Clarence S. Hall (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KING:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 145) declaring a state of war exists between the United States of America and the Governments of Bulgaria and of Turkey; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATIVE, ETC., BILL.

Mr. SIMMONS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $4,500 for salary for Statistician for the Senate Joseph S. McCoy, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL GERMAN-AMERICAN ALLIANCE.

Mr. KING submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3529) to repeal the act entitled "An act to incorporate the National German-American Alliance," approved February 25, 1907, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

DISMISSAL OF UNPATRIOTIC GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 144) to provide for the dismissal of unpatriotic Government employees was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That any employee or official of the United States Government who commits any disloyal act or utters any unpatriotic, disloyal, or seditious language, or who, in an abusive and violent manner criticizes the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy or the flag of the United States, be at once dismissed from the service.

PROMOTION OF EXPORT TRADE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. POMERENE. I present a report of the conference committee on House bill 2316, known as the export-trade bill. The report must, I understand, under the rule governing conferences, be acted upon by the House first. I therefore ask that it lie on the table for the present.

The report was received and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 8.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5 and 6, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and the matter inserted by said amendments strike out, in lines 1, 2, and 3, page 3, all of section 2 after the word "or," in line 1, page 3, the matter stricken out being "intentionally and unduly enhances prices within the United States of commodities of the class exported by such association," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "intentionally enhances or depresses prices within the United States of commodities of the class exported by such association, or which substantially lessens competition within the United States or otherwise restrains trade therein"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 18, page 5, strike out the words "or intentionally and unduly," and in line 20, page 5, after the word "association," insert the words "or substantially lessens competition within the United States or otherwise restrains trade therein"; and the Senate agree to the same.

ATLEE POMERENE,
JOE T. ROBINSON,
ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

E. Y. WEBB,
C. C. CARLIN,
A. J. VOLSTEAD.
Managers on the part of the House.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the following acts:

S. 3401. An act to authorize the President to reduce temporarily the course of instruction at the United States Naval Academy; and

S. 3404. An act to authorize the President to drop from the rolls any naval or Marine Corps officer absent without leave for three months, or who has been convicted of any offense punishable by confinement in the penitentiary by the civil authorities, and prohibiting such officer's reappointment.

EDUCATION OF ADULT ILLITERATES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4185) to require the Commissioner of Education to devise methods and promote plans for the elimination of adult illiteracy in the United States.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I think we ought to have a quorum. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is not present. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hardwick	Myers	Smoot
Baird	Henderson	Nelson	Sterling
Bankhead	Hitchcock	New	Sutherland
Beckham	Hollis	Norris	Swanson
Calder	James	Nugent	Thomas
Chamberlain	Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Thompson
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Tillman
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Penrose	Townsend
Dillingham	Kellogg	Phelan	Trammell
Fall	Kendrick	Pittman	Underwood
Fernald	Kenyon	Poindexter	Vardaman
Fletcher	King	Pomerene	Wadsworth
France	Kirby	Reed	Walsh
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Robinson	Warren
Gallinger	Lodge	Saulsbury	Watson
Gerry	McCumber	Sheppard	Williams
Gore	McKellar	Sherman	Wolcott
Gronna	McLean	Shields
Hale	McNary	Smith, Ga.
Harding	Martin	Smith, S. C.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I announce that my colleague [Mr. GOFF] is detained by illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move that the bill under consideration be recommitted to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, in behalf of the committee, I desire to express the hope that the bill will not be recommitted. It would be useless to recommit it. The bill is now in as good shape as we know how to make it. With the assistance of the Senate it has been amended, and I think it is a better bill now than it was when it first came from the committee.

I hope the Senate will pass the bill, and pass it at once. If the use of this fund is to be valuable to men in cantonments, then the Commissioner of Education must immediately take steps to cooperate with the forces of the Secretary of War to help plan better work in the cantonments toward teaching those who can not speak English to speak English and toward teaching those who can not read to read.

It is also desired that the Commissioner of Education shall stimulate at once a system in the States of active effort to teach all within the draft age how to speak English and how to read. This work must be done at once if its greatest value is to be obtained.

It is useless to recommit the bill. If the Senate is not in favor of this work, then defeat the bill. We would report the bill to you at once just as it is now if it was recommitted. I am aware of no member of the committee who desires to change it from its present state.

I urge that the motion to recommit be defeated and that the bill be voted upon on its merits.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just a word in reply to the Senator from Georgia.

As I understood the Senator yesterday, the committee reporting this bill has before it now measures of a broad and comprehensive nature providing for the vocational training and for the education of the maimed and wounded soldiers who may return from the war, and for the training in a preliminary way of the illiterates seeking citizenship in this Republic. Of course the sensible thing now is to devote ourselves to the vigorous prosecution of the war. We dissipate our energies in all sorts of fads and experiments. It needs practical utilitarians now to conduct a war, and while engaged in this life and death struggle it is absurd and exceedingly unwise to attempt the part of a Don Quixote and seek to remedy and cure all the ills of the world. We should spend every energy to organize to beat Germany. It is ludicrous to me to waste our time debating over the illiteracy in States, and providing positions for a few men to inquire about the educational systems of the various States. It would be wiser to appropriate money to teach us how to fight, how to marshal our resources, how to defeat our powerful enemy and save our country and our liberties. There are too many cranks trying to secure legislation and determine governmental policies. There is only one supreme duty now, and that is to win this war. Not one dollar will be spent by my vote for unnecessary things until we triumph and civilization is saved. I would like to drive the foolish sentimentalists and visionary fanatics out of our midst until this dark storm is over. How incomplete and ineffective must be any plan now to educate illiterates in the United States and to educate those fighting in the Army. We need fighters and cannon and powder and bullets and aircraft. The schools and educational systems will follow our victory. My point is that we are now fighting for our lives; let us bend every energy to this stupendous task.

Necessarily our educational work will be interrupted during the war. With the advent of peace there will be many readjustments. The old world will never come back to us. New conditions—industrially, sociologically, politically—will be before us. No one can foretell what the days of the future will bring forth. Mighty revolutions in our social order may occur, which will shake the foundations of our Government. Educational systems will be modified; the relation between the States and the Federal Government may undergo great mutations. We pray that out of the war there may come peace and order and a new spirit of justice that will bind humanity in the bonds of enduring affection.

But now we want men to fight and money and more money to meet the staggering demands of the war.

This bill provides for such a pitiful and weak work, and it provides for so imperfect and uncorrelated effort, that it can not be treated with seriousness and ought not to meet with approval. I repeat what I said yesterday in discussing this measure: "It is a waste of money and is designed as a beginning to extend the activities of the Federal Government over the States in matters purely local and domestic." I make the prediction now that legislation of this character will be seized upon to make further demands upon Congress for aid in the educational work within the States. Soon the appetite will be developed for subsidies and bounties from the General Government for State education.

The promise of money from Congress to be distributed among the States, or to be expended in the States, particularly for so worthy an objective as education, will find welcome auditors everywhere. How delightful the climax will be, when we are called upon to collect millions of dollars from the people of the States through the costly instrumentalities employed by the General Government to execute its revenue laws, only to distribute it back to the States, less the large part that will be eaten up by officials and bureaus and employees and the unnumbered agencies of the Government! We seem not to have learned the fact that before money can be spent it must be obtained by the Government.

The thoughtless seem to think that if an appropriation is made by Congress for a State is to be spent in the State, that no one has to bear any burden, and that the people of the State pay no portion of the amount.

I want the Federal Government to keep its hands off from the States, except where the Constitution vests it with authority to lay its hands upon them, and to permit the people to control their own domestic and local affairs. It is unpopular to oppose appropriations, particularly appropriations to be spent within the States.

It is so easy to defend to the people of a State the expenditure of money within the State, which came from the National Treasury, and it is oftentimes an ungracious task to explain opposition to a scheme the success of which would mean the lightening of burdens resting upon the State.

Mr. President, I shall continue to oppose legislation which is calculated to enervate the people, diminish their love for their own States, and develop a spirit of pauperism and dependency, so that they feel that only by the grace and power of the General Government can they live or survive.

Strong and virile States, filled with a thinking, courageous people who have independence and local self-government, will make a puissant and glorious Republic.

The States can and will be weakened by the gifts from the National Government.

The language of this bill indicates what its purpose is, viz, to aid in educational work within the States.

Listen to these words of the bill:

> To promote plans for the elimination of illiteracy, and the extension of education among the adult population, and cooperate with State, county, district, and municipal education officers and others in putting these plans into operation.

The Federal bureau or agency is to cooperate with the States and the political subdivisions of the States, to promote education and to eliminate illiteracy.

It is obvious that the plan is to intrude the Federal Government into a purely domestic matter. We are asked by this bill to aid the States to overcome illiteracy and improve their educational systems. Of course, if we appropriate money wrung from the people by taxation to be used in educational work within the States it will accomplish some good. But that is not the only question here presented.

This bill, if enacted into law, will be regarded as an entering wedge by the Federal Government into the school activities of the States, and will be resented by States having the proper spirit or with the desire for larger appropriations in the future. It is manifestly insufficient to care for maimed soldiers, and it would be foolish to make appropriations for such purpose until a proper scheme has been devised.

This bill will enable a number of men to get jobs and collate a few statistics in regard to illiteracy, knowledge of which we all possess; or, if we do not, we can obtain it within a few moments by consulting the books in the Library. It is an ill-conceived plan and will be wholly impotent to accomplish any satisfactory results. In view of the fact that the committee is considering the question of caring for the maimed and wounded, and providing for their education, and is also considering the question as to the duty devolving upon the Federal Government to prepare aliens for the responsibilities of citizenship, I believe it unwise to pass this measure. To touch this matter in a piecemeal way is folly.

It seems to me, Mr. President, in view of the discussion of yesterday, and the facts that were then elucidated, that the wise and proper thing would be to recommit this bill and permit the committee that has consideration of these other important measures to consider this question, so that a safe, rational, and scientific plan may be proposed to meet conditions deemed so important as to require congressional consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, as many Senators are here this morning who were not present on yesterday, I wish to say that I think the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] misunderstands the measures which are being worked upon to which he refers. A number of bills have been prepared looking toward an organized effort by the Government vocationally to reeducate wounded soldiers, to teach them how to use their remaining physical powers in some line of endeavor by which they may find occupation and earn a livelihood; but this measure has no connection whatever with those measures. Those measures have reference to returned soldiers who are wounded.

I wish to say that great progress has been made in that line of work in Great Britain and France and Canada and Germany since this war has been going on. A number of those bills are now before experts, who are studying them with a view of suggesting the best plan for such a measure. It will not help us at all in this bill to bring up that measure at the same time. This bill has reference to an entirely different subject. This bill is immediately brought forward as the result of information gathered as to the number of our drafted men who can not speak English and our drafted men who can not read and write. A number of the States are beginning an effort to eliminate such illiteracy and to teach English.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Secretary of War is seeking in the cantonments to do work upon this line. Senators will find the whole subject discussed in the letter, which I put in the RECORD a few days ago from the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Education being connected with that department. The desire is that the direction of the Bureau of Education may be given to stimulate and to unify this work in the cantonments, which the Secretary of War is seeking to conduct with a separate fund, but which needs the stimulating and advising help of trained educators. They are found connected with the Bureau of Education.

It is said that the sum proposed to be appropriated by the bill is very small. We only ask for $100,000 from now until the 1st of July, continuing, however, to be used thereafter, if not before, consuming $50,000 annually after the 1st of July.

I wish to impress the fact that this is not for the teaching work itself. There are other forces to do that; the States and the cities have the force to do that; but here is a particular line of work to be directed to illiterate adults, a line upon which the States even have not heretofore exerted themselves; a line of work to teach English especially to all within the drafted age. The Secretary of War desires the help of the Bureau of Education in conducting this work; the States desire it; the cities desire it. This small sum of money will be used to help direct and stimulate this most valuable service.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to me?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will.

Mr. KING. What does the Senator from Georgia think this language means:

Provided further, That the Commissioner of Education shall not undertake to promote the teaching of adult illiterates and men and women of meager education in any State or Territory of the United States or in the District of Columbia, by cooperation or otherwise, without the written invitation or consent of the board of education or the chief school officer of such State, Territory, or District of Columbia.

Permit me to state this: Does not the Senator from Georgia concede that this bill is for the purpose of enabling the Bureau of Education to go into the States and to cooperate in a measure with the activities of the States in regard to education, and to supervise, so far as it may, the educational methods of the States? In other words, is it not a plan to intrude the Federal Government into the educational systems of the States, and will it not be made the pretext by the States for abandoning the duty resting upon them to provide an educational system under the police power of the State for those living within their borders? Will it not lead the States to appeal to the Federal Government to take up the question of education and bear the burden which education imposes? Will it not lead more and more to the atrophying of the powers of the State and more and more to the assumption by the Federal Government of powers and duties which belong to the States themselves?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not claim, Mr. President, to be a prophet, but I dissent entirely from the conclusions of the Senator from Utah with reference to the effect of this bill. We have inaugurated a system of extension work from the colleges of agriculture; we have inaugurated our vocational educational work; we have done much to stimulate and aid the States in educational work. This does not mean that the Commissioner of Education will interfere with the work of the States. It is expressly declared that even his plans, his suggestions, shall be given to those alone who desire them.

We know that the Secretary of War desires them; we know he needs the help; we know that the moving force came first from that source; but we also find that the opportunity exists to at once arouse and to organize forces in the States that will make a strenuous effort to remove illiteracy from the drafted men even before they reach the cantonments. It is simply along the line of work which the Government has been doing for years. Where an especial need of stimulus is required of national value in the State, whether in agriculture or in education or in other lines, we have sought to give it.

What is the Bureau of Education for? According to the view of the Senator from Utah, it should never have been organized, and it ought now to be abolished, and yet the Bureau of Education has done much to stimulate great and proficient work in the public schools of many States, and I have never heard the suggestion that there was an unfortunate interference with that work. It has done much to advance the standard of teaching and the standard of teachers. I think the Senate understands it, and I will not consume further time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Before the Senator from Georgia takes his seat the Chair desires to state that he is going to enforce the rule of two speeches on the motion to recommit, unless unanimous consent of the Senate is given to the contrary.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, if the purpose of this bill is to bring about the result which has been announced by the Senator from Georgia, it is not expressed in the bill. It seems to authorize the Commissioner of Education to investigate the methods of training illiterate men and women that obtain in the United States and the methods that obtain in foreign countries.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, that feature has been stricken from the bill. Let me send the Senator a copy of the bill as it has been amended by the Senate.

Mr. KIRBY. I would be glad to have one; I was discussing the old bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We have amended it substantially.

Mr. KIRBY. I am almost moved to ask with the Senator from Georgia what is the existing Bureau of Education for if it is not now familiar with these methods that obtain in the United States and in foreign countries? It certainly ought to be fully advised of those methods. It is not proposed to use any of this money or any of the plans to instruct men within the draft age or men who have been drafted and brought into camp; at least the bill that I have here does not indicate that such is the purpose.

It seems to me it is time that the money of this country at this critical period should be expended for the purpose of training men within the draft age and all other soldiers in their calling, and how to destroy the enemy, rather than in an undertaking to revamp the educational systems of the country; and unless there is some more definite purpose expressed in this bill to bring about the results indicated by the Senator from Georgia I shall vote against it. I do not believe it ought to be enacted into law in its present form.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Education and Labor. [Putting the question.] The Chair is unable to decide.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for a division.

On a division the Senate refused to recommit the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to line 5, where, after the word "several States," I think the words "and the District of Columbia" ought to be inserted.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I accept the suggestion.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that amendment. Also, in line 8, before the word "States," the word "several" should be inserted; and after the word "States," the words "and the District of Columbia."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The difficulty is that the Senator from New Hampshire is not using the print of the bill used at the desk, but is using the reprinted bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am using the bill in its amended form, as it was ordered reprinted last evening.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary has difficulty in finding the place in the original bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. The amendment is in the reprinted bill in line 5, after the word "States," to insert the words "and the District of Columbia."

The SECRETARY. On page 1 of the reprinted bill, line 5, after the words "the several States," it is proposed to insert the words "and the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, in line 8, page 1, before the word "States," I move to insert the word "several"; and after the word "States," to insert the words "and the District of Columbia."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1 of the reprint, line 8, before the word "States," where it appears the second time, it is proposed to insert the word "several"; and after the word "States," to insert the words "and the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the phraseology in line 10, page 2. Perhaps it is right as it is, but it reads:

That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby authorized to be appropriated.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The word "authorized" should be stricken out.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to strike out the words "authorized to be," so that it will read "there is hereby appropriated."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2 of the reprint, line 10, it is proposed to strike out the words "authorized to be," so that it will read "there is hereby appropriated."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I presume the words "authorized to be" were employed in order that the appropriation might be carried in a general appropriation bill, but still I would rather they be left out.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should hardly think that would be necessary. I will call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the fact that, after the bill has been passed, in amending the title the words "and the District of Columbia" should be inserted.

Mr. KING. I move to amend the bill by striking out, beginning in line 14, page 2, after the word "expended," the following words found on that line, also line 15 and line 16, to wit:

And $50,000 for each succeeding fiscal year until June 30, 1928.

I do not think that the Senate of the United States wants to obligate itself to make an appropriation for this purely experimental and absurd proposition up to and including the year 1928.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The language sought to be stricken out by the Senator from Utah was put in yesterday as an amendment, so that the motion of the Senator from Utah must be first to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I was not aware of that action. I therefore move to reconsider the action of the Senate yesterday by which the amendment just referred to was inserted in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Utah to reconsider. [Putting the question.] By the sound the Chair is unable to determine. Those in favor of the motion will rise. [A pause.] Those opposed will rise. [A pause.] The vote whereby the amendment was adopted is reconsidered. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the real purpose of putting in the words "authorized to be" was that the question of an immediate appropriation might still be considered by the Senate and provided for in a general appropriation bill, without being subject to the point of order as being general legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is not what is before the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand that is not entirely what is before the Senate, but it is partly what is before the Senate. I think it will be a great mistake to limit this appropriation to one year. I think we ought to carry it for a longer time than that. I would not insist upon the appropriation for the full limit of time up to 1928, but I think it would be well worth while to make this appropriation $100,000 for the next three years—for the present year, for the next year, and the next year. Certainly for two years we ought to carry an appropriation that would plan going on with the work after July 1 next. If the bill were changed so as to carry the appropriation of $100,000 to July 1, and $100,000 for the following year, I would not object to seeing the good effect of this work in determining whether we should carry it further.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. KING. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Georgia whether the Bureau of Education may not now, under its general powers and under the law, discharge all of the duties and obligations required to be performed under this act?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I do not think there is any authority that carries this line of work, and there is certainly no appropriation, and I think this bill is necessary to do so.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I understood the Senator a few moments ago, in dilating upon the effective work of the Bureau of Education, to state that it had had a stimulating effect upon education, and that it had done something toward coordinating the educational systems of the States. Obviously, if it has done anything along those lines, it has made some inquiry into the question of illiteracy. Therefore it is——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator does not desire to ask me a question, I think we will get along better if he will do so and then let me proceed.

Mr. KING. Then I will pretermit what I was about to observe, and ask the Senator if the Bureau of Education may not now devise efficient and economic methods for teaching adult illiterates and men and women of meager education in the United States?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Bureau of Education has no appropriation with which to make an organization in that direction. The question of the education of adults, the question of training those who can not speak English to speak English, is a subject which has been brought forcefully to the attention of the country only within the past 12 months, or certainly more forcefully to the attention of the country within the past 12 months than ever before. There is no provision connected with the Bureau of Education and there is no fund of money the use of which is contemplated in such a direction.

I regard this as one of the most valuable services that can be rendered—a service that probably can be accomplished with less expenditure than any other service where so much good would come from so small an expenditure. Now, why should we refuse? Why should we be technical about it? The Senator from Utah does not really object to this work. He desires it; but his imagination has conjured up a dread lest this is the opening wedge for some great appropriation looking toward national aid to education in the States.

I am not afraid of anything of the kind. I am not afraid of national cooperation with the States for the improvement of the citizenry of the United States. I believe in national contribution along lines of stimulation for educational work. I think it is a splendid work. I think we get much return for few dollars spent; and I am simply astonished that this effort—so meritorious, so valuable—should have met with opposition.

I am opposed to striking out those words. If the Senate desired to amend them, and lessen the number of years, I would not object; but to strike them out entirely would be undoubtedly a blunder. I would be willing to see it amended, if the Senate desired, so as to provide that it should only be continued for a less length of time, that we might see the good results that come from the work, and then extend it still further. But the Senator from Utah asks that the Senate limit the appropriation to July 1 next. I would be perfectly willing to accept an amendment of $100,000, and $100,000 annually during the continuance of the war.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I shall be glad to answer it.

Mr. KIRBY. Does not the Senator think that the Bureau of Education can perfect these plans within one year with $100,000 and continue to exist and perform its functions as heretofore?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I think the Senator does not comprehend the work of the Bureau of Education. It is not simply to perfect the plans. Leaders along these lines will go out and work. They will work with teachers' conventions; they will work with teachers in cities; they will work with gatherings of patriotic people, and they will continue so to work. It is astonishing that our Nation has permitted so large a number of inhabitants to live in it so long who can not speak English.

I, for one, am opposed to printing a newspaper in the United States in anything but English. I, for one, am in favor of making the English language the language spoken by every citizen of the United States; and to that end I am in favor of aggressive leadership by the Government itself to teach English to every citizen of the United States.

I am opposed to the motion to strike out. I would not object to a reduction of the number of years.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, before the Senator sits down, I should like to ask him a question.

In connection with the expenses to be incurred by the Bureau of Education, I simply want to cite, for the information of the Senator, an experience we had in our State in making a census of the subnormal children. That census took nearly three years, and it was alarming and astounding in its results. We found that there were over 2 per cent of the children of the State—2 per cent of 600,000 that we educated—who were subnormal. Now, that information was not available for the Federal Government; and in support of this bill I simply wish to say that it would be of great assistance to the States in the Union to have these statistics, so that they may reform their own school systems and take care of the illiterates in their own educational systems. It takes time and it takes money to make this investigation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, before the motion to strike out is voted upon, I move that the provision be limited to 1924, cutting off the last four years. I move to amend the portion sought to be stricken out by changing the word "eight" to "four" first.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, before the vote is taken upon that amendment I want to express my hearty concurrence in the views just stated by the Senator from Georgia regarding the necessity for making the English language what it purports to be—the language of the United States of America. The time has come when no man who is unable to speak that language should be accorded political rights, and I believe that we should do any and every thing necessary to be done in order to make that tongue universal.

I say that without the slightest prejudice against the natural sentiments of the immigrant to this country for the language of his own country. Indeed, a knowledge of modern languages is becoming more and more a part of the necessary equipment of every citizen. But when we consider that we have communities in the United States, and a great many of them, where the English tongue is not heard at all, and where the policy of those communities is to make them as foreign as themselves, which is done through their control of boards of education, through the influence which their power to vote gives them; when we consider further that we are now suffering from such conditions, and suffering far more extensively than the public knows, we would be failing in our duty if we did not make every possible effort at this time toward the beginning of a system that will make such conditions after the war practically and politically impossible.

Mr. President, I have had occasion to say upon this floor once or twice during this session, and others have voiced the same thing, that there is an absence of unity of purpose and of a spirit in the United States which must manifest itself before we can even begin the prosecution of this war as an American war; and the lack of it can be traced largely to the insularity of our foreign populations, perpetuated by an ignorance of the English tongue and their constant use of the language of their native land.

I know that our secret-service system is hampered at present because of the prevalence of so many languages in this country, and that plots of all sorts are hatched in these nests of foreigners with practical impunity in many instances because the language which there flourishes is not the English language and because it is extremely difficult to secure the right agencies to discover and afterwards to develop and punish them.

Mr. President, I am well satisfied, and as the days pass by and information is accumulated my convictions are strengthened, that in nearly every avenue of the governmental activities essential to the successful prosecution of this war our enemies are at work, and at work actively. I do not mean to say that they are all composed of foreigners, because they are not. Indeed, the subtlest and most dangerous of all our secret enemies in this country are the men and women of Anglo-Saxon descent who speak the English language and who are selling their birthright, their patriotism, and possibly the fate of the race to which they belong for the considerations which German agencies are able and eager to pay; they are producing results and very serious ones. To illustrate:

Mr. President, I received a letter this morning and another on yesterday morning, from the same factory, calling my attention to the fact that out of the manufacture of 5,000 rubber gas masks 2,900 were found defective, and after they had been discarded some of them were found packed among those that had passed inspection.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, what was the matter with them?

Mr. THOMAS. The matter with them was that small perforations, invisible to the eye, but through which all kinds of gases may penetrate, were discovered in them by stretching, by testing.

Mr. OVERMAN. Was that done by somebody in the factory?

Mr. THOMAS. It must have been done by men and women in the factory; and that, Mr. President, is only a sample of what is going on.

Mr. President, I think we may now be confronted with the supreme crisis of this war. The German drive has not ended. It is merely waiting long enough to get its second wind. American troops, with those of the allies, are in the newly improvised trenches. They are fighting for the allies, fighting for us, and fighting for the future. If there ever was a time during this war when all the energies we possess should be unified in the support of that gallant army we have sent across the sea, this is the hour. Yet, what are the dispatches this morning? Five thousand men on strike in the Norfolk yards; sixty-odd thousand in New York threatening to go out to-morrow; seven or eight thousand strikers in Kansas City—a sympathetic strike, prompted by some paltry difference between a lot of laundrymen and their employers; and these do not comprise them all.

Mr. President, is there any significance in the fact that these labor difficulties occur at this crisis, or is it a mere coincidence? To my mind, it is a part of the German propaganda which easily operates through processes of their own, one of which is to avail itself of those to whom the English language is not known.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if it is not the result of a propaganda that was made here before we declared war?

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, Mr. President, it is the result of a propaganda that began on the day when peace was declared between Prussia and France. It is the result of a propaganda which has formed a part of the organized preparation of the Empire of Germany through which it proposes to secure dominion over the world. It is a propaganda, Mr. President, that exists in every country upon the globe. In a house in Downing Street, in the city of London, is a vast mass of material, documentary in character, collated since the war by the British Government from the four corners of the earth. This material is expressed in every language and every dialect under the sun. Through the agency of associations of every character, civic, political, economic, and religious, it is mute evidence of a vast propaganda the advocates and converts of which are far more dangerous to liberty than the legions of the Kaiser upon the battle fields of Europe. The debacle in Russia never could have been accomplished by the armed forces of the Kaiser. It was the result of that secret undermining force which for want of a better name we call pan-Germanism, the same force which is producing these terrible labor conditions at this time.

Mr. President, if we are to utilize our entire energies toward the proper prosecution of this war, and we must use them if we are to win it, it is high time these strikes and suspensions be properly characterized. I contend that the man who incites a strike at this time, I do not care what his motives are, is an enemy of the United States and should be treated as such. I declare, Mr. President, deliberately that the fomenters of strikes in our labor ranks are traitors to the country whose protection they invoke.

I do not confine my statement, Mr. President, to these people. It is equally true of many of our profiteers. And certainly true of any man who at any time anywhere is impeding the program of this Government, whether he be in command or whether he be a subaltern.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to say that there is a propaganda going on in this country against the sale of our bonds.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, there are none so blind as those who will not see. The propaganda to which the Senator from North Carolina refers is not confined to our bond sales. It exists everywhere. Unfortunately some people in high places are unwittingly aiding that propaganda through interferences with natural production, through the fixing of arbitrary prices and the multiplication of uncertainty in our economic life, the consequences of which, I fear, will be more painfully evident next fall and next winter than they are now. It requires all our energies to prosecute this war. By dividing them between its prosecution and the attempt to direct the business of the country at this time it can not be done. I do not believe in profiteering; no man does. But, Mr. President, the business interests of the country must not be too greatly interfered with if we are to continue to receive the supplies which we must have and to make the money which is necessary for the prosecution of the war.

Hence I say that policies which produce an atmosphere of discontent, which introduce grave uncertainties in the ordinary affairs of life, which bewilder if it does not more seriously affect production—these things naturally make the sale of bonds difficult. Mr. Garfield, by his coal-price orders, closes the mines of some struggling individual or company barely able to keep alive under former conditions, in consequence of which his business is suspended, if not permanently ended. When he reflects that this action is done in the name of his Government, he is not apt to be inspired with those motives of patriotism which every individual should entertain and express. He is dependent upon his business for a livelihood and for the support of his family. When through Government agencies that business is suspended and that support gone, he may rise when he hears the inspiring strains of the Star-Spangled Banner, but his thoughts are in other directions when he thinks of the future and what it means to his wife and to his family.

These things, Mr. President, make it the more essential that our present industrial conditions and the widespread propaganda to which the Senator has referred should be not only recognized, not only denounced but counteracted by every means within our power. I do not know whether we are doing it or not.

Inasmuch as this bill proposes to teach the English language to illiterates, or at least to lay the foundation for that good work, inasmuch as it is designed to give the foreign soldier in our ranks an opportunity to understand the orders of his officer—and there are 700,000 men of the draft age who can not speak or write the English language—then it would seem that we should get behind it, even though defective in expression, and put it upon the statute books as soon as possible and let the machinery of its operation begin.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado a question before he sits down. Does the Senator believe that an American who can neither read nor write, a native-born son, is as good a man, as good a citizen, or as good a soldier as the man who is educated?

Mr. THOMAS. The question answers itself, Mr. President. Of course he is not.

Mr. PAGE. Does not the Senator know, and I say to our burning shame it can be said, we have at this time, or had at the time of the last census, 1,500,000 native-born whites who could neither read nor write?

Mr. THOMAS. The fact is a reflection upon American intelligence and American progress.

Mr. PAGE. The point I wish to make is this: That while we are discussing this matter from the standpoint of the foreigner I do not think we ought altogether to lose sight of the fact that we have native-born citizens, so many as 1,500,000, or we might go further and say that in some States there are from 30 to 35 per cent of the entire population who are illiterate.

Mr. THOMAS. I will yield the floor in just a moment to the Senator from Missouri.

With regard to the purpose of this bill there is this difference between that class of illiterates and those designed to be reached by it. They can speak and understand the English tongue; it is their native tongue. They are therefore in language and race as much a part and parcel of the homogeneous mass of America as any other. But the man who can neither read nor write nor understand the English language is a source of far more serious danger, and particularly at this time when they are being drafted as American citizens and expected to do their duty in the field.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me one moment? I wish to ask the Senator from Georgia whether, after the discussion continues a little longer, the bill may not go over until to-morrow morning? I have several amendments that I feel sure the Senator will agree to that I wish to offer, but I have an engagement which will take me from the Senate and keep me from the Senate for a couple of hours.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am very anxious to finish the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Its passage to-day is not imperative. I would gladly remain if I could.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I dislike ever to object to anything the Senator from New Hampshire asks, and I will not object. Then let us go on, and when we get through with what is to be said I will agree to let the bill go over until to-morrow. I intend to ask the Senate to amend the figures as to the time to 1922 instead of 1928, so that it will give only three years, and at the end of that time we can see what good it is doing; and if we want to continue it we can do so, and if we do not it will not continue itself.

Mr. GALLINGER. I venture to suggest to the Senator that we make appropriations for the three years. I was going to appeal to the Senator to do that. However, that can come up to-morrow, if the bill is to go over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If that is the only amendment the Senator has to offer, to get the bill through——

Mr. GALLINGER. I have several others of a minor nature. If I was prepared to offer them I would do it now and not ask this courtesy.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I shall not object.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to supplement by a word of explanation the statement of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. He spoke of the strike in Kansas City. That strike can not be charged to foreigners. It so happens that Kansas City has the smallest percentage of foreign-born population of any one of the large cities in the United States. Of course, there are people in Kansas City, and a good many people, who are of foreign birth, but the city is distinctively an American city.

With the details of the strike in Kansas City I am not familiar, but in a general way I understand that some controversy grew up between laundry employees and their employers, which resulted in a strike in the laundries. That was followed by a sympathetic strike that has grown to large proportions and which at one time it was feared would result in calling out nearly 20,000 men. The street car system is involved; many large industries of the city are tied up. All this seems to have grown out of what was originally a controversy between a laundry proprietor and his help.

Mr. President, that, as I have stated, can not be laid at the door of the foreign-born people in the case of Kansas City. It must be laid at the door, I am sorry to say, of union labor. I have defended union labor every time the opportunity has come to me since I have attained my majority.

Long before coming to the Senate, in public speech and in public acts, as well as in private acts, I have endeavored to further the cause of organized labor. In the Senate I have voted, I think, for every measure calculated to strengthen and encourage organized labor. I shall not now, because of the conditions in Kansas City, denounce organized labor. I shall not indulge in any general criticism of organized labor. But as its sincere friend I say this, and say it with all the solemnity of my soul, that the day organized labor creates disturbances that arrest those industries which are essential to the carrying on of this war it will be a very dark one for organized labor and for our beloved country. Organized labor will lose the best friends it has ever had. It will disintegrate and go down before the loyal protests of its own loyal members, men who put country above every other consideration in life. Union labor counts such men by the tens of millions.

This is no time for strikes upon the one hand, or for lockouts on the other hand. The business of employee and employer to-day is to compose their difficulties, and so far as I am concerned I am ready to vote at this moment for a law which will punish the men, either employers or employees, who by conspiracy undertake to stop the building of American ships of war or American merchant ships essential to the life of the Republic. I am as willing to vote to punish men who engage in a conspiracy to stop that kind of work as I am to vote to punish any conspirator who may undertake to stop the draft or to stop the successful march of the American Army, because these great industries that are now threatened, and which if the threat is carried out will be stopped, are absolutely vital to the prosecution of the war. They are necessary to the safety of our soldiers across the seas. The man who to-day conspires to stop the work in American shipyards conspires to starve and to defeat the American Army in Europe. The fact may as well now as later be stated plainly and regardless of consequences, that the American people will hold responsible whoever shall be guilty of any act tending to weaken the American Army now abroad or in preparation for that fateful enterprise which involves perhaps the safety of civilization.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, this bill presents one phase of a very serious problem that confronts the American people, and the Congress of the United States sooner or later must deal with it in a comprehensive way. On yesterday it was my privilege to meet the governor of Idaho, in whose State they have had serious trouble with the I. W. W.'s. The Senator from Washington dwelt somewhat on this question the other day, as it relates to his own State. The governor of Idaho made the statement, as a result of an investigation he had set on foot, that 70 per cent of the I. W. W.'s in his State could neither read nor write the English language, and that only 10 per cent of them were native born. If 70 per cent of the I. W. W.'s can neither read nor write, how are they going to be able to comprehend the genius of our institutions? What a fertile field they make for the agitators and the anarchists of this country.

I refer to this because I feel very keenly the need of doing something which will aid all foreigners who come to this land to enjoy our institutions to understand what we are doing in this country and why we are doing it. My belief is that whether the Senator from Georgia has the right plan embraced in his bill or not, it touches a problem worthy of the best attention of the American Congress.

MILITARY ORGANIZATION AND TRAINING.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, what I have to say has a somewhat direct bearing upon the bill which is now pending. I hesitate to trespass upon the time of the Senate. Perhaps no one here realizes better than do I the necessity for immediate and masterful action when human life hangs in the balance, and we all realize that time here is very precious, because upon our prompt and vigorous action depend the lives of many men as well as the fate of nations. But I feel that much of the pending legislation will be futile or even vicious in its effect without a more comprehensive war policy of which I hope by these observations to stimulate a further discussion.

I can not expect, in the course of these remarks, to discuss with any degree of completeness the problem to which I invite the attention of the Senate. I wish that I might indulge the hope that since my words must prove inadequate, the very greatness of the cause for which I speak may enable it to plead with a persuasiveness which no voice can possibly possess. I am adverting to the cause of securing that higher degree of organization in our national life which has for so long been necessary, but which since our entrance into the war has become immediately imperative. The problem of the proper degree and form of national organization, and I am now speaking of organization not in the legal but in the social sense, is a most complex and comprehensive one in which are involved all of the various component questions which have since history's beginning perplexed the student of human government. It presses now upon us as the central and essential problem of this war. If not sooner solved it will appear as the paramount and menacing problem in the days of reconstruction after the establishment of peace. It is the problem from which will arise the issues of our political contests in the near and far-distant future. As old as history it is ever new, ever changing, ever increasing in magnitude, and upon its correct solution depend the happiness of every citizen and the efficiency and perpetuity of every State.

Early in last May I urged the necessity for taking the preliminary steps toward a more rational organization of the Nation, and while I addressed the Senate only after much hesitation, I yet spoke with an absolute assurance of the soundness of the principles for which I then contended, such assurance being based upon my personal observations of the remarkable industrial, social, and military organization of the German Empire.

On the 11th day of January the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] in an address which shall long remain in my memory, said:

> When the German Kaiser decided to make war for the world's domination he cast a solvent into our present-day civilization which has put us in a very fluid state.

His words on that occasion and this figure of speech, revealing a most able and thoughtful statesman contemplating with clear apperceptions this mighty process of mutation in the affairs of men and nations, were so apt and so significant that they have remained in my thoughts, and if time were not so pressing I should be tempted to run out the symbol of the Senator into the wider reaches of its application. The Senator well knows that there are various solvents; those physical, by which without essential change, but by transformations truly wonderful in all their intimate processes, the solid passes from our view, temporarily diffused in fluidity but readily recoverable; and solvents chemical, by which now by transmutations far more marvelous than any dreamed of by the ancient alchemists there come, through all those strange mysterious intermediate states of nascency, changes elemental, final, down to the indivisible by which the old passes away and there is born another substance, compounded of the original elements, but with properties wholly new; changes by which what was may sometimes be seen melting within the glowing retort to a solution of such concealed but concentrated potency as may amaze, stupify, or even destroy the beholder.

For myself, I have a faith immovable that within the huge and fateful alembic of this war, with its choking, poisonous gases, its disemboweling bayonets dripping hot blood, its reeking monster mortars tearing limb from joint and head from torso, with all its human agony mingled with a heroism and devotion which again attest the eternal kinship of man with divinity, there are taking place elemental alterations in the structure of our civilization which mark the everlasting finality of many things which must not longer be in the established social orders of the world—a faith that lets me see the new nascency of that true and efficient cooperative democracy which was both undreamed of and undesired by those whose inordinate hatred, greed, and ambition furnished the fuel and lighted the flames beneath this vast experiment. To my mind the great question now to be answered by this Republic is whether these inevitable social and governmental changes can be effected by a reasonable solution and transformation of what is into what must be, or whether they can only be secured after a dissolution of all existing governmental forms. Which of the great national structures shall prove to have the highest melting point? How long will the high towers of carefully partitioned class and privilege and stage upon mounting stage of cold and hardened caste withstand the softening blasts now bursting forth from these roaring furnaces of war? In Russia government is already molten, formless, and seething chaos there awaits the statesmen with the molds and patterns of free but ordered institutions. Upon what philosophy of government do our heroic French brothers ponder in their trenches, and what is to be the policy of the United Socialists of France, at whose word, not long since, a reactionary ministry fell because merely suspected of having materialistic aims? What is presaged by the quiet, determined voices of English workingmen, somewhat suppressed but yet audible across every sea, as they prepare officially to say:

> We need to beware of patchwork. The view of the labor party is that what has to be reconstructed after the war is not this or that governmental department, or this or that piece of social machinery, but, so far as Britain is concerned, society itself. At such times it is easier to slip into ruin than to progress into higher forms of organization. That is the problem which presents itself to the labor party. What this war is consuming is not merely the security, the homes, the livelihood, and the lives of millions of innocent families and an enormous proportion of all the accumulated wealth of the world, but also the very basis of the peculiar social order in which it has arisen. The individualist system of capitalist production, based on the private ownership and competitive administration of land and capital, with its reckless "profiteering" and wage slavery, with its glorification of the unhampered struggle for the means of life, and its hypocritical pretense of the "survival of the fittest," with the monstrous inequality of circumstances which it produces, and the degradation and brutalization, both moral and spiritual, resulting therefrom may, we hope, have received a death blow.

If you prefer the views of a most thoughtful German, Mr. Walther Rathenau, one of the leading business men of Germany, the head of the great General Electric Co. of Berlin, the man who is generally credited with having organized Germany's industries for the war, I read you a few paragraphs from some advanced pages of his book entitled "The New Domestic Economy," as quoted in the New York Times of March 11, 1918:

> What is this event, the waves of which are breaking around us? We call it war because it has the form of international war, because the convulsed nations are openly and apparently struggling in earth, water, air, and fire. Coming generations will recognize it. What we are experiencing is the revolution of the world, the volcanic upheaval of the mighty, burning lower strata of the abode of mankind. It is not taking place in the disorderly form of a mass uprising with pikes and scythes, as its early prophets thought. That would have been of small account and would not have thrown the world from its axis.
> Made deaf and mad by their inner tension, intoxicated by the last and highest distillations of the old order of things, trembling with nationalism and imperialism, nations must hurl themselves upon nations, in the splendor and discipline of their State and military orders, completely equipped by their industries and their sciences, with the fury and the grief of their souls and hearts.
> * * * * * * * *
>
> In reality, however, the old economic order is burning down and the time is drawing near when the old foundation of the social order will catch fire.
> Two pillars of the old order will project from the ruins—the monopoly of the great landed estates and of the mineral treasures. But they will gradually lose, no matter how much their property power may grow at first, the legal basis to which they are indebted for their footing. For this flood has not overtaken the world so that the treasures of the earth may be washed up as flotsam upon some blessed Mount Ararat.

I do not fear for the permanence of our own national structure, for it rests upon principles in harmony with universal law, and the adequate application of these principles must give to the world the first complete expression of eternal truth in governmental form. But those great rational fundamental principles have not as yet become wholly incorporate and vital in all the departments and functions of our national life, nor have they yet been scientifically applied to all the changing and ever-increasing complexities of modern conditions and of current social needs. I am willing to grant you, sir, that this is truly "a war of democracy against autocracy," but I must insist that there may be different interpretations placed upon the deeper meanings of the phrase. It seems to me that we are in grave danger of failing to learn the lessons of this war, of being blind to the huge handwriting upon every horizon of the world, if we do not search for the war's more remote causes, which, to my mind, lie far deeper than the ephemeral ambitions, personalities, prejudices, and follies of Kaiser, parliaments, ministers, and kings. This mighty upheaval of the world is in truth but a surface manifestation of a conflict between vast submerged, antagonistic, elemental forces, the resultants of which are to be the determinants which shall move and shape the destiny of men and nations for centuries to come.

It is indeed a war of democracy against aristocracy and the autocracy of expiring monarchy, but it is far more than this, for it is above all a war of democracy against the cruel and grinding autocracy of that inefficiency which inevitably attends all government which is incoordinated and incomplete. It is a war of democracy against the antisocial disintegrating forces of selfish rampant individualism and all the outworn, discredited theories of the laissez faire, which are in unyielding opposition to the higher forms of social organization, without which, under modern conditions, there can be no approximation to the realization of democracy's purposes and ideals.

Nations are to be judged not by their constitutions but by their institutions. As the unwritten law outlasts the enacted statute, so has the spirit of aristocracy and of monarchy survived their obsolescent forms and crumbling castles. In Europe the hard refractory crusts of an ancient feudalism have for centuries resisted the high solvent power of nascent democracy, while in America the perpetuated doctrines and traditions which we have inherited from the older governmental systems have impeded the progress and the more rapid and rational evolution of such new and democratic institutions as would conform to and embody the great principles which were so clearly enunciated by the fathers.

We can not at present foresee all the succession of stages through which will come those governmental alterations which must be the inevitable result of this war, but there can be no doubt that the final product will be a higher form of democratic social organization, and it is imperative that we strive to so clarify our vision that we may comprehend the vast mutations now in progress and give direction to the processes by such strong, intelligent, masterful action as will leave no doubt of our determination to dominate the whole situation, in the hope that, by a rational transformation of what is, this new democracy may come, instead of through those utmost radical revolutions which, if they occur, must involve years of delay, and slow and painful reconstruction, de novo, from the completely disintegrated social elements. In order that we may do this we need at once, not merely a new military policy but a whole new national policy, formulated in recognition of the fact that historic evolution, of which this war is but one of the violent stages, has been steadily toward the establishment of a government which should be stable, because a true resultant of individual forces, permanent because broad based upon a popular will freely and intelligently expressed, preserving liberty by a constitution properly defining, limiting, and distributing its various powers, yet so integrated in all its parts and so coordinated in all of its functions as to eliminate chance as it extends with absolute certainty and scientific precision to every citizen the very maximum of opportunity for healthful life, free expansion, self-development, achievement, and happiness.

This great Republic is clogged with human driftwood. There could be no human driftwood in a democratic State formed as ours is, and administered as ours should be, with an intelligent and unwearying determination to translate our ideals into living realities. We have the ideal governmental system, but we have ignored the fact that the extension of governmental administrative function must keep pace with the growth in number and in density of population. We have not in our statesmanship given enough attention to that fundamental law of organic and social evolution which makes clear the absolute necessity for an increase in structure with the enlargement of mass, and the undeniable fact that if the mass increases without a proportionate differentiation, integration, and organization there must certainly develop in the mass areas of malnutrition, proceeding to mortification and corruption, from which areas there must spread the elaborated poisons which will inevitably result in the destruction of the whole.

If a State is to grow in power as it grows in population, if it is to intensify its vitality and move steadily up and on to higher stages of development, it must obey this law of natural, national evolution. In the social body as in the organic there is the constant interplay of centripetal, integrating, and centrifugal disintegrating forces. The progressive state rapidly integrates while the reactionary gradually disintegrates, and it is no doubt true, as stated by one of the greatest of modern philosophers, that in history we may see the incessant struggle between such progressive, forward-looking States and such reactionary, backward-looking States, that in the end the State with the most "viable idea must gain the mastery," and that "history may thus be interpreted as a series of divine reprisals against the just, the partial, the incomplete in government.

Our Republic is a vigorous, progressive, and integrating State. The process of national integration here, however, is but in its incipiency, for we are in the early embryonic, formative stages of our national development and the process has, as I have intimated, been to an abnormal degree retarded by a widespread and unreasoning repugnance toward those more advanced forms of scientific social organization, the value of which have been so fully demonstrated, which repugnance is founded upon an undue reverence for the doctrines of unregulated individualism, freedom of contract, and of the laissez faire which have been handed down from the aristocratic systems with a large body of our common law.

It would lead me far afield to enter upon a full exposition of my conception of an adequate national organization but such an organization must, of course, be predicated upon the assumption that each child born, or citizen added to our country, becomes at once a national asset and a national liability, an individual to serve, doing his part for his country, and to be with every care conserved; and, being such, his name and the record of his progress and achievement must be most systematically recorded upon the books of his country and, further, that, not by a system of paternalism and socialism, but by a system of properly and justly regulated individualism by the adequate, complete, rational, and effectual functioning of a vigorous and vital national organism, each such individual must be guaranteed an opportunity exactly equal to that of every other for fitting himself for useful and contented citizenship, and, further, guaranteed that irreducible minimum of the necessities for such a citizenship which every normal and properly trained man can, under proper conditions, earn and has a right to demand. I advocate legislation looking toward the development of such a national organism because I am opposed to socialism. There is grave danger of our now falling into the folly of adopting that panacea for the intolerable ills which follow governmental inefficiency, which consists in calling upon the Government to attempt more, to own more things, and perform more functions. I would not have the Government do more things, but I would have it do things much more effectively. I would not expand the powers of Government but perfect its performance. I would improve social conditions, not by further socializing the State and thus limiting individual opportunity, but by having the Government do its present work so well that every citizen would be truly liberated, given the greatest possible freedom and the largest possible opportunity for growth and achievement.

But whatever may have been our individual political philosophy, we now face one hard, inexorable fact, that, since the most highly cooperative, integrated, socialized, and militarized nation of all time has created modern warfare, such warfare is of necessity the most cooperative and collectivistic of all governmental functions; indeed, of all human undertakings. It is only the most hopeless amateur who disparages and despises a dangerous adversary, for it is imperative to exhaustively investigate and estimate the whole system which makes an enemy powerful in offensive and defensive action, if one is to indulge a reasonable hope of victory over such an antagonist. It is most unfortunate that so few of our English or American statesmen and so relatively few of the military leaders of England and of America have, during the past decades, made any serious investigation of or given any careful consideration to the science of modern warfare as it has been developing in Prussia since the close of the Napoleonic era, and particularly in the German Empire since the Franco-Prussian War. Self-satisfied, absolutely convinced of the superiority of their own systems, these statesmen have, to a large degree, refused to examine the German plan of organization; and, indeed, they have seemed to have deliberately closed their ears to the repeated warnings of those who had with painstaking care studied the German institutions. Our own country, even yet self-deceived, blinding herself to the fearful experiences of England as she has been forced to learn the hard truth by frightful and tragic lessons, is still clinging to the ancient Napoleonic formulæ of war. A prominent English authority, writing some time since of Germany and of modern warfare, said:

> Military organization has become a science, studied both by statesmen and soldiers. The lessons of history have not been neglected. Previous to 1870 in one Kingdom only was it recognized that intellect and education play a more important part in war than stamina and courage. Taught by the disasters of 1806, Prussia set herself to discover the surest means of escaping humiliation in the future. The nature of war was analyzed until the secrets of success and failure were laid bare, and on these investigations a system of organization and of training was built up which not only from a military but from a political and even an economical point of view is the most striking product of the nineteenth century. The popular idea that war is a mere matter of brute force, redeemed only by valor and discipline, is responsible for greater evil than the complacency of the amateur.

I read the following from the Washington Times of April 1, 1918:

> There is as much professionalism in the fighting of war as in prize-fighting. The following statements by an American general, West Point graduate, help us to understand the task that Germany puts before this country and the allies.
>
> The Germans alone know about this kind of war and have prepared for it.
> West Point neither taught nor knew anything like it except for observation and recent study. It is as new to the veteran American or English officer as to the 19-year-old recruits.

However great may have been our past devotion to rampant individualism and the system of the "laissez faire," we must now arouse the Nation to the realization that we can successfully combat system only with system and organization only with better organization, and that against a socialized and militarized monarchy we must place such a militarized and unified democracy as will be the unconquerable, invincible incarnation of the cooperative spirit in governmental form.

I repeat that I am not a socialist, for I stand squarely in opposition to Government ownership, not because a system of Government ownership is in itself vicious but because such a system would prove in practice to be not only vicious but, I believe, absolutely destructive to our institutions in the absence of that highly developed social sense which in America has, most notably during recent years, been so insufficiently developed. It is but little short of madness for a government to undertake to carry on vast productive enterprises which require a high degree of cooperative effort before there has been developed the true cooperative spirit, and so it is also perilous for this Nation to continue in this war unless we are prepared now to formulate a national policy the tendency of which will be to subdue the individualistic and to awaken and employ the collectivistic motives.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], in a most able, informing address, and one well worthy of the distinguished abilities which have made him so useful a Member of this body, has most clearly and comprehensively presented many of the phases of this problem. He has demonstrated by a startling array of facts the most serious conditions which now exist in this country as a result, I contend, of our obstinate refusal to adopt those methods of organization which are in harmony with the principles of the modern science of war. It is my personal judgment that the most severe indictment which he drew should have been directed against the legislative department of our Government upon which rests the responsibility for the creation of these conditions.

The masses of the American people were not desirous of having our country drawn into this war, but when on the 2d day of April, 1917, the President of the United States, presumably in possession of facts unknown to the American people and to their Representatives in Congress, advised the declaration of war, the Representatives of the people in both branches of the Congress acquiesced in the judgment of the President, then so recently chosen by the people to direct our national policies in a great world crisis, and gradually there began to be evidenced in all parts of the Republic a spirit of patriotism, of devotion, and of a desire for helpful cooperation, exalting the souls of our people with a high and holy sense of service. It was as though Divinity, while the multitudes were reverently waiting, had profoundly moved and troubled the deep pools of our better natures for a rebaptism of the Republic to a new wholeness, for a healing of whatever infirmities may have insidiously developed within the Nation during the long years of softening, weakening, luxury, prosperity, and peace. Then by a series of most grievous mistakes, which I shall not attempt here to recapitulate, an appeal was permitted to be made to the baser motives of our people and a greed and lust for profit began on every hand to check the rising tides of patriotism.

To-day our condition, as it must appear to any man who will study it critically and impartially, is most alarming. Our capital and labor are not yet scientifically adjusted and applied to the multitudinous parts of this stupendous task of waging war, while, persisting in our determination to ignore the essentially social nature of war, we are attempting to bring about such proper adjustment by frantic appeals to the individualistic motive, by the competitive rather than by the cooperative method. War being so highly socialized an undertaking, a prevision, based upon readily available information, should have warned us of what a most unfortunate experience has now informed us, that, since the system of competitive bidding must of necessity make an appeal to the antisocial and profiteering rather than to the social, patriotic motives, it must, therefore, sooner or later make for disintegration and inefficiency instead of for that integration and cooperation so indispensable for effective and masterful national action. In the labor market the method of competitive bidding has enormously increased the nominal wage, and the result of this has been to subject the Nation's resources, even at this early stage of the war, to a most severe and serious strain, while, like all irrational measures, it tends to defeat its own ends, because the real wage can be increased but little ultimately, owing to the fact that certain essential industries which produce the necessities of life, particularly agriculture, transportation, and mining, are not able to successfully compete in the bidding in the open labor market, either because of reasons inherent in the natures of these industries or because of price-fixing regulations under enacted statutes, and hence production in these lines of endeavor is relatively curtailed.

The excessive cost of the governmental undertakings, with the consequent currency inflation, together with an underproduction of the necessities of life, tends to decrease the real wage of all workers, in spite of abnormally increasing nominal wages; and this process, which has now become so critically accelerated by the recent war conditions, is beginning to take on the aspects of an insurmountable obstacle to the successful prosecution of our plans, and it may well develop into a menace to the very stability of our governmental institutions. I need not burden you by marshaling the facts which furnish the fast accumulating evidences of profound industrial unrest. Discontent is increasing and must continue to increase, because men do not desire more money but more of the necessities and commodities of life. This ceaseless shifting of workingmen, this restless moving from place to place, involving a loss of efficiency beyond computation and a serious dilution of skilled labor in every field, must result in the aggravation of that underproduction of necessities which are their ultimate cause.

When American labor learns that not by hard collective bargaining, which results in the increase of the nominal wage without necessarily increasing the real wage, but through true social cooperation stimulating all the processes of production must come the solution of the living problem, then we shall have an industrial peace which will enable us to apply the full power of the Nation to our colossal task. Too much of money and too little of commodities constituted the prime immediate cause of the Russian revolution, for there the workingman could not secure bread, because the farmers at the last refused to sell their wheat in exchange for a depreciated currency. An immediate substitution of the cooperative system for the competitive and the proper application of a rational cooperative plan would very greatly increase production, as a result of which prices would fall, the process of currency inflation would be checked, nominal wages would decline, real wages would advance, and the strain upon our financial resources would be relieved because of the increased national income from this added production of wealth.

The measure which I have proposed to popularize or socialize our war efforts by placing them upon a cooperative basis has been drawn in recognition of those principles which have been so successfully applied in Europe and so incessantly talked of here, for we praise cooperation when we preach but repudiate it when we practice. By the adoption of the principles embodied in this bill we at once discard all the obsolete Napoleonic formulæ which deal with war as a problem, the sole factors of which are the armed forces, ammunition, artillery, good generalship, and a rapid series of brilliant military maneuvers by which decisive victories are to be obtained. We reject the now absolutely absurd and impossible distinctions between military and nonmilitary activities and we deal with war as a large problem in social mechanics and dynamics. We approach it with a proper conception of it as a battle between social mechanisms, a contest of industrial endurance, a prolonged remorseless conflict between national elaborative and productive capacities. We treat every necessary process of production and transportation as an essential factor in the military operation. We squarely face the fact that the result will not be determined by the relative strength of armies but by the relative number of units of mechanical destructive power which can be applied. We change the Nation into a mighty rapid-fire machine or engine of war, in which mechanism each man has his respective place, a mechanism the barrel and release of which are to be made up of our troops in the field, while the huge magazine is to be made up of our great reserve of human power constantly transmuting itself through incessant and prodigious labor into destructive mechanical agencies. To be certain of a victory in this war—and we must be certain of victory—we must have a more scientifically constructed, a more economically operated, and a higher-powered machine of war than have the Germans, and we must run it at a more furious speed. When we adopt the principles of this bill we substitute for chance, caprice, and uncertainty a system, a science, which will enable us to meet every emergency in a masterful manner and face every adversity with the calm assurance of our ultimate victory. Can we justify ourselves when the fate of all future civilization hangs in the balance if we neglect to take every precaution? Can we longer ignore the accumulating evidence which indicates a possible breakdown in the near future of all of our national machinery of production? Can we longer close our eyes to the fact that a lack of the proper adjustment and application of labor has already to a dangerous degree curtailed food, ship, munition, and war-plane construction? Shall the safety of our armed forces be jeopardized by a failure to provide here at home against every possible contingency? Shall we continue to send our boys to Europe without that organization which will assure them that a united Nation will supply them with every possible protection? Shall we commit the ages-old folly of placing troops on the position while not controlling all of the factors necessary for the keeping open of the lines of communication?

It is not necessary for me, in view of the startling facts presented by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], and other facts, with which you are all familiar, to detain you with an extended analysis of the most serious labor situation which has developed, I contend, not because of any lack of patriotism among our workers, but because these men have not been properly informed as to the great dangers and perils which now confront our Nation; this lamentable lack of information being due to a most unwise censorship of the press and the short-sighted policy of branding as a friend of the Kaiser any man who, because of his deep love for his own country, raises his voice in warning.

I introduce into the RECORD a portion of an editorial upon the labor situation which appeared in the Washington Post of Thursday, March 14, 1918, which gives an excellent summary of the conditions:

[From the Washington Post, Thursday, Mar. 14, 1918.]

LABOR'S CAUSE.

Amazing revelations respecting the labor situation in this country are contained in a report issued by the National Industrial Conference Board. It shows that during the six months' period from April 6 to October 6, 1917, there were strikes in 2,521 establishments, that a total of 283,402 men were idle, and that 6,285,519 days of production were lost thereby.

What influence this great waste had upon war preparations is, of course, problematical; but it is apparent that it must have been considerable. The delays caused in the production of munitions, arms, clothing, food, and all the variety of necessities of war must, in the aggregate, be responsible for weeks and perhaps months of postponement of the full participation by the United States in the war. And since each day's delay to America in reaching its full strength and exerting it against the enemy means the loss of lives, the suffering of millions who are bearing the direct burdens of the war, and the expenditure of additional millions of treasure, it is not difficult to trace the baneful effect of these labor disputes.

Perhaps the most instructive lessons to be learned from these startling figures will come by studying the causes of the strikes, as given by this board after investigating practically all of the cases and soliciting the opinions of labor commissioners and mediators. Here are the principal causes alleged:

"Increased cost of living and failure of employers in many cases to anticipate this influence.

"Widespread discontent, due to a belief that undue profits had been made by employers out of war business.

"Increased independence of the workers, due in part to a labor shortage and in part to a feeling that the situation constituted labor's opportunity for forcing union recognition or closed-shop conditions.

"Inequality between wages paid in plants engaged on private work and Government or private plants engaged on war work.

"The unsettling influence of the 'cost-plus-profit' feature of many war contracts.

"The Federal administration's virtual indorsement of the eight-hour workday."

Assuming that these are the real causes back of the labor disturbances, it is apparent that both employers and employees are to blame for the disputes which resulted in the loss of 6,285,519 days of production in six months. Both obviously have failed to measure up to their full responsibilities in this emergency.

Industry has profited tremendously through the war; that can not be denied. In this financial prosperity labor is fairly entitled to share, and where employers refuse to pay wages commensurate with their earnings they are dealing unjustly. Not only justice but the ever-increasing cost of living furnishes the basis for the workingman's claim to more pay.

But it must be a serious situation, indeed, that justifies a strike involving a cessation of production in this emergency. In nearly every case, if not all, labor can consistently submit its claims to arbitration with the assurance that they will be properly considered. The pressing interests of the Nation should not be injured by an attempt to enforce demands by either employees or employers.

The Labor Planning Board, now meeting to arrange a labor program, has a great work before it.

The measure which I have offered is really a universal-service bill. It is Senate bill 3440, introduced by me on January 9, 1918, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. It embodies the same principles which I first urged upon the consideration of the Senate as an amendment to the selective-service bill, and which were later embodied in a resolution which was presented on the 10th of May last. This is a bill "to authorize the President to further mobolize the Federal forces and to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States." I shall attempt as briefly as I may to give you the substance of the bill.

This bill authorizes the President—

First. To enroll according to residence, age, physical ability, nationality, training, status, occupation, profession, and condition of employment all male citizens of the United States or male persons, not alien enemies, who have declared their intention to become citizens, whether they be at the time of such enrollment in or out of the service of the United States, between the ages of 18 and 45 years, inclusive, in the following classes according to the ages of those so to be enrolled, and for the following purposes, to wit:

(a) Those between the ages of 18 and 20 years, inclusive, and to denominate those so enrolled the "Federal Cadet Corps," and he is authorized to call members of this Federal Cadet Corps for training, military or nonmilitary, or both, or for other forms of noncombatant national service.

(b) Those between the ages of 21 and 31 years, inclusive, and to denominate those so enrolled the "Federal First Line of Defense Corps," and he is authorized to call members of this Federal First Line of Defense Corps for training, military or nonmilitary, or both, for noncombatant military service or for military service in accordance with the provision of "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, or for noncombatant national service as hereinafter provided.

(c) Those between the ages of 32 and 36 years, inclusive, and to denominate those so enrolled the "Federal Second Line of Defense Corps," and he is authorized to call members of this Second Line of Defense Corps for training, military or nonmilitary, or both, or for other forms of noncombatant national service as hereinafter provided; and

(d) The President is authorized to enroll all such citizens or male persons, not alien enemies, between the ages of 37 and 45 years, inclusive, and to denominate those so enrolled the "Federal Reserve Corps," and he is authorized to call members from this Federal Reserve Corps for training, military or nonmilitary, or both, or for other forms of noncombatant national service, as hereinafter provided: Provided, however, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish a continuing enrollment in the Federal Cadet Corps, to include those who may from time to time attain the age of 18 years: Provided further, That all persons who may be enrolled as heretofore provided in any of such corps shall, at and by the attainment of a higher age, be automatically transferred to the appropriate corps for that particular age.

Third. And in addition to the classification as heretofore provided in accordance with the ages of those to be enrolled, the President is authorized to establish a further classification, based upon the qualification, training, or occupation, or previous occupation, of men from the ages of 18 to 45, inclusive, for the purpose of determination of the man power of the Nation, for the more effective mobilization of the men of the Nation for service of the United States, and in particular for those operations which are directly and immediately necessary for the successful prosecution of the war, such as: (a) Combatant military service, (b) noncombatant military service, (c) agricultural and food-production service, (d) manufacturing of iron and steel service, (e) Army and munition transportation-shipbuilding service, (f) Army and munition transportation-navigation service, (g) transportation-railway and railway-equipment building service, (h) railway-operation service, (i) fuel-production service, (j) metal-working and mining service, (k) medical service, and such other activities and services as may be deemed essential or desirable for the successful prosecution of the war, and that the President be, and he is hereby, further authorized to assign those so classified to corps to be formed, mobilized, and designated for the performance of these respective services.

Fourth. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to call, for military or combatant or noncombatant national service, as heretofore provided, any or all of those so enrolled in classes or corps in the manner and for the purposes heretofore specified: Provided, That the individuals, classes, or corps may be called at such times and in such numbers and may be designated for such of the aforesaid purposes or services as may be deemed necessary or expedient for the prosecution of the war: Provided further, That every male person shall, after being designated for a particular corps or service, and after taking the oath of allegiance, be deemed to be in the service of the United States and to be entitled to wear the insignia of his corps, class, service, or rank until dismissed or discharged: And provided further, That those thus designated for national service may receive their pay or emoluments in whole or in part either (a) from the United States, (b) from the employer, (c) or from personal earning as may be determined.

Fifth. The President is also authorized to place in a special classification all those out of employment, with a view to the assistance of such, by means of the Federal Employment Bureau or otherwise, to some suitable form of national service.

The President is further authorized to appoint to commissions for offices of command over or in any of such corps to be thus formed for national service expert men technically trained and preeminently fitted for and actively engaged in the particular line of activity to which the particular corps shall be assigned and to name certain of such commissioned officers of the highest rank in or over such national corps to serve upon the national service staff, which, together with the military staff, shall, under the President, constitute the war staff or council of the United States for the formulation and execution of plans for the most energetic and systematic conduct of the war: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed, without special designation or special direction by the President by proclamation or otherwise, as affecting the status of any member of the present forces of the United States: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall prevent the utilization for Federal service of those who may offer voluntary service as privates or as commissioned officers who may be of ages greater than 45 years.

The President is further authorized to make recommendations to Congress for the establishment of orders of merit or recognition of unusual, special fidelity, capacity, or valor in national service on the part of privates or officers in the Federal corps thus to be created.

Of course, the plan of registration and classification which I have in this measure proposed is not in any sense complete, for under the ideal system, which must in time be adopted as a permanent national policy, those of all ages and both sexes will be enrolled and proper records of every inhabitant will be made and preserved. I say with perfect confidence that such a complete enrollment, with the keeping of continuous individual records in a systematic manner, must become a permanent national policy for the reason that progressive and rationally organized government in so large a Nation as ours can not in the absence of such a system, by any possibility, be secured. We have already recognized this fact in that we have costly but on the whole unsatisfactory, unscientific methods of registration at the present time. We record the name of the immigrant coming into the country, and he is subjected to certain examinations, of which, I believe, some sort of a record is preserved. Births are now almost universally recorded. The name of the individual is registered, generally, when he takes a contagious disease; when he enters school, at every advancing grade of school; when he marries, enters the public service, or dies; for election and taxation purposes, and now, also, within certain limitations, for his liability for Federal military service. We have also a vast complicated and ineffective periodic registration and one not suitable for securing results in the way of scientific social organization, in the form of our national census. No extended discussion is necessary to convince any thoughtful man that such a periodic census is far less satisfactory in every way, and perhaps not less costly, if we consider how it must be constantly supplemented by the other forms of registration to which I have alluded, than the continuing census or enrollment by which it must sooner or later be superseded.

The various methods of organization for war which have been proposed for our consideration deal largely with the organization and reorganization of the various administrative departments here in Washington, and they all, therefore, must fail to meet the critical situation. This is not a Washington war, for it must be won by our Nation's man power. No matter how perfect the organization of the administrative departments may be, we must remember that they will remain merely directory departments. They can not become power departments, and it makes little difference how perfect such directory departments may be if the power plant is not organized or if the mechanism for throwing the great machine into gear is disordered.

I can not even enumerate the most salient advantages which I believe would be secured by such legislation. Such a law would (1) reveal to the whole country the real gravity of the situation by bringing the war home to every citizen; (2) arouse the spirit of patriotism and cooperation; (3) reduce unemployment; (4) check the labor turnover; (5) limit the dilution of labor; (6) give the information and the authority for the training of reserves; (7) provide a general staff with real capacity for consultation and power for prompt and comprehensive action; (8) ameliorate most trying conditions and avert grave impending perils by increasing all lines of production. I assume that these powers would be used with discretion and in moderation to bring about gradually by scientific methods the proper adjustment of labor, without in any way causing dissatisfaction or doing violence to existing organizations.

This plan is not more radical and is designed to accomplish the same results as that adopted by England under stress in her munitions act, a convenient summary of which I ask leave to insert:

[From Bulletin of the Patriotic Education Society.]

1. The minister of munitions received power to control factories engaged principally on the manufacture of munitions.

2. It was agreed that neither capital nor labor should make a profit out of the nation's needs. The Government, having fixed wages, appreciated that it became its duty to see that the labor so dealt with should not suffer from the increased cost of living.

3. Strikes and lockouts became illegal, and arbitration became compulsory. It was agreed that any trade disputes in war industries should, for the period of the war, be submitted compulsorily to arbitration, which the Government should arrange.

4. The trade-unions agreed to waive all their practices and customs which tended to restrict either employment or output, such as the employment of only union labor and the use of only skilled persons on skilled jobs; and they promised to do their utmost to see that the agreement was carried through. They agreed also that any person, man or woman, would be allowed to do any kind of work.

In return for these important concessions the Government pledged itself to restore prewar conditions in shops after the war. The trade-unions, their leaders, and the rank and file, have abided very loyally by that agreement and act. * * * One of the lessons which has been learned in England is that the war is a war of the civil organizations—of mechanism and mechanics, of the machine shop and the factory—just as much as it is a war of the army. Organization of industry at home must be as complete and thorough as at the front. If one leaves organization at home to chance, he imperils the army. Industrial peace at home, continuity of supplies, and ever-increasing output—these things are vital if this war is to be carried through to a successful conclusion. * * * The shifting of labor from establishment to establishment, from work of great importance to work of less importance, from war work to civil work, has been checked by a system of licenses.

I can not take the time to elaborate upon this subject, although illustrations will suggest themselves to your minds. For example, the only limiting factor in the production of steel ships is the constructing labor factor, and under the present system we have no efficient, widely operating employment agencies for placing men in this work, while one yard bids against another, and the labor turnover aggravates the labor shortage. Moreover, many workers do not work over three, four, or five days each week, while they themselves would be more content if they were, as members of the forces of the United States, with all that that would imply, making full time. I need not tell you that our transportation systems have been seriously crippled by this same process of labor dilution, and it has been stated by the Eastern Department of the Railroad War Board that under war conditions labor efficiency has declined 50 per cent through the loss of experienced employees by the railroads. I ask leave to introduce into the RECORD a statement by Vice President G. L. Peck, of the Pennsylvania Railroad, bearing upon this subject:

[From the Chronicle, Oct. 27, 1917.]

LABOR DIFFICULTIES OF THE RAILROADS.

(By G. L. Peck, of the Pennsylvania Lines West, chairman of the Lake coal and ore committee of the Railroads War Board.)

There is rather an anomalous labor situation existing, for the pay rolls of the railroads show that they have about as many men at work in all departments as they had a year ago, or as many as they have ever had in busy times. It is not exactly correct, therefore, to attribute the difficulty to a "shortage of labor, but it can better be described as a "dilution" of labor—a term with which we have become familiar through the British labor reports, and which represents the very vital problem with which they have been confronted during the past three years. It means that, while the railroads have the same number of men as before, they have lost a very large proportion of their most efficient men, the substitutes having been drawn from the only remaining available supply, which of course means the substitution of inexperienced, "green" hands for men who had become skilled by years of experience in the detailed work of the very intricate machine.

It is not easy to produce statistics to show just what this means in reduced efficiency, but I should say roughly that it amounted to 50 per cent. We are preparing figures to show the periodical "turnover," or exchange of employees, and preliminary reports indicate that in many departments the entire force has been changed since the beginning of the year 1917. In one instance, with a normal force of 9,511 men, there were 6,602 men left the service during the first six months of 1917, and during that period 6,287 new men were employed, leaving a total force on July 1 of 7,701, against the normally required force of 9,511.

The problem of the preparation of our reserves of men for war by the eradication, so far as may be, of illiteracy, by special training courses to provide experts, such as laboratory and other technicians, and by general military training without disturbing the processes of production, presses upon us. The problem of the reconstruction of men returning from the war and of finding for them suitable employment is also here. This reconstruction work by vocational training should be started at once in the base hospitals. As soon as a man is sufficiently convalescent manual, physical, and mental training should be inaugurated under the direction of skilled surgeons, neurologists, and pedagogical experts, and no man should be discharged from the Army until we have, by the utilization of systematic registration, established such employment agencies as will be effective in placing him in suitable and agreeable work. Recently I visited a base hospital where I saw many soldiers returned from France in need of such reconstructive training. I saw men who had been wounded, scalded, frozen, men tubercular, and men paralytic, now in need of further treatment along this line of reconstruction. In this hospital the work has already been commenced through the splendid generosity of a patriotic Maryland man, who is devoting his time and his fortune to the cause of this war, but such a vast undertaking as this will be when thousands are returning can not and should not be carried on by private charity.

I have attempted to present this subject of the necessity for a better national organization in such a way as to lead you from the conception of the bill which I proposed as a measure merely for the conscription of labor. This is not at all a conscription measure if the word "conscription" is employed in its ordinary sense, for it provides for universal service and that form of organization which has now almost entirely supplanted the earlier methods of conscription.

In a democracy, moreover, where sovereignty is vested in the people the term "conscription" takes on a totally new meaning. It is no longer, as in the olden days, a compulsory service by a citizen to the autocratic ruler waging war to promote personal ambitions or to further imperialistic aims. It becomes rather a self-enrollment, an organization of the people by the people for the benefit of each, for mutual protection, and for the common weal.

This bill was drawn upon the theory that in this hour of national trial, or peril, of rare opportunity, each man must be animated by a worthy ambition to play nobly a man's part; that each must share in the responsibility which this Republic has assumed for the welfare of the world; that each, as he participates, would serve his country better if enrolled as one of her defenders, and that, no matter how humble his labors, they would take on new dignity and worth because of his country's recognition of the service. I would bespeak your support for no measure which by whip and leaded thong would scourge an American citizen like an unwilling quarry slave to an unwelcome or a hated task. I would rather, by proper legislation, open a golden door of priceless privilege through which each and every citizen of this Republic might enter into the courts of that new temple of a more fully realized, more highly organized, cooperative democracy, where, in a new communion of service all the men of the Nation, in army and in industry, would do valiant battle side by side to usher in a great new epoch in the affairs of men.

Conscription implies compulsion, but compulsion may promote true freedom. Liberty is limited by license and rampant individualism, which resents all restrictions, of necessity enslaves. Thus an absolute freedom of choice may place a man in everlasting bonds of ignorance while compulsion to education liberates the mind, and through a universal liberation of minds there become incorporate in governmental form democracy and highest liberty. This bill is drawn upon the assumption that who in time of war best serves his country serves himself best.

The more advanced forms of national organization involve a higher sense of duty on the part of the citizen to the State and on the part of the State to the citizen. It has been said that "federation is the condition which precedes unity." We have challenged a mighty adversary and, for our own preservation we must now quickly pass from the loose and cartilaginous stage of careless youth into the well-knit and tougher unity of maturity, with all its augmented feelings of mutual responsibility. Citizens must be loyal, but the State dare not be either forgetful or neglectful. The dutiful service now required of the citizen demands the immediate fulfillment, so far as may be, of those imperative duties which our Nation has for so long been lamentably failing to perform.

The added speed and load of war has put tremendous strain upon the machinery of our Government and grave administrative defects, long since observed by the more expert, now stand forth revealed in startling clarity to all. But, you may say, these are, of course, only minor administrative failures. I reply that no governmental failure is ever trivial, for each seems to be inevitably followed by a long grizzly train of human ill and agony and destruction beyond all computation. Our failure to properly apply the principles of our democracy to all the complexities of modern social conditions, to attain the higher degree of administrative efficiency, now so indispensable, has filled unspeakable almshouses and prisons, partially pauperized nearly three millions of our people, and consigned millions more to hopeless illiteracy, while it has placed in countless potter's fields and unknown cemeteries the graves of those who have been mercilessly slaughtered through the neglect of Government.

In this most imperfect attempt to discuss so vast a subject I fear that I may have presented what may seem to you a mere collection of trite and useless generalities, and I would, therefore, if time permitted, take up in fuller detail a consideration of some of the almost inconceivably frightful consequences of past administrative neglect. I would in doing this desire to discuss the subjects of public education; unnecessary unemployment; the problem of public health; of poverty and high living costs in this land capable of supporting in ease and luxury a half a billion people; the untold hardships which have been inflicted by our failure to grasp the absolute need for accident, unemployment, ill health, and other forms of insurance; and also the great cooperative movements now in progress within the various countries of the world.

My good friends who are so eager for the Government ownership and operation of all the instrumentalities of production, who praise the vastly superior administrative powers of political appointees, would do well to carefully consider and investigate the failure of Government in these fields, more particularly in that of public education in this Republic. I venture to make the suggestion that public education must precede public ownership, and until we secure the benefits and blessings of the first, I, for one, shall pray for the deliverance of our country from the last.

Free government is the highest social product of liberated minds. True democracy can not exist without an absolute equality of educational opportunity. Except in a few States our system of education is obsolete, incomplete, and, in its higher departments, almost wholly undemocratic. Where we should have a universal, compulsory, scientific system of democratic education and training, extending from the kindergarten to the highest professional school and all departments available to every individual according to his intellectual powers, we really have at present no system worthy of the name.

I need not discuss those aristocratic schools to which rich men send their sons to be trained, if you please, in the gentle art of being gentlemen, but, without burdening you with statistics I shall advert to the subject of our public schools.

Our system of public education as supported by the States rests upon the assumption that in a democracy every citizen should be informed, enlightened, physically and mentally developed, cultivated in civic virtue, and fitted for some specific service in the community, and upon this assumption sums unparalleled in any age, or in any nation, have been devoted to the education of our youth.

We have as States an investment in our school plants of nearly one billion of dollars and we expend for their support approximately a half a billion dollars each year. Yet to the shame of this Republic it must be said that out of the 25,000,000 of children of school age in this country, according to the last census, only 20,000,000 are enrolled, and of these only 14,000,000, 56 per cent, actually attend school, and these only average 160 days' attendance in the year for the whole country, while in 42 States the average school year is less than 100 days. Is it strange that, under these circumstances, we should have this shocking illiteracy, to which attention has but recently been called by the Secretary of the Interior, Franklin K. Lane, which is hampering our military preparations and is the subject of our debate to-day in this Chamber? While it is true, as has been said, that we had in 1910 only five and one-half millions of persons above 10 years of age who could neither read nor write their names, these figures do not represent the true condition, for many times this number are not properly fitted for useful citizenship or service in this hour of national necessity because of the lack of the proper kind of physical and mental training. We need greater thoroughness in all our methods. There should be more of the technical, industrial, and vocational training of our youth as a means for the upbuilding of a sounder and larger structure of national prosperity. Our public schoolhouses should be democratic centers for the illumination of the minds of youth and adult, social as well as intellectual centers. Our public schools should be good enough for any youth of our land and none too good for all. Classification and separation should be made when advisable without that discrimination against any class which works injustice, breeds illiteracy and incompetence, and is incompatible with our democratic ideals. Attendance should be universally compulsory, and all the various State systems should be standardized.

I can not at this time enter upon a more extended discussion of the problem of unemployment which, even now, in the face of an apparent shortage of labor, is a most serious one. War by its marked disturbance of the industrial equilibrium creates at its beginning, and, of course, more particularly at its close, a vast amount of unnecessary unemployment which can be met only by scientifically organized and efficiently conducted State and Federal employment agencies.

I wish that I might dwell upon the problems of the proper forms of social insurance which, in my judgment, have a direct relation to this large problem of applying our labor cooperatively to this task of war. We have recognized this in our war-risk insurance legislation which, while not commending itself in some of its provisions to my judgment, was nevertheless the first step toward some consideration of this question.

The mining of coal, the building of ships, the transportation of military supplies must all be considered military operations according to the new formulæ of war. The question at once arises whether those who may be killed or maimed in these industries during the war shall be assured, under some adequate system, some compensation for the sacrifices which they shall thus make in the defense of their country. I have always contended, sometimes in the face of strong opposition, that these problems of public education, of unemployment, of social insurance, and of the public health must ultimately be dealt with as large national problems, and that a neglect of them would sooner or later bring us face to face with a grave national emergency, an emergency which is now upon us as we confront enemies, who are most dangerous because, as I have before noted, they have long realized that "intellect and education" play a larger part in war than "stamina and courage."

It may be that there are left some men in public life who will continue to maintain that the problem of public health and vitality is a purely local one, even in view of the fact that at a time of national peril so many of our youth have been found to be diseased, underdeveloped, or otherwise physically unfit. It is perhaps an unfortunate fact that disease germs have not generally profited by courses in constitutional law, and hence do not recognize the boundaries of States and all the nice distinctions of State and Federal sovereignty.

We can not as a Nation continue longer inactive in the face of the unfitness of so many of our youth, of the further fact that purely preventable diseases are taking an annual toll of much more than a billion and a half of dollars in money loss alone, and, what is more and worse, unnumbered lives and an immeasurable sum of human suffering and bereavement. Typhoid fever alone, a horrible disease, protean in form, insidiously destructive, resourceful to both kill and maim, a water-borne disease, entirely preventable, caused largely by the fact that we force the people of one community to imbibe the filth and excretions poured into our interstate streams by communities above, collects an annual toll of more than $350,000,000 and takes the lives of many victims. This pollution of our streams, with our increasing population, becomes a constantly growing menace. Tuberculosis, likewise preventable, a disease which flourishes under the insanitary conditions where population presses, probably costs us alone a billion dollars a year. One-half a million of men are maimed each year in our industries and one-half of these accidents might easily be avoided. Three million people are sick in bed all the time in the United States, and about one-half of them are ill with preventable diseases. At least 2,000,000 of our citizens are suffering from a terrible disease which is now spreading with frightful rapidity because of war conditions. Facts and figures might be multiplied. We can not calculate the enormous reduction in incompetency, criminality, vice, disability, and poverty which would result from properly organized and conducted departments of public health, education, employment, and insurance.

I have detained you far too long, but I have desired to mention these subjects to indicate that I conceive this problem of a better national organization to be an intensely practical one.

I would not have you think that the plan which I have proposed in this bill is novel, untried, theoretical, or revolutionary. History proves conclusively that national integration and social consolidation constitute the normal reaction and the proper protective response to the compressive forces of war.

I wish that I might also impress upon you my deep conviction that should we adopt some such plan of national organization we would at once demonstrate both to our allies and to our enemies that we also know the game of modern war. We would serve notice by such action upon the German Empire that we have a clear comprehension of the "nation in arms" and that we, a free people, propose to be prepared to meet and to conquer it. To do this would, in my judgment, mean the conservation of the lives of many thousands of our soldiers and the winning of an easier and an earlier victory.

It is now for us to make and keep the American democracy worthy of all this sacrifice for its preservation, a democracy whose transcendent excellence must arouse the admiration and the emulation of all other peoples.

We must think greatly and greatly act. We must think not longer in terms local, but nationally, looking ever to our more complete national unification and development, to the turning of all of our vast potentialities into actual power. We must moreover learn to think in terms international, looking to the effective and extended use of that power for world advancement.

I wish that I might feel that I have made clear my views as to what this war should mean to our country. We must not fail at any point, and we shall fail in a large part, if not in all, if through the trials of war our democracy does not become so ordinated and integrated that each last citizen shall through all the future be given opportunity to be truly and in the highest sense liberated.

The measure which I have proposed is designed to furnish the machinery of organization by which America shall learn for the first time the full meaning of the joy which springs from vast cooperative effort in a great and righteous cause, by which each man may be extended the privilege of doing his part in this the mightiest enterprise of time. I believe that when we adopt the principles embodied in this bill and offer to each man his opportunity there will be a response which will reveal this Republic in all her magnificence, rising to the full measure of her responsibilities.

In words spoken by Vice President MARSHALL:

> In the hour of war there can be only one shrine for all men who are really patriotic, and that shrine embraces a vision of the God of the Republic. Let men divest themselves of their political garb and personal trappings. Let them, as Moses at the burning bush, come unshodden. Let them cry out to the Republic, "What wilt thou have me to do?"

Mr. President, the Germans are neither materialists nor atheists. They are idealists and deists. They worship the world god of Hegel and of history, the mighty god of blood and battle, but they have become forgetful of the God of the beatitudes and of the second golden commandment. Him, whose almighty arm has swept into the rubbish heaps of time the empires of the past which refused obedience to these laws, we must hear first.

Let us so order our Government that not mere legal but social justice, not the cold word but the veritable and vital spirit of our institutions may be fulfilled; and let us make our country an invincible avenger of these great wrongs, forgetting not the God of battles who was with our fathers, and mindful ever that it can not be His will that any nation shall with impunity stretch forth a profane and unclean hand to defile or despoil the Ark of that Sacred Covenant made with the fathers, when upon a bleak, a barren, and an inhospitable shore they knelt down and dedicated this new land to liberty, to justice, and to Him.

REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

During Mr. FRANCE's speech,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WATSON in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 3771.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will inquire of the Senator from Maryland how long he expects to occupy the floor.

Mr. FRANCE. I will say to the Senator that I dislike to detain the Senate, but on last Friday I gave notice that to-day at the close of the morning business I would address the Senate on this subject. I fear that it is going to take me until nearly 3 o'clock.

Mr. NELSON. I suggest to the Senator from Maryland that he has the floor and he can continue his speech on the bill before the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. There is no disposition to cut off the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly not. There is no disposition to cut off the Senator in his speech. I merely wished to know how long he expected to take.

Mr. FRANCE. I hope to finish before 3 o'clock, because I dislike to delay the Senate unnecessarily, and I wish to say that the observations which I have made bear quite directly upon the bill which the Senator has in charge.

Mr. OVERMAN. I appreciate all that, and I did not intend to cut off the Senator, but merely wished to know how long he would take, as I desire to follow him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. FRANCE's speech,

Mr. OVERMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. KIRBY. Will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARDING in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

Mr. KIRBY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Baird	Jones, Wash.	Owen	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Kellogg	Page	Smoot
Calder	Kenyon	Penrose	Sterling
Chamberlain	King	Phelan	Stone
Culberson	Kirby	Pittman	Sutherland
Cummins	Knox	Ransdell	Thomas
Fall	McCumber	Reed	Thompson
Fletcher	McKellar	Robinson	Tillman
France	McLean	Saulsbury	Townsend
Frelinghuysen	Martin	Shafroth	Trammell
Hale	Myers	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Harding	Nelson	Sherman	Warren
Hardwick	New	Simmons	Watson
Henderson	Norris	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Smith, Ga.	Wolcott

Mr. PITTMAN. I wish to announce the absence of the following Senators, who are in attendance upon a hearing in the Committee on Indian Affairs: The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST].

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce the necessary absence from the Chamber of the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the bill which is now before the Senate has not yet been read in this body, and I ask that it now be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the national security and defense, for the successful prosecution of the war, for the support and maintenance of the Army and Navy, for the better utilization of resources and industries, and for the more effective exercise and more efficient administration by the President of his powers as Commander in Chief of the land and naval forces the President is hereby authorized and empowered to make such redistribution of functions among executive agencies as he may deem necessary, including any functions, duties, and powers hitherto by law conferred upon any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer, in such manner as in his judgment shall seem best fitted to carry out the purposes of this act, and to this end is authorized to make such regulations and to issue such orders as he may deem necessary: Provided, That this act shall remain in force during the continuance of the present war and for one year after the termination of the war by the proclamation of the treaty of peace, or at such earlier time during the said year as the President may designate: Provided further, That the termination of this act shall not affect any act done or any right or obligation accruing or accrued pursuant to this act and during the time that this act is in force.

SEC. 2. That in carrying out the purposes of this act the President is authorized, in such manner as he may deem most appropriate, to coordinate or consolidate any executive commissions, bureaus, agencies, offices, or officers, to transfer any duties or powers from one existing department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer to another, to transfer the personnel thereof or any part of it either by detail or assignment, together with the whole or any part of the records and public property belonging thereto, and to employ by Executive order any additional agency or agencies and to vest therein the performance of such functions as he may deem appropriate.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, any moneys heretofore and hereafter appropriated for the use of any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer shall be available for the purposes for which it was appropriated under the direction of such other agency as may be directed by the President hereunder to perform and execute said function.

SEC. 4. That during the time this act is in force all restrictions in any existing law creating any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer, or defining the duties thereof, shall be deemed to be suspended to the extent that they may be inconsistent with the exercise of the authority herein conferred.

Mr. OVERMAN addressed the Senate. After having spoken, with interruptions, for about two hours, he yielded the floor for the day.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

Mr. REED. I understood from the Senator's remarks that he would not be able to conclude this evening. I apprehend that he would not be averse to taking an adjournment at this time. He has spoken now at some length, and I wanted to ask the Senator if it would be against his desire if I should make a motion to adjourn?

Mr. OVERMAN. I shall be glad if the Senator will do so, because I am a little fatigued and I can conclude in the morning in about 20 minutes.

Mr. REED. I move that the Senate adjourn until 1 o'clock to-morrow. There are some important committee meetings, and I think we ought to have the time to attend to our committee work, if that is not objectionable.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like, if the Senator pleases, to get consideration for our bill which was reported this morning. If we can meet at 12 o'clock——

Mr. REED. Meeting at 1 o'clock will not shorten the morning hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, before the motion is put, I wish to say to the Senator from North Carolina that the bill that we had up during the morning hour to-day went over to accommodate the Senator from New Hampshire. I think it is now practically in shape where there will be no further opposition to it. One or two amendments will be accepted, and I am very anxious that the consideration of that bill be finished.

Mr. REED. This motion will not shorten the morning hour.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will make the morning hour last until 3 o'clock.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is another bill that the Senator from North Carolina wishes to get up during the morning hour also. I think we can finish ours in 10 minutes.

Mr. OVERMAN. I always dislike to displace a bill that has already had an argument, and I am perfectly willing to let the Senator take a vote on it, although when the hour of 3 o'clock arrives I shall want to proceed with this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, I do not mean to hold on when the unfinished business is reached. I was referring to the bill the Senator reported to-day, that he said he wanted to get up in the morning hour.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do want to get it up in the morning hour.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I said that we wanted to finish the bill we had partly heard during the morning hour before this other bill is taken up in the morning hour. Of course, if we have not finished its consideration by the time the morning hour is concluded, I should desire to have the bill laid aside, because I think we ought to go right on with this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say to the Senator from Georgia that I fully agree with him; but I am going to make a motion, if the Chair will recognize me, to take up the bill to which I refer the first thing in the morning hour, because the Senator realizes that that bill, of all bills, must be passed at once.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think so, Mr. President. I think the Senator ought to allow the bill upon which we have spent two mornings, and which is practically finished, to be finished before we take up another bill in the morning hour.

Mr. OVERMAN. I can not consent that the bill I reported this morning shall not be taken up until some other one is disposed of. That bill must be passed within the next day or two. The department has urged it, and therefore it ought to come before anything else. I am satisfied that there will be no time wasted. I do not think there will be any argument about it. The bill has been unanimously reported from the committee. The Senator was not there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] that the Senate adjourn until 1 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 3, 1918, at 1 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 2, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, Source of every high and noble impulse, quicken our minds and hearts with Thy Spirit, that we may go forward in the new day to larger conquests and greater victories for ourselves as individuals and for our Republic; that the world may be better that we have thought and acted; and all praise be Thine, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I submit herewith a conference report upon the bill (H. R. 9352) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

The conference report (No. 451) is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9352) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed, strike out all after the word "Senate" in line 10 of the engrossed bill down to and including "year" in line 11 of said bill, and insert a period and the following:

"The Assistant Secretary shall be entitled to a salary of $5,000 per annum, payable monthly, and the Second Assistant Secretary and Third Assistant Secretary shall each be entitled to a salary of $4,500 per annum."

And the Senate agree to the same.

S. H. DENT, Jr.,
W. J. FIELDS,
D. R. ANTHONY, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DENT, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the bill (H. R. 11185) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report (No. 452), referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] may have the right to reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama submits the Military Academy appropriation bill, and asks unanimous consent that all points of order be considered as reserved by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BIRD RESERVATION.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I wish now to enter a reservation of all points of order to the bill (H. R. 10612) to restore to the public domain certain lands heretofore reserved for a bird reservation in Siskiyou and Modoc Counties, Cal., and Klamath County, Oreg., and for other purposes, which was introduced as a privileged bill on Saturday last by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MCLEMORE for 15 days, on account of important business.

ALIEN WOMEN.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 9504 be taken from the Speaker's table, that the Senate amendments be disagreed to, and that a conference be asked. That is the bill known as the bill to include alien women in Revised Statutes, section 4067.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman to let that go over until later in the day, as the bill does not appear to be on the Speaker's table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Young, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3874. An act providing medals for certain persons;

S. 3802. An act authorizing appropriation made for the national security and defense to be used for the purchase of real estate or the use thereof when such purpose is not specifically stated in said appropriations;

S. 3384. An act to amend the public-building act approved March 4, 1913;

S. 4138. An act to amend certain sections of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, and for other purposes;

S. 3388. An act to amend the emergency shipping funds provisions of the urgent deficiency appropriation act approved June 15, 1917, so as to empower the President and his designated agents to take over certain transportation systems for the transportation of shipyards and plant employees, and for other purposes;

S. 4102. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county commissioners of Bonner County, Idaho, to construct a bridge across the Clark Fork River in Bonner County, Idaho;

S. 4127. An act to authorize the W. M. Ritter Lumber Co., a corporation to construct bridges across the branches and tributaries of the Big Sandy River and their tributaries in the counties of Buchanan and Dickenson, in the State of Virginia; and

S. 1738. An act for the relief of the Southern States Lumber Co.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Sundry messages, in writing, from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries.

EXPORT TRADE.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I submit herewith for printing, under the rule, a conference report upon the bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes.

The conference report (No. 450) and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 8.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 5 and 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5 and 6, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and the matter inserted by said amendments strike out, in lines 1, 2, and 3, page 3, all of section 2 after the word "or," in line 1, page 3, the matter stricken out being "intentionally and unduly enhances prices within the United States of commodities of the class exported by such association," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "intentionally enhances or depresses prices within the United States of commodities of the class exported by such association, or which substantially lessens competition within the United States or otherwise restrains trade therein"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 18, page 5, strike out the words "or intentionally and unduly," and in line 20, page 5, after the word "association," insert the words "or substantially lessens competition within the United States or otherwise restrains trade therein"; and the Senate agree to the same.

E. Y. WEBB,
C. C. CARLIN,
A. J. VOLSTEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.

ATLEE POMERENE,
JOS. T. ROBINSON,
ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on:

On amendments Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, on which the House recedes, have the effect of excluding from the comprehensive definition given in the section of "export trade" the selling of the goods, wares, or merchandise for resale, as well as for consumption, within the United States of any Territory thereof.

On amendments Nos. 5 and 6, on which the House recedes with amendments, do not substantially change the act. The language substituted was agreed upon in conference as more clearly and accurately defining the things which an association formed under the provisions of this act could not do and be protected by the provisions of the act.

On amendment No. 7 is a change in language used, to make it conform to the amendments made in Nos. 6 and 7.

On amendment No. 8: The Senate here recedes, which leaves the matter involved as originally passed by the House.

E. Y. WEBB,
C. C. CARLIN,
A. J. VOLSTEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8696) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to all of the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Indian appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee for a moment. There are 92 amendments added by the Senate to the bill, some of them of the most important character, particularly amendment No. 92, providing for the withdrawal of trust funds of the Indians from the Treasury of the United States and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to deposit them in banks. I believe that as to that amendment, if it is to be agreed to in conference, opportunity should first be given to the House to take its judgment upon it before agreement is made. Then, as to the so-called McMurray claim amendment, No. 67, the Committee on Indian Affairs has reported upon that claim and has made some amendments, which removed the objectionable features of the bill that were protested against by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] at the last session, but which are not eliminated from the amendment as reported by the Senate. If the conferees should agree to the amendment in the form reported by the House committee, with those provisions stricken out, with the additional provisions at the end of the amendment, I would have no objection to it, but I think it is necessary otherwise in order to safeguard the rights of the Indians to have a vote upon it before it be agreed to. I am merely expressing my interest in that amendment. There are two other important amendments which I think the House is deeply interested in; those are the Mississippi Choctaw Indian amendment, appropriating $150,000, and the amendment appropriating $175,000 for certain Indians in Texas, both out of the Treasury. I do not think that in these times that we should launch upon that policy, and I respectfully ask the chairman as to those two items, if they are not disagreed to, to bring them back into the House for a separate vote.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] with reference to the last two amendments. They constitute a departure from the policy of the Government in the past to a certain extent, to wit, they go out and take under the wing of the Government Indians who are not now under supervision of the Government. There is some precedent for that, however, in the case of Rocky Boy's Band of Chippewas in Montana, I think it is, the Seminole Indians in Florida, and the homeless Indians in California; but each one of these questions, as I recall, was settled by the House itself and not by the conferees appointed for adjudicating differences between the two Houses of Congress.

I think certainly questions of policy ought to be settled by the House and not by any three or six men in conference. With reference to the first matter to which the gentleman calls attention, I have not examined the amendment closely enough to know just what it does provide. If it is in conformity with the rule that has been adopted in reference to the Five Civilized Tribes, it may relieve the Federal Government from paying interest on tribal funds.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will say the Five Civilized Tribes are not affected by this amendment.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The Five Civilized Tribes have a provision similar to that now by which their funds are not held in the Treasury, but placed in banks, and the bank pays interest on the funds rather than the Government paying interest on them, which relieves the Government from any obligation they may have in reference to interest. Now, what is the other?

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, in ordinary times when the Government was not so hard pressed for the use of these trust funds we might agree upon a policy of allowing funds to be withdrawn from the Treasury and deposited in National and State banks, but I question whether an amendment of that import should be agreed to in conference——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman certainly knows——

Mr. STAFFORD (continuing). Without first submitting it to the House for consideration.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman certainly knows the Federal Government does not use the trust funds of its wards for payment of governmental obligations. They are not carried in the Treasury balances.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the balances can be used, and tends to swell the Treasury funds?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No; the trust funds of the Indians are not used in the payment of any Government obligation and are not carried in the Treasury balances. They are carried separate and apart from the available funds on hand for the discharge of obligations of the Federal Government. They are so considered and carried that way on the books of the Treasury, but as to that I shall not be contentious about it if the other conferees do not. Personally I would not object to having that settled by the House now or hereafter. Now, what is the other?

Mr. STAFFORD. The McMurray claim.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. In relation to that claim, I will say to the gentleman the provision carried in this bill I consider a better provision, giving better protection to the Indians, than that reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, because this provision provides that McMurray can not go to the Court of Claims upon his suit until he has first filed a bond for any judgment that the Indians might recover against him.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am in favor of that protection.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. There is another provision carried in this claim item with reference to the cancellation of leases. In a former bill introduced a somewhat similar provision was carried, except the cancellation dated back to the time it was discovered that no available coal laid underneath the lease. The proposition contained in this bill provides that the cancellation shall not be had until 30 days after the adjudication of this claim. To be more specific, the Senate amendment to this bill provides for the future cancellation of leases found to be noncoal bearing and on which royalties are not paid, not at the same date in the past, but 30 days after the settlement of this controversy. That is not objectionable to me, but really it seems an equitable thing to do.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman recalls the bill as reported to the House struck out the provision that met the objection of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That is one of them.

Mr. STAFFORD. And another one which is not stricken out in the Senate amendment providing as to the amount to be calculated as being a fair and equitable basis,

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That provision still is in the Senate bill as it passed the Senate.

Mr. STAFFORD. But not in the bill as reported by the House committee.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I am frank to say I have never been able to see any very strong contention for the striking out of that language, and I can not see any very serious objection to its being stricken out. If the matter is going to be settled, I can not see why it should not be settled on a fair nd equitable basis.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think it is better in that particular to follow the recommendation of the House committee.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. We favor the plan reported by the House committee, but we would not want to eliminate the requirement for bond by the plaintiff in case the Indians secured a judgment.

Mr. STAFFORD. I favor that provision, as I told the gentleman in a private conversation before he brought it on the floor.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs in reference to amendment 25.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I do not remember what amendment 25 is.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is an amendment to provide for the expenditure of an unexpended appropriation which was made in the last Congress to be used for fixing up a stretch of road between the Indian school and the nearest trading point.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That is the Senate amendment——

Mr. KNUTSON. I will say to the chairman I offered an amendment, and it was ruled out on a point of order by the chairman of the committee, notwithstanding the fact that the Indian Department had recommended this expenditure.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Well, Mr. Chairman, as a Member of the House and as a House conferee, the obligation will be on the House conferees to stand for the bill as it passed the House, but just how far the conferees will go in that respect, of course, it will not be possible for me to say. If the Senate presents a just proposition that a conferee felt he could justify himself in agreeing to, I think it might be possible to agree to it, but it would have to be a just proposition, such as he could justify before the House, before we would agree to it.

Mr. KNUTSON. The department has recommended it, I will say to the chairman.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I never knew anything for the expenditure of funds out of the Treasury that the department did not recommend.

Mr. KNUTSON. Fifty per cent of this expenditure——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Is this money paid out of the tribal funds or out of the Federal Treasury?

Mr. KNUTSON. Fifty per cent of it is to be paid out of the tribal fund and 50 per cent by the counties through which the road runs.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. And not out of the Federal Treasury?

Mr. KNUTSON. No.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That is in favor of the proposition. The House has always refused to appropriate money out of the Federal Treasury for building of roads and bridges on Indian reservations.

Mr. KNUTSON. If the gentleman will assure me that he will agree to the amendment——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I certainly could not do that.

Mr. KNUTSON (continuing). I will withhold the objection.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Let the gentleman object. If the gentleman wants to object, if he wants to hold up one of the supply bills and send it back to the committee and perhaps require 8 or 10 days longer consideration of the bill simply because a conferee can not place himself on record as violating the faith of the House, then the gentleman had as well object.

Mr. GILLETT. Why for 8 or 10 days? Why can you not report it back to-morrow?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That is all right. The committee, of course, must take its time. It will do it as quickly as it can.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much to be compelled to take this course, but it seems to me it is only a small item, and that the gentleman should meet me half way on it. I do not like to object.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I have never heard before of a conferee of the House being held up by a Member of the House to get that conferee to agree to a position taken by the Senate and against a position taken by the House.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman recognizes that by objecting the gentleman will have a right to move to concur. It is very often done in order to be sure that you have a right to move to concur.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman can do that if he desires.

The SPEAKER. What the Chair wants to find out is if there is anybody objecting.

Mr. KNUTSON. I object, unless the gentleman——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I would not do that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] objects.

ALIEN WOMEN.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9504) to amend section 4067 of the Revised Statutes by extending its scope to include women, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Speaker announced the following conferees: Mr. WEBB, Mr. CARLIN, and Mr. VOLSTEAD.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. OSBORNE, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of H. R. 6102, granting an increase of pension to Sarah J. Wood, Sixty-fifth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE TO FILE MINORITY VIEWS ON H. R. 289.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to be given 15 days within which to file minority views on the bill H. R. 289. It is the bill with reference to the municipal ownership of street railways in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to file minority views on the bill H. R. 288. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GORE, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. GRONNA, and Mr. NORRIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 5351. An act providing for the disposal of certain lands in block 32 in the city of Port Angeles, State of Washington.

THIRD LIBERTY LOAN.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the bill H. R. 11123, known as the third liberty bond bill, that passed the House on Saturday, and to return to that stage in the procedure of its passage in the House immediately before I made the motion for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] asks unanimous consent to vacate all the proceedings on the bill H. R. 11123 back to where he made his motion for the previous question. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in order to——

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I make this request for the purpose of offering an amendment to section 5 of the bill. This section embraces a provision with respect to the determination of the values of the shares of stock of National banks, State banks, trust companies, and other banking institutions for the purpose of State taxation. The Committee of the Whole and the House on Saturday voted against the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DOMINICK] to strike out section 5 under the firm impression and belief, because other members of the committee and myself assured the House, that the only fair construction admissible to that section was that it exempted from State taxation only an amount of the value of the shares of stock of the bank equal to the same proportion of the value of the shares as the par amount of any bonds or other interest-bearing obligation held by the bank bears to its gross assets. In other words, the intention of the committee, and the fair and reasonable construction of that section, as the committee and myself contended on the floor, was that if a bank had $1,000,000 of assets and $100,000 of Government bonds in those assets, or 10 per cent of its assets in Government bonds, that for taxation purposes only 10 per cent could be deducted from the value of the shares of stock of the bank. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DOMINICK], the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], and other gentlemen who opposed the provision in the bill took the position that the construction was that if a bank purchased bonds equal in amount to the capital stock and surplus of that bank, then the shares of stock would escape taxation by the States altogether. And many of them opposed and voted against the provision in the bill and with the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DOMINICK] to strike out that provision, upon the assumption that that was a proper construction.

I myself would have voted with the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DOMINICK] on his motion to strike out the section, and certainly to amend the section; and if not to amend it, to strike out the section, if I had believed it was fairly reasonable to construe it in the way in which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from South Carolina and the other gentlemen construed it. I assured the House that that amendment would not bear that construction, and I am certain, but for that assurance, that many gentlemen would not have voted for the section and the provision as it now is in the bill.

On Monday morning I went down to the Treasury Department to see how it would construe the language of the provision, and, to my surprise, I was told that it would construe it to mean, and the Treasury Department intended by the language for it to mean, that if a bank invested an amount equal to its capital stock and its surplus in liberty bonds it would escape all taxation by the State. I said, "I would not favor it if I thought that was the construction, and I feel in honor bound to go back to the House and make this statement and ask the House to reconsider the bill and amend the section to carry out the intention of the committee and of the House, and make the intention of the committee and of the House so clear and so plain that it will admit of no other possible construction."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker will the gentleman yield.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would the gentleman object to having read at the Clerk's desk the reason given by the Secretary of the Treasury for urging the passage of this provision?

Mr. KITCHIN. In a moment. I will be pleased to have you do that. I called the Committee on Ways and Means together yesterday afternoon and we discussed the matter, and the committee unanimously instructed me to make this request and to propose the amendment which I shall read. It is as follows:

On pages 6 and 7 of the bill, strike out all the matter beginning on page 6, line 22, down to and including line 4, on page 7, and insert the following:

"In determining the value of the shares of any National bank, State bank, trust company, or other banking institution, for the purpose of taxation by any State or any of the possessions of the United States or any local taxing authority, there shall be deducted an amount equal to the same proportion of the value of the shares as the par amount of any bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of the United States issued during the present war owned by such bank or trust company or banking institution bears to its gross assets."

That expresses exactly what the Committee on Ways and Means thought, and what I thought, in presenting the bill, the meaning of section 5 was as it stands in the bill; and it expresses the thought and construction and intention which the House had when it voted against Mr. DOMINICK's motion to strike out.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let us suppose that the total gross assets of a given bank were $400,000 and the value of the stock is predicated upon that $400,000 of gross assets. Suppose the bank should buy $400,000 worth of liberty bonds. Then the amount of liberty bonds, the proportion of the liberty bonds in proportion to the gross assets, will be 100 per cent. In that case it would represent the total assets, and under your amendment would not the value of the shares escape taxation?

Mr. KITCHIN. Surely it would. It would no longer be a bank. It would be just a bondholder. Suppose I were worth $400,000, and only $400,000, and were now paying income and other Federal, State, and county taxes on $400,000, and that I turned those assets into liberty bonds. I would escape all taxation except the excess profits and surtaxes. The banks pay excess-profits taxes.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is no good banking institution that would invest all its gross assets in liberty bonds?

Mr. KITCHIN. No. It could not afford it.

Now, pursuing the gentleman's illustration further, suppose it had $400,000 of assets and had bought $40,000 of bonds, and suppose it had $360,000 of other assets. Then the deduction would be one-tenth.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. WINGO. I think I understand the gentleman's position on the amendment now; and, using the illustration that the gentleman used a moment ago, suppose a bank has assets of $1,000,000 and Government bonds $100,000 and capital stock $100,000. Now, the gentleman by the amendment that he offers intends this: That the $100,000 of Government bonds now represents 10 per cent of the assets. Now, in assessing the shares of stock, say that a stockholder owns $10,000 worth of stock. In the case of the bank we have given as an illustration this $10,000 par value is worth $100,000 actual value, is it not, if there are a million dollars assets and $100,000 stock?

Mr. KITCHIN. Does that make a million?

Mr. WINGO. It is ten times $100,000.

Mr. KITCHIN. I would say that a bank of that kind would have to have about fifteen or twenty million dollars of gross assets.

Mr. WINGO. I am talking about gross values.

Mr. KITCHIN. When you talk about the liabilities, you have the total assets.

Mr. WINGO. When I speak of assets, I speak of gross assets, and when I speak of values, I speak of gross values, because if the gross assets of a bank are $1,000,000, and its capital stock $100,000, then the gross value of each share is 10 to 1.

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, no. I think the gentleman has it wrong.

Mr. WINGO. Where? I would like to see.

Mr. KITCHIN. You mix up gross values and gross assets. They both mean the same.

Mr. WINGO. I am speaking of that particular stock. If the gross assets of one million is ten times as much——

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; if the surplus and capital stock are worth ten times as much, then it would be 10 to 1.

Mr. WINGO. I am using gross assets. I agree with you on that. If the gross assets of the bank are one million, that is ten times the face value of the stock, is it not?

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, no.

Mr. WINGO. Certainly, $1,000,000 is ten times $100,000.

Mr. KITCHIN. No; the par value of the stock is, of course, the face value. It may not, in fact, be worth more than 10 cents on the dollar.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. WINGO. I want to finish my question. We will assume that the face value of the capital stock is $100,000. We are taking, now, a bank that has capital stock of $100,000 at par value. I am not considering surplus or actual value of the stock. I am talking about the par value. The par value of the capital stock is $100,000. The gross assets—not the net assets, but the gross assets—of the bank are $1,000,000. In other words, the gross assets are ten times the face value of the stock. Now, under the gentleman's amendment the deduction would be one-tenth of $1,000,000, would it not, because $100,000 is one-tenth of the gross assets. Now, when a stockholder has $10,000 face value of the shares, would you deduct one-tenth of that face value or one-tenth of its gross value or one-tenth actual value?

Mr. KITCHIN. If such a case can be conceived as the gentleman puts, of the gross value of the assets making any criterion for the real value of the stock or the gross value of the stock—I can not conceive of such a case——

Mr. WINGO. Assuming that that is true.

Mr. KITCHIN. It is not possible to have such a case.

Mr. WINGO. Take a man who has $10,000 worth of the capital stock in that bank, which has $100,000 capital and $100,000 of Government bonds, and has gross assets of $1,000,000. The stockholder has $10,000 par value of shares. What is going to be the specific deduction from that man's assessable valuation?

Mr. KITCHIN. If his stock is worth $100,000 or $10,000, or $100 a share, you deduct one-tenth.

Mr. WINGO. Of the actual value?

Mr. KITCHIN. Of the actual value; yes.

Mr. WINGO. That is the point I want to get cleared up. Does the gentleman think, then, that the language in line 8 will do that?

There shall be deducted in amount—

From what? The actual value or face value? Ought it not to say "from the actual value"? If you do not, you leave room for the Treasury Department to put the interpretation——

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman is absolutely wrong about it. When it says the value of a share, it can not mean anything except the actual value.

Mr. WINGO. There is market value, there is actual value, there is par value, but the Treasury Department——

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will permit me, it is the assessed value.

Mr. WINGO. Will the Treasury Department take the actual value of shares of stock or take the par value?

Mr. KITCHIN. The Treasury Department has nothing to do with construing this provision. That is for the assessors and the courts in the gentleman's State.

Mr. WINGO. That is the reason why the Treasury Department——

Mr. KITCHIN. Wait a minute. I mentioned a while ago that the Treasury Department's construction of that provision was similar to that of the gentleman whose name I mentioned. I knew, of course, that the Treasury Department had nothing to do with construing the provision, that it would be for the courts to construe it; but the point I intended to make when I was interrupted was that the Treasury Department, through its lawyers, and gentlemen whom I mentioned who were distinguished lawyers, having taken a different view from that of the committee and of the House and of myself, that fact was convincing to me that it was admissible of two constructions, and two reasonable constructions, and we wanted this amendment inserted so that it could admit of but one construction.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion right there?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. The reason why the Treasury Department construes value to be par value, unless you say actual value or market value, is because the courts in passing upon this question have said that when you speak of the value of shares of stock you refer to the face value.

Mr. KITCHIN. The practice of the department is exactly contrary to what the gentleman says. They take the value unless it says par value.

Mr. WINGO. Probably I was mistaken.

Mr. DOMINICK. Under the terms of this amendment the value of the shares is for the purpose of taxation, so the question as to par value or book value does not come into the proposition at all.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is true; and the proof that the provision itself intended to make a difference between par value and real value is that it goes to the question of the amount of bonds held by the bank. If the bonds go to a premium, they do not consider the value, but simply the par value.

Mr. STEVENSON. If the gentleman will permit, I just want to suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina that the actual figures as they existed on the 1st of January show how this will affect things. The total resources of the banks were $40,000,000,000. The liberty bonds held by them amounted to about $1,000,000,000, or only about 2½ per cent. If that ratio continues, the average deduction would be 2½ per cent.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Which is a very small matter—about 2½ cents on the dollar of the assessed value of the stock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN]?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman will yield for a moment, I think it is not improper that a little statement be made to the House as to how a part of this came about. The gentleman will remember that while the Ways and Means Committee were considering this particular provision several of us were engaged with the Senate on a conference, and for that reason it seems that there was some difference of opinion even among the members of the committee as to the construction of this paragraph, because it had not been discussed by all the members of the committee in the committee itself. I understood—and I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] understood—this paragraph just as the Secretary of the Treasury construed it, and I think we have so understood it all the time, but we did not make known our opinion to the other members of the committee, because we were not in the committee at the time when it was discussed. It being thought necessary that these two measures should be pushed along as fast as possible, we had an unusual and peculiar situation at the time it was considered. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] does not agree to the construction of the Treasury Department, but has agreed with the chairman from the beginning and is very positive in his conclusions. I have high regard for his legal opinion and will not say that he is not right. This difference of opinion has brought about a situation in which there might possibly be a different construction put upon this section from what some Members of the House intended, and the committee does not want to leave any loophole of that kind. We want the matter so plain that the wayfaring man can not err in construing it. This amendment is offered to clear up the situation. I am not prepared to say that I favor it as an abstract proposition, for I have some doubt whether it will work equitably in all cases, but as to its general purpose I say most em——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I think the House would better understand the action of the committee if I send to the Clerk's desk and have read a portion of the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury upon which we acted.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, I want to say as a preface to this reading, which I think is proper, that the views herein expressed by the Secretary of the Treasury, which had weight with certain Members, differ from those now expressed by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not think so.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Did you get two opinions in the Treasury Department as to what the language means?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No. My point of view as a member of the committee is, and has been all along, that the Secretary of the Treasury desires that the Federal bonds held by national banks, particularly liberty bonds, should not be subject to indirect taxation by the States, and he did not, for that reason, desire the sale of these bonds to be prejudiced.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATEMENT BY SECRETARY M'ADOO.

At my suggestion Senator OWEN has introduced in the Senate a bill (S. 4137) which is intended to give relief from a form of indirect taxation by the States upon Government bonds and certificates of indebtedness. Under existing provisions of law, the States are permitted to tax the holders of stock of national banks, and thus, through indirection, the United States bonds and certificates of indebtedness held by such banks which are included as a part of the value of the stock. The States have adopted a method of increasing the value of the stock of banks holding Government bonds and certificates of indebtedness by the amount of such securities and in that way taxing these bonds and certificates held by the banks. Therefore there is what amounts to a direct taxation by the States upon the bonds and certificates of indebtedness held by the national banks, and that taxation is very burdensome and is seriously interfering with the financing of the Government's necessities. The proposed legislation provides for the deduction from the value of such stock of the amount of bonds held by the banks. The State taxation against stock of national banks can of course only be levied with the consent of the United States, since national banks themselves are governmental instrumentalities, but this consent has been given by the United States by what is now section 5219 of the Revised Statutes.

This law was passed in 1864 and was subsequently amended, and under that law the United States permitted the States to tax the stock of national banks. Otherwise, the States would not have any such power. The United States has now made its own bonds subject to its income and excess-profits taxes, but has not attempted to subject bonds of States and municipalities to like taxation. In other words, the bonds of the States and municipalities, by virtue of the action of the Government of the United States, carry far more favorable exemptions than the bonds and the certificates of indebtedness of the United States.

For instance, a bond of the city of New York to-day is exempt from State and municipal taxes and from all Federal taxation of every kind and character. Now, the bond of the United States is exempt from State and local taxation and from all Federal taxation except super taxes and excess-profits taxes. The result therefore is that the city of New York is offering to investors in the greatest investing market in the world a bond in competition with the bonds of the United States upon a far more favorable basis, both as to interest rate and as to tax exemptions.

Now, we are putting the United States at a further serious disadvantage when we permit the States to tax the bonds and the certificates of indebtedness of the United States as a part of the capital stock of national banks. It reduces the income return on the United States bonds and certificates of indebtedness where they are so taxed to such an extent that the banks can not afford to take them. These instrumentalities of the Government, the national banks, which were established for the purpose of providing money for the Government, are largely impotent through this method of State taxation to help the Government in this crisis. I may say that at the time the act of 1864 was passed, with its amendment granting the States the right to tax the capital stock of national banks, the bonds of the United States which the banks were organized especially to take were in effect not taxable by the States, because they carried the circulation privilege, and when the circulation privilege was exercised there was an outstanding liability against the bonds, and hence the States could not add the value of these bonds to the capital stock as a basis of taxation; but now our bonds do not carry a circulation privilege, and the result is that when the national banks buy them for patriotic reasons or otherwise, or when they hold these certificates of indebtedness, they can not issue currency against them, and they are immediately added to the value of the capital stock of the national banks and are taxed by the State. That is hampering the Government very much in its essential financial operations.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Do you mean they add the value of the bonds to the authorized capital stock, or to the market value of the stock?

Secretary MCADOO. To the assessed value. They include the value of the bonds in assessing the value of the stock. The Government provided they should be exempt from State taxes, but the States are doing by indirection what if attempted directly is prohibited by statute. As we go along, gentlemen, if the States are permitted to tax Government bonds when we can not tax municipal and State bonds, we will be up against a position where it will be impossible to finance the necessities of the Government; it is for that reason that I feel that it is most important that the States shall not be permitted indirectly to make nugatory the express exemptions from taxation now carried in all Government bond issues.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Now, gentlemen will observe that the Secretary said that the proposed legislation provided for deduction from the value of such stock the amount of bonds held by the banks. There was never any suggestion—I can not read any suggestion in that statement that this proposition was to exempt banks from taxation. The proposition simply was to take away from the States the power to raise revenue by indirect taxation of Government bonds. The sole object of this legislation is to make Government bonds at least as good as municipal bonds, and they would be were it not for the provisions in the act of 1864.

Now, it was never contemplated, it seems to me, that banks could relieve themselves from all taxation by simply taking an amount of Government bonds equal to the capital and surplus. It seems to me the amendment now offered by the gentleman from North Carolina carries out what the committee intended and what is fairly deducible from that language.

Mr. PHELAN. But it does not carry out what the Secretary wants?

Mr. LONGWORTH. That may be possible. I have only had read the statement of the Secretary made before the Ways and Means Committee, a statement which caused us to put in this item of legislation. I did not know at that time how the Treasury Deparment was going to construe that provision. I did not know until the chairman of the committee told me yesterday that the Treasury Department intended to construe it as he says it has.

Mr. PHELAN. I think the whole thing is stated in Secretary McAdoo's statement, on page 16, where he says "at my suggestion Senator OWEN has introduced in the Senate a bill which is intended to give relief from a form of indirect taxation by the States upon Government bonds and certificates of indebtedness." If you work the proposition out, you will find that under the amendment offered there is still indirect taxation on liberty bonds, and there would not be as made by the Secretary originally and as I explained on the floor Saturday. There would then be no indirect taxation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from North Carolina yield me two minutes?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, without going into banking details that only confuse the mind, I want to give my understanding——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina has no time to yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then I reserve the right to object.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks to be recognized for three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MCFADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I would like about two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] asks for three minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] asks for two minutes. Is there objection to these two requests? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in the plain, blunt language of a layman, this is the situation: The Federal Government does not tax State or municipal bonds. It relieves from taxation men who are employed by cities and by States. Our recent revenue law, for instance, exempts justices of the Supreme Court and lower courts of a State and municipal employees. That is a matter of comity between the Federal Government and the State government; it is also an observance of the constitutional provision. We treat the State as exempt from Federal taxation on its State bonds. That is the point. Now, the Secretary of the Treasury, mindful of the law passed in 1864 in regard to the right of States to tax bank shares, came before our committee and suggested that he was hampered in the work of selling liberty bonds because under the law of 1864 there was imposed an indirect tax upon liberty-loan bonds—these Federal bonds—due to the method of imposing taxation upon bank shares.

I hope that is clear. The Secretary's request seemed reasonable, because if we exempt State or municipal bonds from Federal taxation, the State ought in all fairness to exempt Federal bonds held within the limits of the State. That is the spirit and the law. It was a fifty-fifty proposition. I supported it because I believed that what was fair to a State as granted by the Federal Government was certainly fair to the Federal Government as coming from the State, especially in time of war. That is all there is to it. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] suggests a new method of relieving this situation, and the question is whether his method is better than that agreed upon by the House the other day. I believe his amendment preserves the lawful rights of the States and also exempts Federal bonds from State taxation.

Mr. MCFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to section 5 of the original bill, which was considered on last Saturday, which, in my judgment, contains the very thought that the Secretary of the Treasury intended to convey when he asked for this legislation, and that was absolute exemption from State taxation of all liberty bonds to the extent of the value of the assessable shares of the banks. This compromise amendment now offered by the majority leader is going to bring forth a good many queries and misunderstandings on the part of the banks. In order to determine just how to figure this law and interpret to their separate cases, practically every bank will have to consult its attorney before it can figure out its tax exemption. It seems to me that if it is a question of the sale of liberty bonds, the suggestion of the Secretary of the Treasury should be followed in full. If it is the question of a compromise, I am fearful that we are going into deep water, and it will make more disturbance among the banks than if we had not attempted to do anything for them. We might better repeal section 5 entirely than to substitute this proposed Kitchin amendment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But does not the gentleman think the construction which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] tells us here that the Treasury officials will put upon that section does not accord with the view of the gentleman, with which I agree?

Mr. McFADDEN. I think the gentleman is right. It is very evident that the Committee on Ways and Means in the consideration of this measure had an entirely different understanding than that of the Secretary of the Treasury. It is also very clear that when this same provision was considered by the Banking and Currency Committee, that they had the view of the Secretary of the Treasury, and right there I want to refer to a matter that I have heretofore called attention of the House to on one or two different occasions—one of the occasions being the reference of the War Finance Corporation bill to the Ways and Means Committee instead of the Banking and Currency Committee—and that is the reference of measures of this kind to improper committees. The Banking and Currency Committee, as has been stated here on the floor of this House, considered this bill known as section 5 of this act, and after hearing the arguments of those in favor of the provision refused to report the bill, so the Secretary presented the bill to the Ways and Means Committee, and they included it in this bill, evidently without giving much thought to the meaning of the section, as has been shown by the variance of views expressed by the members of that committee during the discussion of this subject.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the request be put now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina to vacate all proceedings on this bill back to and including the motion for the previous question?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, must not the gentleman get consent to return to section 5 in addition to the request which has already been granted?

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, no; I asked for unanimous consent for the purpose of offering the amendment which I have read.

Mr. WALSH. But the consent just given does not put this measure back to section 5.

Mr. KITCHIN. We are in the House, and not in the Committee of the Whole, and when we are in the House we can amend the bill at any portion of it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Will a motion be now in order, or at some time during these proceedings, to strike out section 5 of the bill under the proceedings now being had?

The SPEAKER. It is open for amendment; yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. But in order for anyone to offer an amendment he must first get recognition.

The SPEAKER. Of course. No one disputes that.

Mr. SHERLEY. I thought it might not be generally understood that the control of the bill is in the hands of the gentleman from North Carolina, because he has the floor, and he can move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. That is correct. No one has questioned that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume anybody would be privileged to offer a motion to recommit at the proper stage?

The SPEAKER. Of course. That is always in order, provided the motion itself is in order. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

On pages 6 and 7, strike out all the matter beginning on page 6, line 22, down to and including line 4 on page 7, and insert the following:

"In determining the value of the shares of any national bank, State bank, trust company, or other banking institution, for the purpose of taxation by any State or any of the possessions of the United States or any local taxing authority, there shall be deducted an amount equal to the same proportion of the value of the shares as the par amount of any bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of the United States issued during the present war owned by such bank or trust company or banking institution bears to its gross assets."

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING].

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly proper, I suppose, for members of the Ways and Means Committee to indicate to the House what the committee did do, but it does not come within the province of any member to tell the House what the committee intended to do. Every member of the committee has to speak for himself as to intention. I have not been able to find anything obscure in the statement made by the Secretary of the Treasury before the committee. He is not in the habit of making obscure statements. I think he can express himself as clearly as any man I ever knew, and the only construction that can be put upon his statement with reference to this provision of the bill is the construction that he puts upon it now, according to the statement made by the chairman of the committee a few moment ago. It was the purpose of the Secretary of the Treasury to reduce the taxable property of a bank by the amount of liberty bonds it might own.

I shall not undertake to state what the purpose of the committee was, but I know it was the purpose of one member of that committee to do that same thing. That was the Secretary's purpose, and I think he is justified in it. I think the bill is now as it ought to be, although it is not my purpose to make any particular contention against this amendment.

If the Members of the House think the bill that we passed the other day gives too great exemptions to banks and this will give less exemptions to them, why then, of course, they will vote for this amendment. I think there are two very good reasons why the bill should remain as it is. In the first place, as stated by the Secretary of the Treasury, and as everybody knows, Government bonds are not taxable in the hands of individuals or of any corporation unless it is a bank. Now, why should they be taxed in the hands of a bank when they are not taxed in the hands of any other owner? Now, I know what your answer will be. You will say that the bonds bought by the banks are bought from the assets of the bank without discriminating as to whether the assets used by the bank are permanent assets—that is, its taxable assets which are made up of its capital and its surplus or the variable assets, such as deposits. The assets of a bank are a common fund, all parts of which are used in the same way. When bonds are paid for one can not specify whether they are paid for by taxable assets or by nontaxable assets, and for that reason some contend that the money used to pay for the bonds should be apportioned between the two kinds of assets and the bonds pay taxes accordingly.

We are dependent upon the banks to sell these liberty bonds and we will be dependent upon them in making this next sale. They are the machinery through which the Government gets these bonds out to the people and collects the money of the people in the Treasury of the United States, so we are under some obligation at least to treat them as fairly in this matter as we treat individuals or corporations. And there is another reason, and, I think, a very vital reason, too, why the bonds should be considered a part of the taxable assets of the bank—that is, the bonds should be considered as having been purchased by the use of the taxable assets of the banks—and that is this: It is a permanent investment. Now, the taxable assets of the bank, which are made up of its capital and its surplus, are its fixed assets—its permanent fixed assets. The deposits are variable assets. We have always considered that it is good banking to limit the loans of banks to short-time paper, but these bonds are for 30 years. They are permanent investments, and should be paid for by permanent assets.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it the gentleman's view that these bonds should be taxed in the hands of the individual as well as in the hands of the bank?

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. No; I do not think they should be taxed at all.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Why does the gentleman say they should be taxed when purchased with the deposits or assets of the bank?

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. I do not say it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. I say they should be exempt altogether.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would not the real short road to that proposition be by amending the law of 1864 and providing that these bonds should not be taxed by States in any event?

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. I think the bill as we passed it the other day accomplishes that very thing.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman has clearly interpreted the Treasury Department's attitude on this question, but I want to ask in regard to the Kitchin amendment whether it does not still preserve the right of the States, under the act of 1864, to tax the value of the shares of the bank. It preserves that right, does it not?

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Not to the full extent.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Except that so far as the full value of Federal bonds is concerned it is to be deducted from the gross assets held to be taxable.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Under this amendment the States can tax the bonds in the same proportion which the taxable assets bear to the gross assets.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. I would like to have five minutes more.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield the gentleman five minutes additional.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Going back to the statement I undertook to make a moment ago——

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Excuse me until I finish this statement. These bonds are a permanent investment. They run for 30 years. They are not short-time paper. They ought to be considered as having been paid for out of the permanent fixed assets of the bank and not the variable and temporary assets of the bank. Whenever a bank buys $100,000 of Government bonds it has got them for 30 years unless it can find a satisfactory market. It would not be possible for a bank to take out of the variable assets of the bank $100,000 and put it in a 30-year loan, so it ought to be considered as having been paid for out of the permanent and fixed assets of the bank, which is the capital and the surplus of the bank, and it should reduce the taxable assets of the banks to the extent those assets are converted into Government bonds. Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. The question I desired to ask my colleague was whether the taxation imposed under the provisions of this bill, if the amendment is adopted, apply equally to State banks purchasing liberty bonds and national banks?

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. But would the relief in one case grant relief in the other?

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Yes. The amendment relates to national banks, State banks, and trust companies, and other banking institutions. Now, under the amendment which is offered to the bill, if the taxable assets of the bank were one-fifth of its gross assets, then the bank can only deduct or exempt one-fifth of its Government bonds from taxation.

The amendment is simple enough in its operation. In determining the exemption allowed banks by this amendment you need to ask and answer only one question. What is the ratio between the taxable assets and gross assets of the banks? If the one is one-fifth of the other, then one-fifth of the bonds owned by the bank are exempt. If one-tenth, then one-tenth of the bonds are exempt.

Now, there is just that discrimination made against banks with reference to these bonds that is not made against any other owner of the bonds in the United States. Personally, I believe the bill is just as the Secretary of the Treasury intended it, and I believe it is as it ought to be, and that this amendment does not improve it so far as doing justice to the banking institutions is concerned. [Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. The theory of the gentleman from Illinois and others who agree with him is that the amount of the Government bonds a bank may own should be taken from the net assets, or an amount equal to the amount of the capital and surplus. The other theory, as developed by the chairman of the committee, is in harmony, as I see it, with the text of the bill. That takes the amount of the Government bonds for taxation purposes from what might be called the assets, or what in the proposed amendment will be called the gross assets. The first proposition we are interested in is, Does the word "assets" as used in the original mean the net assets or gross assets? The dictionary says that "assets" are all the property, real and personal, of a "deceased or bankrupt person, of a corporation, or of a partnership which is or may be chargeable with the debts or legacies of such parties or persons." So, in order to give a basis for the construction placed by the gentleman from Illinois, the Treasury officials, and a number of the members of the Ways and Means Committee you would have to read in this bill instead of "assets" the words "net assets."

I call your attention to the bill, on page 6, at the bottom, it says:

In determining the value of the shares of any national bank, State bank, trust company, or other banking institution—

Not for market purposes, but—for the purpose of taxation by any State, or any of the possessions of the United States, or any local taxing authority, the par amount of any bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of the United States owned by such bank, trust company, or banking institution, shall be deducted—

From what?

Which, under the definition, the only one I was able to find that covered this proposition, means "all its assets."

What does that mean to a bank? Many of you are familiar with banking statements, and know that assets or resources are placed in a column on one side and liabilities on the other. Now, I want to suppose a case. I submit the following bank statement, with the amounts assumed to simplify consideration rather than to satisfy a critical bank examiner.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Permit me to finish this statement, because the main trouble in this discussion is that gentlemen have shifted from one side to the other, and have called deposits assets.

National Bank of Supposition.

RESOURCES OR ASSETS.		LIABILITIES.
Cash	$100,000	Capital stock	$75,000
Bills receivable	100,000	Surplus	25,000
Exchange	100,000	Deposits	800,000
Warrants	100,000	Bills rediscounted	50,000
Real estate	100,000	Taxes, claims, etc	50,000
Banking house, furniture, and fixtures	100,000
Railway bonds	100,000
Judgments, Claims, etc	100,000
Municipal bonds	100,000
United States bonds	100,000
Total	$1,000,000	Total	$1,000,000

Each of the above assets has a dual value aspect under the bill. First, as constituting a portion of the actual value of the stock—each of the above items contributes one-tenth to the net worth of the bank, and, so far as fixing the value of the shares, absolutely equal.

But for taxing purposes it is quite different. The first item, "Cash," is one-tenth the value of the assets for both as contributing actual value to the shares and furnishing a basis for taxation. Why? Because no State or Federal law exempts cash. Precisely the same is true of bills receivable, exchange, real estate, banking house, furniture, and fixtures, railway bonds, judgments, and so forth. In some States warrants are exempt. How about the remaining two, municipal bonds and Government bonds? Municipal bonds constitute one-tenth the value of the bank's assets.

But for taxing purpose it stands for nothing, because they are exempt. Therefore the taxing basis has been diminished by one-tenth. Upon the same basis the Government bonds constitute one-tenth of value, but being exempt as a taxing base it stands for nothing. Therefore the taxing base is reduced by another one-tenth, so that the value of the shares, as shown in the above basis, amounting in all to $100,000, must be reduced by two-tenths, or $20,000, equal to $80,000 net taxable basis.

To state it in another way, every dollar of the "assets," or gross assets, if you please, contribute 10 cents to the net assets. How much did the municipal bonds contribute? Ten thousand dollars. Then, for a taxing basis take that out. How much did the Government bonds contribute? Ten thousand dollars. Take it out of the net assets. The combined reduction made leaves $80,000. That exempts from taxation both the municipal bonds and the Government bonds, but exempts nothing else.

Under the construction claimed by some gentlemen in the foregoing case, if you exempt either the municipal bonds or the Government bonds, the bank would go scot-free of all taxation. Under our construction the Government bonds are immune from taxation. Under the other construction—exempting the bonds—all other assets of the bank would be immune. Under the working of that theory the largest and most valuable institution in every town and city would be placed on a parity with churches and schools—exempt from taxation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. SLOAN. What becomes of municipal bonds? They are 10 per cent of the value of all those assets. But so far as taxing value is concerned in most of the States in this Union they are not worth a dollar. So that they are cut out; but cut out of where? They are cut out of the gross assets.

Mr. DOMINICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Permit me to finish the statement.

Mr. DOMINICK. I wanted to ask a question about municipal bonds. Is it not a fact that in such cases where municipal bonds are exempted from that kind of taxation, it is provided in the body of the bond? It is already in the act under which those bonds have been issued. The ordinary general exemption from all State, county, and municipal services would not carry the exemption to shareholders of banks.

Mr. SLOAN. The same exemption is given in the States for municipal bonds that is given for United States bonds, and when they enter into the assets of a bank they constitute, as anybody knows, instead of here, 10 per cent of the value of the bonds, but not one millimeter, if such a term can be used as applied to banking, for making up the taxing value.

When this bill was drafted I understood it to mean precisely what it says, and it squares with the taxation method of the banking system in my State. It squares with the taxation system of nearly every State in the Union so far as State banks are concerned, and where we have municipal bonds or Government bonds we simply take them out of the total assets, find the proportion of the total assets that the exempt portion is, and that gives the ratio of reduction to be taken from the value of the shares.

Now, then, we should read the statute as it is, that the assets mean all the property that the bank has, and that each of these factors do go to make up the total assets. We could not say that the cash in a bank furnished the particular part that, reduced to its final terms, would equal the capital and surplus. We could not say that the real estate would either. But all intermingled and reduced to their lowest terms come down to the value of capital and surplus, and each dollar contributes, whether it is bond, cash, exchange, real estate, or whatever it is, its portion toward what might be called its net assets. So there is nothing left to do except, after you have discovered the amount of the bonds you have, Government bonds, deduct them from your total assets.

If it is one-tenth, then take from the total assets one-tenth, and your book value for assessment purposes would be 90 per cent of the par value of the stock.

Now, it seems to me that, reading that bill as English ought to be understood and read, it becomes very simple indeed.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SLOAN. I would like to yield first to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM]. He asked me a question, but at that time I wanted to finish my statement.

Mr. HELM. I was wanting to get from the gentleman a statement to the House of what is meant by the term "gross assets"?

Mr. SLOAN. The "gross assets" would mean the same as the "assets," upon which the market value would be determined. We do not use the term "gross assets" in this bill. It may be used in the amendment. If it is, it means the same as the "assets," as we have discussed it and as the dictionary defines it.

Mr. HELM. Does the "gross assets" include deposits?

Mr. SLOAN. By no means. A deposit is a liability and not an asset.

Mr. HELM. But the thing deposited is an asset.

Mr. SLOAN. Yes; the thing deposited is an asset, but when it is in the custody of the bank it creates a liability on the part of the bank. That has been the cause of much confusion. Men have discussed deposits and called them assets.

Mr. DIXON. The bank statements in newspapers are published usually in parallel columns. First are the resources of the bank on one side, and on the other side are the liabilities of the bank. As I understand it, the assets of the bank, under this bill, are the resources of the bank as shown by these publications.

Mr. SLOAN. Certainly; and that includes all the property that the bank has.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. In reaching what you call "assets," would you use the method commonly employed in ascertaining the value of bank stock, ascertaining what is known as the book value? Would you not include that as measuring the assets?

Mr. SLOAN. That is usually expressed in the capital and surplus and undivided profits thereof.

Mr. FOCHT. Would you tax that amount?

Mr. SLOAN. To arrive at the precise market value, an examination of the quality of securities and other assets would have to be made.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] allow me to ask him two or three questions?

Mr. KITCHIN. Does the gentleman want to ask me two or three questions?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; two or three questions of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to know how to do what I propose to do, and that is vote against any measure that will enable the States to impose any taxation on these liberty bonds. If I vote against this amendment, do I accomplish that result?

Mr. KITCHIN. If you vote for this amendment, you preserve the rights in the States that tax only the value of the stock represented by other than bonds, and you preserve the right to the Federal Government to prevent the States from taxing any part of the value of the stock represented by bonds. The bonds are exempted from taxation.

Mr. BUTLER. I thank the gentleman for that answer. Does the Secretary of the Treasury oppose this proposed amendment?

Mr. KITCHIN. I have not talked with the Secretary of the Treasury about it. His assistants would prefer the provision as it passed the House Saturday, but I do not believe that this proposed amendment will interfere with the sale of bonds.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. I want to ask the gentleman if this amendment of his has the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. KITCHIN. I have not seen the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to that amendment. Is the gentleman opposed to it because the Secretary of the Treasury is opposed to it?

Mr. McFADDEN. No; I would not say that; but the Secretary of the Treasury is asking for this legislation for the purpose of aiding in the sale of liberty bonds.

Mr. KITCHIN. I would say to the gentleman that this provision of the bill differs from the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury did not want us to include State banks in it. The Secretary of the Treasury wanted only to exempt national banks from taxation and let the State banks pay the taxes. Do you favor that proposition?

Mr. McFADDEN. I spoke against it and raised the constitutionality of it on last Saturday when that question was up.

Mr. KITCHIN. I wanted to know whether the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury opposed or favored the proposition was the reason for the gentleman's action?

Mr. McFADDEN. I realize that the exemption of the value of bank shares from taxation by States will promote the sale of liberty bonds, and I realize that in doing this we deprive the States of a vast amount of revenue, and it seems to me that it is not constitutional for the Congress to prohibit the States from taxing the shares of stockholders in banks operating within their own borders, be they either National or State banks.

Mr. KITCHIN. I understand the gentleman favors the original proposition in the bill, because, according to your statement, while the original proposition in the bill will lose about $3,000,000 revenue to the State of Pennsylvania, this provision would release about 2½ per cent of the value of the shares from taxation, if the position of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DOMINICK] is right.

Mr. McFADDEN. I did not favor the proposition of the Secretary of the Treasury on Saturday. I fear you are giving the Secretary of the Treasury only 10 per cent of what he is asking for, and whether it will meet with his approval or not, and whether it is going to interfere with the sale of liberty bonds, I question——

Mr. KITCHIN. This amendment will not interfere with the sale of liberty bonds at all.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I will.

Mr. VESTAL. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I do not understand this Treasury statement very well. Suppose a bank has $200,000 of capital and surplus.

Mr. HASTINGS. That includes undivided profits.

Mr. VESTAL. And they should buy $100,000 of liberty bonds under the bill as we passed it. Do I understand that that bank then would be taxed on $100,000, the difference between the value of the bonds they purchased and the other capital stock and the surplus, under the bill that passed last Saturday?

Mr. KITCHIN. The House is certainly under a great misapprehension as to the tax. I will answer the gentleman. The present law that we propose to amend or repeal to an extent is a law giving the States the power to tax, not the assets of the bank——

Mr. VESTAL. I understand——

Mr. KITCHIN. Not the property of the bank, but the value of the shares of stock of the bank. Now, the case that the gentleman puts, as I understand it, is this: Here is a proposition of a bank that has $200,000 of capital and surplus.

Mr. VESTAL. Yes; $200,000 of capital and surplus.

Mr. KITCHIN. Say a share of stock would be worth $200, and if the bank should buy $100,000 of bonds, how much of that certificate of stock would be taxed? Only $100 would be taxed by the State, and $100 would be exempt from taxation by the State. If that same bank were to purchase $200,000 of bonds, under the provision as construed by the Treasury Department in the original bill there would not be anything to tax. It would escape taxation altogether.

Mr. VESTAL. That is what I wanted to find out. Now, supposing under this amendment proposed by the gentleman from North Carolina this same bank has $200,000 of capital and surplus. It has $600.000 capital—surplus—or we might call it gross assets—deposits, and so forth.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. VESTAL. That bank buys $100,000 worth of bonds. Do I understand that under the amendment that bank would be taxable on $166.000 worth?

Mr. KITCHIN. And 33⅓——

Mr. VESTAL. Would be exempt only 33⅓ instead of $100,000.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; it works out practically the same, but of the value of the shares——

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. HELM. I infer from your answer to the gentleman's question that you regard deposits as assets and not as liabilities of the bank?

Mr. KITCHIN. Let me say to the House that I have never intimated such a thing; and, while gentlemen here have talked of deposits as being assets, they are liabilities.

Mr. HELM. Absolutely.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; deposits are liabilities. When I was a younger man than I am now I was a State bank examiner, and I have examined hundreds of banks. At the present time I have very little interest in banks, but if I had the time I could explain the exact workings of this, and of the values under the present law, and make it clear to the gentleman.

Mr. HELM. Tell us what gross assets consist of, and then I will let you alone.

Mr. KITCHIN. All right. The gross assets of a bank consist of what they call the total resources, and the gross assets of a bank are just like the gross assets of a bankrupt, or the gross assets of a man who dies. They are that property which is subject in law to debts and liabilities of the concern. Now, on one side, called resources or total assets, are loans and discounts, overdrafts, banking-house fixtures and furniture, investments, such as bonds, and so forth, or stock; amounts due from banks and bankers, and then the cash in the vault. Those are the resources. On the other side are the liabilities, capital stock, surplus—they call surplus a liability for the reason that the bank owes its surplus to its stockholders, and the surplus as well as the capital stock has been invested in these resources over here. Then, there is the amount due to banks and bankers, then the amount due to time and check depositors. Those are the liabilities. Bills payable, due to banks, are liabilities, too. Now, we add up this column of resources or assets, and we will say it is $1,000,000. Add up the other, your capital stock and your other liabilities exclusive of surplus. Of course, this is the way you get your surplus.

Say that side amounts to $800,000, your capital stock, amount due to depositors, bills payable or what is due to banks and bankers. The total of that is $800,000. You deduct that from the $1,000,000, leaving $200,000, which gives you your surplus. So when you talk about liabilities and resources with respect to depositors, why, your deposits are liabilities. If you put $1,000 or $10,000 into a bank, you are credited with it. The bank owes you $10,000. The bank takes that $10,000 and loans it to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. DALE]. That goes over into assets. It has Mr. DALE's note for $10,000 as an asset against the liability of the $10,000 which it owes you, a depositor. That is the way the whole thing works out. Now let the House get this into its mind. There is no other institution, corporation, association, partnership, or individual in the United States, under the laws of any of the States, the value of whose shares are taxed as they tax a bank. Banks are in a separate class to themselves. Why is that so? Because the national banking act of 1864 specifically picked out this method of taxation and gave it to the State, and the States do not tax bonds held by a bank like they tax the assets of a corporation. Let me explain that to the House, and then I believe we can have a clear understanding of this matter. A corporation like the Bethlehem Steel Works, for instance, buys a million dollars worth of bonds. In giving in its assets for taxation it deducts that $1,000,000 of bonds, if it pays any Federal taxes, and to the State for State taxes. Why is that? Because your State taxes directly the assets of the Bethlehem Steel Works. Suppose its assets were $50,000,000, and it had this $1,000,000 of bonds; they take out the $1,000,000 and tax the other $49,000,000. And if the State taxed a bank exactly like it taxes any other corporation or individual or firm, upon their tangible property that they have, then if the bank had $1,000,000 of assets or tangible property and $100,000 of bonds, under all laws they would deduct the $100,000 and only tax $900,000. But banks are not taxed in that way by States. They could not tax them in that way, because the Federal Government never gave them the right to tax the assets of banks, including bonds, in that way.

Mr. DICKINSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri, a member of the committee.

Mr. DICKINSON. Are not deposits both a liability and also a part of the assets or resources of the bank?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. They may be loaned out or they may be kept in the bank to meet the checks that are drawn upon them. They are a liability, but they are also a part of the resources or assets of the bank.

Mr. KITCHIN. Exactly.

Mr. DICKINSON. Every well-conducted bank loans out its deposits, and those loans are a part of the resources and enter into the statement of the resources of every bank.

Mr. KITCHIN. Just as if I borrowed $10,000 from you and loaned it to Mr. CARTER. I would owe you the $10,000 and invest in Mr. CARTER's note for $10,000.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. QUIN. I am very much interested in the gentleman's statement. I want to get it clear. Suppose there is a land corporation in Mississippi with $100,000 capital. It buys $50,000 worth of this issue of liberty bonds.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. There is a national bank there of $100,000 capital.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. That bank buys $50,000 worth of this issue of liberty bonds.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. What is the difference in taxation of the land company and the taxation of the national bank?

Mr. KITCHIN. Not a bit under this amendment that I have offered. The only difference is the way the State taxes it, because the land company is taxed on its assets and the bank under this provision is not taxed on its assets, but on the value of its shares, the proportionate part of the value, and in the case the gentleman puts the $50,000 of bonds is deducted.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. I have worked out three different kinds of sample bank statements, and I want to see if the work is right. Suppose a bank has a capital of $100,000, worth par—we will leave out deposits and other liabilities—its resources; loans, $100,000; bonds, $100,000; and cash, $100,000, which would make a total of $300,000.

Mr. KITCHIN. In that case we do not tax the assets but the stock, and one-third of the value of the shares of the stock in that bank would be deducted and the State would have a right to tax but two-thirds, being based on the proper assets other than Government bonds.

Mr. PLATT. Would it not be like this: Total assets, $300,000; bonds owned, $100,000; and they are one-third of the total resources, and in that case, which is an impossible case, is it true that there would be no taxation because one-third of the assets is equal to the capital——

Mr. KITCHIN. You do not tax capital; you do not tax surplus; you only take the value of the share. The question is, What is that share worth?

Mr. PLATT. Assume $100 par value.

Mr. KITCHIN. If it is worth $100, you deduct one-third, $33.33, which will be exempt from taxation. Why? Because that is one-third of the value of the share that is represented by one-third of the assets in bonds. Now, I want to get this clear in the minds of the Members of the House. Do not think about capital stock nor taxing assets like any other corporation. The only thing you are to consider are these three things, and that is the only way that you can work out the part that the State ought to have. First, the amount of the gross assets; second, the amount of the liberty bonds which constitute a part of those assets. If it is a quarter or a tenth or a twentieth, then you find the value of the share of the stock in that bank. If you find it to be $100, you take the proportionate amount of the bonds to the gross assets, one-quarter, one-tenth, or one-twentieth, and deduct that from the value of the share of stock. Then that per cent would be the amount exempted.

Mr. PLATT. Let me take another case.

Mr. KITCHIN. All cases work out the same way.

Mr. PLATT. This is an easier case and more likely to take place: Say the resources comprise loans of $200,000; bonds, $100,000; cash, $100,000; making a total of $400,000.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, the next question is, what is the value of a share in that bank?

Mr. PLATT. Suppose the stock is worth par and the capital $100,000.

Mr. KITCHIN. Not the capital, but the shares which are in each individual's hands.

Mr. PLATT. The share is worth the book value, and you can assume a value of par for illustration.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman has made many statements about the assessed value of a share. How do you arrive at the value of a share? Do you take the market value or the book value? Take the Chemical Bank of New York. The par value of the stock is $100, but it is worth $1,000 a share. There is a bank in Philadelphia that had its entire capital wiped out, but it had a surplus so that the stock was still worth $100. How do you arrive at the value of stock?

Mr. KITCHIN. Of course, that is a detail that would be settled by the State. As I understand, the Treasury Department, in ascertaining the value of the stock of a corporation——

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. That seems to me to be the starting point and the beginning and end of the whole thing.

Mr. KITCHIN. That would be a question that would come in under any sort of an amendment. The State fixes the value, and the gentleman's State might take the market value and my State might take the book value.

Mr. McFADDEN. In Pennsylvania they are given two options, one is a 10 mill tax on the capital and the other a 4 mill tax on the value of the shares of national banks.

Take, for instance, a bank with $100,000 of capital, $50,000 of surplus, and, we will say, a million dollars worth of assets. The book value of that stock is $150 per share. If the bank takes the option of paying the tax on the value of the shares it will be charged the 4-mill rate, or $600 per annum; if it takes the other option it will pay 10 mills on the capital stock, regardless of the value. The thing I am not clear on, under the gentleman's bill, is this: Take this bank with a million dollars of assets, holding a hundred thousand dollars of Government bonds. What per cent of those Government bonds would be relieved of taxation?

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, what is the ratio between the taxable assets and the gross assets? The gentleman has not stated the taxable assets.

Mr. McFADDEN. The point of the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] would be that proportion of Government bonds held to the total assets. With a hundred thousand dollars of Government bonds and a million dollars of assets, the taxable net assets would be $900,000.

Mr. FOCHT. And the House may understand that it is the gentleman's conception of this bill that the stock will be taxed on what we commonly understand to be the book value?

Mr. McFADDEN. The book value; yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. The Treasury Department at one time pursued this course. If it had a market, quotable price, they would take that, if it was listed. If it did not have that, they would find the transfer value of the stock during the year, say, the first week in each month or the first day in each month, and would take the average selling price of it. If it did not do that it would take the book value, as the gentleman says.

Mr. DOMINICK. In fixing the value of shares of stock in banks for taxation, is it not a matter for the respective States as to the way in which they shall be taxed?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. As I said to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that is so.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of illustration you can presume that the value of a stock is par, and in the case I mentioned, where the total resources were $400,000, including $100,000 of bonds, $100,000 capital worth par, you would claim in that case a deduction of one-fourth, which would be $25,000, and the taxable assets $75,000.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. As your resources increase with the same capital and the same ownership of bonds, suppose the resources were $600,000, then you would divide the $100,000 of value of shares by one-sixth and subtract $16,666.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; that is the way it would work.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman has the right idea. As the deposits increase, the amount of bonds exempt from taxation would decrease. That is the idea he is getting at.

Mr. PLATT. Deposits, of course, are liabilities.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Assuming the taxable assets remain permanent—that is, capital and surplus, suppose that remains permanent as the deposits go up—the amount of bonds that are exempt from taxation goes down.

Mr. PLATT. As the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] has stated, deposits are liabilities. If you say as the loans go up, which are the same thing, I agree with you, because deposits and loans are really the same thing——

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, loans have nothing to do with it. You have to take the total gross assets and see what percentage of that the bonds constitute. If it is 10 per cent, you deduct 10 per cent, and if 20 per cent you deduct 20 per cent.

Mr. PLATT. The loans have something to do with it because they are the largest item in the resources of the bank.

Mr. KITCHIN. You do not consider the loans separately; but consider the whole total liabilities—the stocks, municipal bonds, cash in the vaults, loans, discounts—it all goes to make up the total.

Mr. PLATT. I am taking a typical bank statement. On the resources line of a bank statement the loans are the big item.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. The loans are made up not only of deposits, but of capital and surplus, so that you can not pick out the loans in determining this matter at all.

Mr. PLATT. They are the biggest item in the resources. When the deposits go up the loans go up. They have to invest their deposits, and they always do. Take any bank statement and you will find that is so.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Let me make this statement, and I want to make it for the benefit of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN]. The gentleman from North Carolina is confused on this because he does not state his proportion correctly. The question is, What is the ratio between the taxable assets of the bank and the gross assets? Say it is one to five. That is, the taxable assets are one-fifth of the gross assets. Then one-fifth of the bonds are exempt from taxation. If it is one-third of the gross assets, one-third of the bonds are exempt from taxation. If the gentleman from North Carolina will accept that as the proper statement of the proportion, he can make this thing a good deal clearer.

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, I think the proportion stated in the amendment is much clearer than the gentleman from Illinois states it. He states it in an arithmetical way. The proposed amendment states it a little more brief, a little clearer and in a little more legislative and rhetorical way.

Mr. PLATT. I suppose the gentleman will admit this does not give nearly as big a deduction as the amendment passed the other day?

Mr. KITCHIN. No, sir; and we ought not to.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Surely.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no use for a bank except to borrow, and I know nothing about the banking business except when I want to know whether it has money enough to accommodate me.

A MEMBER. Impossible.

Mr. BUTLER. My friend says it is impossible, but I never found it so. It was proposed by the bill which this House passed last Saturday to permit States to impose taxes upon these bonds in the hands of the bank. Is not that stated correctly? The bill we passed last Saturday does not take from the State the right to impose taxes for State purpose upon those bonds which we are discussing here—liberty bonds?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. It is not proposed by this proposed amendment to remove the right of the State to impose taxes upon those bonds?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; we remove the right of the State to impose taxes upon the value of the share but not other property.

Mr. BUTLER. Aside from that, will not the State still collect something from the bank by reason of the ownership of these bonds if we pass this amendment?

Mr. KITCHIN. Not a penny.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I must vote for the amendment.

Mr. KITCHIN. Surely.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to relieve these bonds from the liability of being taxed; that is just what I wanted to know, and I knew my friend would answer me.

Mr. KITCHIN. That will do what the gentleman wants done.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I am right.

Mr. KITCHIN. Here is the difference with respect to the gentleman's question which is troubling him, the difference between the provision which was in the original bill as construed, not by me, but as construed by the Treasury Department. Now, the difference in the original bill and the proposed amendment is this:

If a bank had $200,000 capital stock and surplus, its assets may be $5,000,000, but if it invest $200,000 of its depositors' money in Government bonds or an amount equal to the surplus and capital, it would not only escape taxation to the amount of the value of the certificate of shares represented by the $200,000 but it would escape State taxation entirely and the bank would not have to pay the State anything on the value of the shares.

Mr. BUTLER. That is the Treasury construction.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. This amendment will simply prevent the State from putting any taxation upon that part of the value of the certificate of share which the Government bond bears to it and still permits the State to tax the part of the value of the share which the other assets than Government bonds impart to it. In other words, to give an allustration——

Mr. BUTLER. That is the way to make children see a thing.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am going to give the same one I used before. Here is a bank with a million dollars assets. Now, a share of stock in that bank is worth $200. There are $100,000 of Government bonds, there are also $260,000 of Bethlehem stock, say there are $300,000 of loans and discounts to Tom, Dick, and Harry, and there is $250,000 of stock in municipal bonds. Now, this $100,000 of Government bonds—liberty bonds—ought not to give that one share in the bank its full $200 of value. That $100,000 of Government bonds does not give it any more value than $100,000 of notes of Tom, Dick, and Harry. It does not impart any more value than $100,000 in town bonds. It takes all the assets, loans and discounts, Bethlehem steel stock, town bonds, Government bonds to make up the $200,000, so you see the Government bonds in these total assets have no more prestige or virtue than any other $100,000 of assets. So, with $1,000,000 of assets, the share of stock is worth $200; the Government bonds of $100,000, being one-tenth of the assets, total reserves liable for debt, only give that one-tenth of the value; therefore the assets other than Government bonds, in which the Government has no interest, give nine-tenths of the value. Now, then, this amendment specifically, clearly makes exempt only that one-tenth of the value of the $200 share which is imparted by the $100,000 of bonds, or one-tenth of the assets and the $180 is still taxable by the State, because that represents nine-tenths of assets other than Government bonds.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that will relieve the liberty bonds from taxation?

Mr. KITCHIN. Absolutely; there is no getting away from it.

Mr. BUTLER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DALE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. DALE of Vermont. In some of the States the taxation value of bank stock is fixed by a commission?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. DALE of Vermont. Now, does not this put it right in the hands of the commission to better the value of that stock so they can still tax it?

Mr. KITCHIN. If it did, then the man who is taxed would have the right of appeal to the court, just as if I was overtaxed in my State. They have the right, because it is a question of State taxation.

Mr. DALE of Vermont. Under the general law they would have it.

Mr. KITCHIN. They can go to the State or Federal courts.

Mr. DALE of Vermont. Does the bill give them any specific right?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; because there is a general law that gives them the right.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Where the commission fixes the taxable value of bank property, they have to fix it under certain rules and regulations, and so forth; they have got to fix it with reference to law?

Mr. DALE of Vermont. It is bank stock. They fix the value of the bank stock, and it is optional with them.

Mr. KITCHIN. But the law of 1864 declares that they must put the same rate of tax on it; that is, tax it no higher or make no more discrimination against this tax on shares of banks than it does on the other property.

Mr. DALE of Vermont. That is true; but it would not be apparent on the face of it.

Mr. KITCHIN. A man that is taxed unrighteously has the right of appeal, just as we have now in the States.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have written two questions, which I wish the gentleman would answer carefully.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. First: Does the Kitchin amendment interfere with the right of the States to tax the value of shares as heretofore?

Mr. KITCHIN. Absolutely not. That right is preserved in them, and we do not take it away from them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Question No. 2: Does this amendment permit the States to tax Federal bonds directly or indirectly?

Mr. KITCHIN. It does not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That seems to me to answer the general proposition and also the constitutional questions involved.

Mr. McFADDEN. It does affect the right to tax up to about 10 per cent?

Mr. KITCHIN. No, sir.

Mr. McFADDEN. In other words, if a bank holds Government bonds they can only tax——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman's amendment——

Mr. KITCHIN. You will find in the RECORD that I explained exactly what you are asking.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Kitchin amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KITCHIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PLATE PRESENTED BY BRITISH GOVERNMENT TO AMERICAN EMBASSY AT BERLIN (H. DOC. NO. 1013).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, together with the memorandum attached thereto, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State, concerning pieces of plate presented by the British Government to certain persons connected with the American Embassy at Berlin at the time it was in charge of British interests in Germany, and request the consideration by Congress of the question whether it will grant authority to the Secretary of State to deliver the pieces of plate to the persons named in the report of the Secretary of State.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 2, 1918.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Oklahoma rise?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I want to renew my request to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8696, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8696, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, I do not see the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], who objected, here. I desire to ask the gentleman if there has been any understanding?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. There was not any understanding.

Mr. KNUTSON. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I have no objection to the request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8696) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees: Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma, Mr. HAYDEN, and Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas.

WAR FINANCE CORPORATION—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 448.)

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill S. 3714, known as the War Finance Corporation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up the conference report on the bill S. 3714.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WALSH. I reserve a point of order on the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the conference report.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let me make one request, and the Speaker will help me carry out that request. I wish the House would pay careful attention to the report. The report is clear and takes up every single point of difference, and I am sure that if gentlemen of the House will pay attention to the report we can get through with it in 10 minutes afterwards, as the Senate did yesterday.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Another body has already approved this conference report?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; another body has approved this conference report.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will take their seats and refrain from conversation while this statement is read.

The Clerk read the statement.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3714) to provide further for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House, insert the following:

"TITLE I.—WAR FINANCE CORPORATION.

"That the Secretary of the Treasury and four additional persons (who shall be the directors first appointed as hereinafter provided) are hereby created a body corporate and politic in deed and in law by the name, style, and title of the 'War Finance Corporation,' (herein called the Corporation), and shall have succession for a period of 10 years: Provided, That in no event shall the Corporation exercise any of the powers conferred by this act, except such as are incidental to the liquidation of its assets and the winding up of its affairs, after six months after the termination of the war, the date of such termination to be fixed by proclamation of the President of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the capital stock of the Corporation shall be $500,000,000, all of which shall be subscribed by the United States of America, and such subscription shall be subject to call upon the vote of three-fifths of the board of directors of the corporation, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, at such time or times as may be deemed advisable; and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purpose of making payment upon such subscription when and as called. Receipts for payments by the United States of America for or on account of such stock shall be issued by the Corporation to the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall be evidence of stock ownership.

SEC. 3. That the management of the Corporation shall be vested in a board of directors, consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall be chairman of the board, and four other persons, to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. No director, officer, attorney, agent, or employee of the Corporation shall in any manner, directly or indirectly, participate in the determination of any question affecting his personal interests, or the interests of any corporation, partnership, or association, in which he is directly or indirectly interested; and each director shall devote his time, not otherwise required by the business of the United States, principally to the business of the Corporation. Before entering upon his duties, each of the four directors so appointed, and each officer, shall take an oath faithfully to discharge the duties of his office. Nothing contained in this or any other act shall be construed to prevent the appointment as a director of the Corporation of any officer or employee under the United States or of a director of a Federal reserve bank.

Of the four directors so appointed, the President of the United States shall designate two to serve for two years, and two for four years; and thereafter each director so appointed shall serve for four years. Whenever a vacancy shall occur among the directors so appointed, the person appointed director to fill any such vacancy shall hold office for the unexpired term of the member whose place he is selected to fill. Any director shall be subject to removal by the President of the United States. Three members of the board of directors shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

SEC. 4. That the four directors of the Corporation appointed as hereinbefore provided shall receive annual salaries, payable monthly, of $12,000. Any director receiving from the United States any salary or compensation for services shall not receive as salary from the Corporation any amount which, together with any salary or compensation received from the United States, would make the total amount paid to him by the United States and by the Corporation exceed $12,000.

SEC. 5. That the principal office of the Corporation shall be located in the District of Columbia, but there may be established agencies or branch offices in any city or cities of the United States under rules and regulations prescribed by the board of directors.

SEC. 6. That the Corporation shall be empowered and authorized to adopt, alter, and use a corporate seal; to make contracts; to purchase or lease and hold or dispose of such real estate as may be necessary for the prosecution of its business; to sue and be sued; to complain and defend in any court of competent jurisdiction, State or Federal; to appoint, by its board of directors, and fix the compensation of such officers, employees, attorneys, and agents as are necessary for the transaction of the business of the Corporation, to define their duties, require bonds of them and fix the penalties thereof, and to dismiss at pleasure such officers, employees, attorneys, and agents; and to prescribe, amend, and repeal, by its board of directors subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, by-laws regulating the manner in which its general business may be conducted and the privileges granted to it by law may be exercised and enjoyed, and prescribing the powers and duties of its officers and agents.

SEC. 7. That the Corporation shall be empowered and authorized to make advances, upon such terms, not inconsistent herewith, as it may prescribe, for periods not exceeding five years from the respective dates of such advances:

(1) To any bank, banker, or trust company, in the United States, which shall have made after April 6, 1917, and which shall have outstanding, any loan or loans to any person, firm, corporation, or association, conducting an established and going business in the United States, whose operations shall be necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and evidenced by a note or notes, but no such advance shall exceed 75 per cent of the face value of such loan or loans; and

(2) To any bank, banker, or trust company, in the United States, which shall have rendered financial assistance, directly or indirectly, to any such person, firm, corporation or association by the purchase after April 6, 1917, of its bonds or other obligations, but no such advance shall exceed 75 per cent of the value of such bonds or other obligations at the time of such advance, as estimated and determined by the board of directors of the Corporation.

All advances shall be made upon the promissory note or notes of such bank, banker, or trust company, secured by the notes, bonds, or other obligations, which are the basis of any such advance by the Corporation, together with all the securities, if any, which such bank, banker, or trust company may hold as collateral for such notes, bonds, or other obligations.

The Corporation shall, however, have power to make advances (a) up to 100 per cent of the face value of any such loan made by any such bank, banker, or trust company to any such person, firm, corporation, or association, and (b) up to 100 per cent of the value at the time of any such advance (as estimated and determined by the board of directors of the Corporation) of such bonds or other obligations by the purchase of which financial assistance shall have been rendered to such person, firm, corporation, or association: Provided, That every such advance shall be secured in the manner described in the preceding part of this section, and in addition thereto by collateral security, to be furnished by the bank, banker, or trust company, of such character as shall be prescribed by the board of directors, of a value, at the time of such advance (as estimated and determined by the board of directors of the Corporation), equal to at least 33 per cent of the amount advanced by the Corporation. The Corporation shall retain power to require additional security at any time.

SEC. 8. That the Corporation shall be empowered and authorized to make advances from time to time, upon such terms, not inconsistent herewith, as it may prescribe, for periods not exceeding one year, to any savings bank, banking institution or trust company, in the United States, which receives savings deposits, or to any building and loan association in the United States, on the promissory note or notes of the borrowing institution, whenever the Corporation shall deem such advances to be necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war or important in the public interest: Provided, That such note or notes shall be secured by the pledge of securities of such character as shall be prescribed by the board of directors of the Corporation, the value of which, at the time of such advance (as estimated and determined by the board of directors of the Corporation) shall be equal in amount to at least 133 per cent of the amount of such advance. The rate of interest charged on any such advance shall not be less than 1 per cent per annum in excess of the rate of discount for 90-day commercial paper prevailing at the time of such advance at the Federal reserve bank of the district in which the borrowing institution is located, but such rate of interest shall in no case be greater than the average rate receivable by the borrowing institution on its loans and investments made during the six months prior to the date of the advance, except that where the average rate so receivable by the borrowing institution is less than such rate of discount for 90-day commercial paper the rate of interest on such advance shall be equal to such rate of discount. The Corporation shall retain power to require additional security at any time.

SEC. 9. That the Corporation shall be empowered and authorized, in exceptional cases, to make advances directly to any person, firm, corporation, or association, conducting an established and going business in the United States, whose operations shall be necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war (but only for the purpose of conducting such business in the United States and only when in the opinion of the board of directors of the Corporation such person, firm, corporation, or association is unable to obtain funds upon reasonable terms through banking channels or from the general public), for periods not exceeding five years from the respective dates of such advances, upon such terms, and subject to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the board of directors of the Corporation. In no case shall the aggregate amount of the advances made under this section exceed at any one time an amount equal to 12½ per cent of the sum of (1) the authorized capital stock of the Corporation plus (2) the aggregate amount of bonds of the Corporation authorized to be outstanding at any one time when the capital stock is fully paid in. Every such advance shall be secured by adequate security of such character as shall be prescribed by the board of directors of a value at the time of such advance (as estimated and determined by the board of directors), equal to (except in case of an advance made to a railroad in the possession and control of the President, for the purpose of making additions, betterments, or road extensions to such railroad) at least 125 per cent of the amount advanced by the Corporation. The Corporation shall retain power to require additional security at any time. The rate of interest charged on any such advance shall not be less than 1 per cent per annum in excess of the rate of discount for 90-day commercial paper prevailing at the time of such advance at the Federal reserve bank of the district in which the borrower is located.

SEC. 10. That in no case shall the aggregate amount of the advances made under this title to any one person, firm, corporation, or association exceed at any one time an amount equal to 10 per cent of the authorized capital stock of the Corporation, but this section shall not apply in the case of an advance made to a railroad in the possession and control of the President, for the purpose of making additions, betterments, or road extensions to such railroad.

SEC. 11. That the Corporation shall be empowered and authorized to subscribe for, acquire, and own, buy, sell, and deal in bonds and obligations of the United States issued or converted after September 24, 1917, to such extent as the board of directors, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may from time to time determine.

SEC. 12. That the Corporation shall be empowered and authorized to issue and have outstanding at any one time its bonds in an amount aggregating not more than six times its paid-in capital, such bonds to mature not less than one year nor more than five years from the respective dates of issue, and to bear such rate or rates of interest, and may be redeemable before maturity at the option of the Corporation, as may be determined by the board of directors, but such rate or rates of interest shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Such bonds shall have a first and paramount floating charge on all the assets of the Corporation, and the Corporation shall not at any time mortgage or pledge any of its assets. Such bonds may be issued at not less than par in payment of any advances authorized by this title, or may be offered for sale publicly or to any individual, firm, corporation, or association, at such price or prices, as the board of directors, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may determine.

Upon such terms not inconsistent herewith as may be determined from time to time by the board of directors, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, at or before the issue thereof, any of such bonds may be issued payable in any foreign money or foreign moneys, or issued payable at the option of the respective holders thereof either in dollars or in any foreign money or foreign moneys at such fixed rate of exchange as may be stated in any such bonds. For the purpose of determining the amount of bonds issued payable in any foreign money or foreign moneys the dollar equivalent shall be determined by the par of exchange at the date of issue thereof, as estimated by the Director of the Mint and proclaimed by the Secretary of the Treasury in pursuance of the provisions of section 25 of the act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved August 27, 1894.

SEC. 13. That the Federal reserve banks shall be authorized, subject to the maturity limitations of the Federal reserve act and to regulations of the Federal Reserve Board, to discount the direct obligations of member banks secured by such bonds of the Corporation and to rediscount eligible paper secured by such bonds and indorsed by a member bank. No discount or rediscount under this section shall be granted at a less interest charge than 1 per cent per annum above the prevailing rates for eligible commercial paper of corresponding maturity.

Any Federal reserve bank may, with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, use any obligation or paper so acquired for any purpose for which it is authorized to use obligations or paper secured by bonds or notes of the United States not bearing the circulation privilege: Provided, however, That whenever Federal reserve notes are issued against the security of such obligations or paper the Federal Reserve Board may make a special interest charge on such notes, which, in the discretion of the Federal Reserve Board, need not be applicable to other Federal reserve notes which may from time to time be issued and outstanding. All provisions of law, not inconsistent herewith, in respect to the acquisition by any Federal reserve bank of obligations or paper secured by such bonds or notes of the United States, and in respect to Federal reserve notes issued against the security of such obligations or paper, shall extend, in so far as applicable, to the acquisition of obligations or paper secured by the bonds of the Corporation and to the Federal reserve notes issued against the security of such obligations or paper.

SEC. 14. That the corporation shall not exercise any of the powers granted by this title or perform any business except such as is incidental and necessarily preliminary to its organization until it has been authorized by the President of the United States to commence business under the provisions of this title.

SEC. 15. That all net earnings of the Corporation not required for its operations shall be accumulated as a reserve fund until such time as the Corporation liquidates under the terms of this title. Such reserve fund shall, upon the direction of the board of directors, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, be invested in bonds and obligations of the United States, issued or converted after September 24, 1917, or upon like direction and approval may be deposited in member banks of the Federal Reserve System, or in any of the Federal reserve banks, or be used from time to time, as well as any other funds of the Corporation, in the purchase or redemption of any bonds issued by the Corporation. The Federal reserve banks are hereby authorized to act as depositaries for and as fiscal agents of the Corporation in the general performance of the powers conferred by this title. Beginning six months after the termination of the war, the date of such termination to be fixed by a proclamation of the President of the United States, the directors of the Corporation shall proceed to liquidate its assets and to wind up its affairs, but the directors of the Corporation, in their discretion, may, from time to time, prior to such date, sell and dispose of any securities or other property acquired by the Corporation. Any balance remaining after the payment of all its debts shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts, and thereupon the Corporation shall be dissolved.

SEC. 16. That any and all bonds issued by the Corporation shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, any State, or any of the possessions of the United States, or by any local taxing authority, except (a) estate or inheritance taxes, and (b) graduated additional income taxes, commonly known as surtaxes, and excess-profits and war-profits taxes, now or hereafter imposed by the United States, upon the income or profits of individuals, partnerships, corporations, or associations. The interest on an amount of such bonds the principal of which does not exceed in the aggregate $5,000, owned by any indivadual, partnership, corporation, or association, shall be exempt from the taxes referred to in clause (b). The Corporation, including its franchise and the capital and reserve or surplus thereof, and the income derived therefrom, shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, any State, or any of the possessions of the United States, or by any local taxing authority, except that any real property of the Corporation shall be subject to State, county, or municipal taxes to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed.

SEC. 17. That the United States shall not be liable for the payment of any bond or other obligation or the interest thereon issued or incurred by the Corporation, nor shall it incur any liability in respect of any act or omission of the Corporation.

SEC. 18. That whoever (1) makes any statement, knowing it to be false, for the purpose of obtaining for himself or for any other person, firm, corporation, or association any advance under this title, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

Whoever willfully overvalues any security by which any such advance is secured shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

Whoever (1) falsely makes, forges, or counterfeits any bond, coupon, or paper in imitation of or purporting to be in imitation of a bond or coupon issued by the Corporation; or (2) passes, utters, or publishes, or attempts to pass, utter, or publish, any false, forged, or counterfeited bond, coupon, or paper purporting to be issued by the Corporation, knowing the same to be falsely made, forged, or counterfeited; or (3) falsely alters any such bond, coupon, or paper; or (4) passes, utters, or publishes as true any falsely altered or spurious bond, coupon, or paper issued or purporting to have been issued by the Corporation, knowing the same to be falsely altered or spurious, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

Whoever, being connected in any capacity with the Corporation, (1) embezzles, abstracts, or willfully misapplies any moneys, funds, or credits thereof, or (2) with intent to defraud the Corporation or any other company, body politic or corporate, or any individual, or to deceive any officer of the Corporation, (a) makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of the Corporation, or (b) without authority from the directors draws any order or assigns any note, bond, draft, mortgage, judgment, or decree thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to direct and use the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department to detect, arrest, and deliver into custody of the United States marshal having jurisdiction any person committing any of the offenses punishable under this section.

SEC. 19. That the Corporation shall file quarterly reports with the Secretary of the Senate and with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, stating as of the first day of each month of the quarter just ended (1) the total amount of capital paid in, (2) the total amount of bonds issued, (3) the total amount of bonds outstanding, (4) the total amount of advances made under each of sections 7, 8, and 9, (5) a list of the classes and amount of securities taken under each of such sections, (6) the total amount of advances outstanding under each of sections 7, 8, and 9, and (7) such other information as may be hereafter required by either House of Congress.

The Corporation shall make a report to Congress on the first day of each regular session, including a detailed statement of receipts and expenditures.

SEC. 20. Section 5202 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5202. No national banking association shall at any time be indebted, or in any way liable, to an amount exceeding the amount of its capital stock at such time actually paid in and remaining undiminished by losses or otherwise, except on account of demands of the nature following:

"First. Notes of circulation.

"Second. Moneys deposited with or collected by the association.

"Third. Bills of exchange or drafts drawn against money actually on deposit to the credit of the association or due thereto.

"Fourth. Liabilities to the stockholders of the association for dividends and reserve profits.

"Fifth. Liabilities incurred under the provisions of the Federal reserve act.

"Sixth. Liabilities incurred under the provisions of the War Finance Corporation act."

TITLE II.—CAPITAL ISSUES COMMITTEE.

SEC. 200. That there is hereby created a committee to be known as the "Capital Issues Committee," hereinafter called the committee, and to be composed of seven members to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. At least three of the members shall be members of the Federal Reserve Board.

No member, officer, attorney, agent, or employee of the committee shall in any manner, directly or indirectly, participate in the determination of any question affecting his personal interests, or the interest of any corporation, partnership, or association in which he is directly or indirectly interested. Before entering upon his duties, each member and officer shall take an oath faithfully to discharge the duties of his office. Nothing contained in this or any other act shall be construed to prevent the appointment as a member of the committee, of any officer or employee under the United States or of a director of a Federal reserve bank.

The terms during which the several members of the committee shall respectively hold office shall be determined by the President of the United States, and the compensation of the several members of the committee who are not members of the Federal Reserve Board shall be $7,500 per annum, payable monthly, but if any such member receives any other compensation from any office or employment under the United States, the amount so received shall be deducted from such salary, and if such other compensation is $7,500 or more, such member shall receive no salary as a member of the committee. Any member shall be subject to removal by the President of the United States. The President shall designate one of the members as chairman, but any subsequent vacancy in the chairmanship shall be filled by the committee. Four members of the committee shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

SEC 201. That the committee may employ and fix the compensation of such officers, attorneys, agents, and other employees as may be deemed necessary to conduct its business, who shall be appointed without regard to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883 (vol. 22, U. S. Stat. L., p. 403), and amendments thereto or any rules or regulations made in pursuance thereof. No such officer, attorney, agent, or employee shall receive more compensation than persons performing services of like or similar character under the Federal Reserve Board.

SEC. 202. That all the expenses of the committee, including all necessary expenses for transportation incurred by the members or by its officers, attorneys, agents, or employees under its orders in making an investigation or upon official business in any other places than at their respective headquarters, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman.

The committee may rent suitable offices for its use, and purchase such furniture, equipment, and supplies as may be necessary, but shall not expend more than $10,000 annually for offices in the District of Columbia.

The principal office of the committee shall be in the District of Columbia, but it may meet and exercise all its powers at any other place. The committee may, by one or more of its members, or by such agents as it may designate, prosecute any inquiry necessary to its duties in any part of the United States.

SEC. 203. That the committee may, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by it from time to time, investigate, pass upon, and determine whether it is compatible with the national interest that there should be sold or offered for sale or for subscription any issue, or any part of any issue, of securities hereafter issued by any person, firm, corporation, or association, the total or aggregate par or face value of which issue and any other securities issued by the same person, firm, corporation, or association since the passage of this act is in excess of $100,000. Shares of stock of any corporation or association without nominal or par value shall for the purpose of this section be deemed to be of the par value of $100 each. Any securities which upon the date of the passage of this act are in the possession or control of the corporation, association, or obligor issuing the same shall be deemed to have been issued after the passage of this act within the meaning hereof.

Nothing in this title shall be construed to authorize such committee to pass upon (1) any borrowing by any person, firm, corporation, or association in the ordinary course of business as distinguished from borrowing for capital purposes, (2) the renewing or refunding of indebtedness existing at the time of the passage of this act, (3) the resale of any securities the sale or offering of which the committee has determined to be compatible with the national interest, (4) any securities issued by any railroad corporation the property of which may be in the possession and control of the President of the United States, or (5) any bonds issued by the War Finance Corporation.

Nothing done or omitted by the committee hereunder shall be construed as carrying the approval of the committee or of the United States of the legality, validity, worth, or security of any securities.

SEC. 204. That there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the remainder of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the sum of $200,000 for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the establishment and maintenance of the committee, including the payment of the salaries and rents herein authorized.

SEC. 205. That the committee shall make a report to Congress on the first day of each regular session, including a detailed statement of receipts and expenditures, and also including the names of all officers and employees and the salary paid to each.

SEC. 206. That this title shall continue in effect until, but not after, the expiration of six months after the termination of the war, the date of such termination to be determined by a proclamation of the President of the United States, but the President may at any time by proclamation declare that this title is no longer necessary, and thereupon it shall cease to be in effect.

TITLE III.—MISCELLANEOUS.

SEC. 300. That whoever willfully violates any of the provisions of this act, except where a different penalty is provided in this act, shall, upon conviction in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both; and whoever knowingly participates in any such violation, except where a different penalty is provided in this act, shall be punished by a like fine or imprisonment, or both.

SEC. 301. That no stamp tax shall be required or imposed upon a promissory note secured by the pledge of bonds or obligations of the United States issued after April 24, 1917, or secured by the pledge of a promissory note which itself is secured by the pledge of such bonds or obligations: Provided, That in either case the par value of such bonds or obligations shall equal the amount of such note.

SEC. 302. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall, for any reason, be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, or, in case any court of competent jurisdiction shall adjudge to be invalid any provisions hereof in respect of any class or classes of securities, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder of this act, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, part, or subject matter of this act directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

SEC. 303. That the term "securities," as used in this act, includes stocks, shares of stock, bonds, debentures, notes, certificates of indebtedness, and other obligations.

SEC. 304. That the right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

SEC. 305. That the short title of this act shall be the "War Finance Corporation act."

SEC. 306. That all provisions of any act or acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Amend the title to read as follows: "An act to provide further for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and to supervise the issuance of securities, and for other purposes."

And the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3714) to provide further for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

TITLE I.—WAR FINANCE CORPORATION.

SECTION 1.—ESTABLISHMENT OF WAR FINANCE CORPORATION.

The Senate bill sets forth the purposes of the act. The House bill eliminated the statement of the purposes of the act, in view of the fact that the purposes were fully set out in the title. The remainder of the section is identical in both bills, except for minor clerical changes. The conferees adopt the House section.

SECTION 2.—CAPITAL STOCK OF THE CORPORATION.

The substance of this section is the same in both bills. The House bill makes a transposition of language in the interest of clearness. The conferees adopt the House section.

SECTION 3.—MANAGEMENT OF THE CORPORATION.

The substance of the two bills is identical, with the following exception:

1. The House bill provides that not more than three of the five directors shall be members of the same political party. The Senate bill contained no similar provision. The conferees omit this provision.

2. The House bill provides that each director shall devote to the business of the Corporation all of his time not devoted to the business of the United States. The Senate bill contains no similar provision; therefore it would not require a director to devote his entire time to the business of the Corporation or to the business of the United States. The conferees provide that "each director shall devote his time, not otherwise required by the business of the United States, principally to the business of the Corporation."

3. The House bill provides that nothing contained in this or any other act shall be construed to prevent the appointment as a director of the corporation of any officer or employee under the United States or of a director of a Federal reserve bank. The similar provision of the Senate bill is not as broad as the provision of the House bill, and provides that nothing contained in this act or in the Federal reserve act shall be construed to prevent the appointment of a member of the Federal Reserve Board or of any other governmental administrative body, or of a director of a Federal reserve bank, as a director of the corporation. The conferees adopt the House provision.

SECTION 4.—SALARY OF THE DIRECTORS.

The substance of the provisions of the two bills is identical, with the exception that the House bill fixes the salary of the directors at $12,000 per annum, while the Senate bill allows the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President of the United States, to fix the salaries at an amount not exceeding $12,000. The conferees adopt the House section.

SECTION 5.—THE PRINCIPAL OFFICES OF THE CORPORATION.

The provisions of the two bills are identical, with the exception that the House bill permits the board of directors to establish agencies or branch offices in any city or cities of the United States, while the Senate bill permits the board of directors, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to establish such agencies or offices. The conferees adopt the House section.

Power of the corporation.

SECTION 6.—ORDINARY CORPORATE POWERS.

The provisions giving the corporation the ordinary powers and privileges enjoyed by corporations are identical except for certain clerical changes in the interest of clearness. The conferees adopt the House section with minor changes.

SECTION 7.—ADVANCES THROUGH BANKS.

The substance of the provisions of the two bills relating to advances through banks are the same, with the exception of the following:

1. The House bill limits the advances that can be made by the corporation to those made upon the basis of loans of banks, bankers, or trust companies made and outstanding to persons, firms, corporations, or associations since April 6, 1917, the date of the declaration of war. The Senate bill contains no such limitation and would permit the corporation to make advances to banks, bankers, or trust companies on outstanding loans whenever made. The conferees adopt the House provision.

2. The House bill limits the advances which can be made by the Corporation to banks, bankers, or trust companies (on the basis of securities of war industries held by such banks, bankers, or trust companies) to such securities purchased since April 6, 1917. The Senate bill contains no such limitation, and would allow such advances to be made on any war-industry securities held by banks, bankers, or trust companies which have rendered financial assistance, directly or indirectly, by the purchase of such securities from persons, firms, corporations, or associations whose operations are necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war. The conferees adopt the House provision.

3. The House bill limits the advances to banks, bankers, or trust companies in the United States. The Senate bill contains no such limitation. The conferees adopt the House provision.

4. The House bill limits the persons, firms, corporations, or associations whose loans may be made the basis of an advance to a bank, banker, or trust company to those conducting an established and going business in the United States. The Senate bill contains no such limitation, and would permit advances to be made to concerns outside of the United States, if such concerns had outstanding loans or held securities of concerns whose operations were necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war. The conferees adopt the House provision.

5. The House bill requires the Corporation when it makes an advance up to 100 per cent of the face value of the loan by the bank, banker, or trust company to require additional security equal to at least 33 per cent. The Senate bill requires in such cases additional security equal to at least 25 per cent. The conferees adopt the House provision.

6. The Senate bill gives fire and life insurance companies the same privilege permitted to banks, bankers, or trust companies under this section. The House bill does not give fire and life insurance companies this privilege. The conferees omit this provision.

7. The House bill provides that the Corporation shall retain power to require additional security at any time. The Senate bill provides that the Corporation shall retain power to require additional collateral security at any time. The word "collateral" is left out in the House bill. The conferees adopt the House provision.

SECTION 8.—ADVANCES TO SAVINGS BANKS AND SIMILAR INSTITUTIONS.

The substance of the provisions of the two bills providing for advances to savings banks and similar institutions are identical, with the following exceptions:

1. The House bill permits advances to be made to trust companies in the United States, which receive savings deposits. The Senate bill does not extend this privilege to trust companies. The conferees adopt the House provision.

2. The House bill limits the advances that can be made under this section to banking institutions and building and loan associations in the United States. The Senate bill does not require such institutions or associations to be doing business in the United States. The conferees adopt the House provision.

3. The House bill provides that the board of directors shall prescribe the character of securities that shall be required of savings banks and similar institutions receiving advances under this section. The Senate bill prescribes that the board of directors of the Corporation, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe the character of such securities. The conferees adopt the House provision.

4. The Senate bill provides that the rate of interest charged savings banks and similar institutions shall not be less than one-half of 1 per cent per annum in excess of the rate of discount for 90-day commercial paper prevailing at the time of such advances at the Federal reserve bank of the district in which the borrowing institution is located. The House bill provides that such rate of interest shall not be less than 1 per cent per annum in excess of the rate for such 90-day commercial paper. The conferees adopt the House provision, with the added limitation that such rate of interest shall in no case be greater than the average rate receivable by the borrowing institution on its loans and investments made during the six months prior to the date of the advance, except that where the average rate so receivable by the borrowing institution is less than such rate of discount for 90-day commercial paper the rate of interest on such advance shall be equal to such rate of discount.

5. The Senate bill provides that all advances made to savings banks and similar institutions shall be secured by the pledge of securities the market value of which shall be equal in amount to at least 125 per cent of the amount of the advances. The House bill increases the amount of securities to be required in such cases to an amount equal to at least 133 per cent of the amount of the advance. The conferees adopt the House provision.

6. The Senate bill provides that in the case of loans to savings banks and similar institutions that the Corporation shall retain power to require additional collateral security at any time. The House bill provides that in making advances to such institutions the Corporation shall retain power to require additional security at any time. The word "collateral" is left out in the House provision. The conferees adopt the House provision.

SECTION 9.—DIRECT LOANS MADE BY THE CORPORATION.

The Senate bill provides that the Corporation may make advances upon adequate security directly (1) to any person, firm, corporation, or association owning or controlling (directly or through stock ownership) any railroad or other public utility and (2) to any person, firm, corporation, or association conducting an established and going business whose bonded indebtedness is not in excess of its actual invested capital and assets and whose operations are necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war. The Senate bill also provides that such advances shall be made only in such cases as the board of directors shall determine to be of exceptional importance in the public interest.

The similar provision of the House bill makes no specified reference to any particular class of business, but authorizes the Corporation to make advances in exceptional cases direct to any person, firm, corporation, or association conducting an established and going business in the United States whose operations shall be necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war (but only for the purpose of conducting such business in the United States, and only when such person, firm, corporation, or association is unable to obtain funds upon reasonable terms through banking channels or from the general public). The conferees adopt the House provision, except that the determination of the ability of the applicant for the loan to obtain money through banking channels or from the general public is specifically left to the judgment of the board of directors of the Corporation.

The Senate bill contains no limit to the amount of money that can be loaned direct under this section by the Corporation to any person, firm, corporation, or association. The House bill provides that the Corporation can not have outstanding at any one time in direct loans more than one-sixth of its paid-in capital stock plus the aggregate amount of its bonds authorized to be outstanding at such time. The conferees adopt a provision limiting the aggregate amount of advances, made in direct loans, which may be outstanding at any one time to one-eighth of the sum of its authorized capital stock and bonds.

The House bill also contains an additional limitation with references to the advances to be made direct by the Corporation not contained by the Senate bill, namely, that the rate of interest charged on any such advance shall not be less than 1 per cent per annum in excess of the rate of discount for 90-day commercial paper prevailing at the time of such advance at the Federal reserve bank of the district in which the borrower is located. The conferees adopt the House provision.

The Senate bill authorizes the Corporation to make loans direct upon adequate security. The House bill provides that the direct loans shall be secured by adequate security equal to at least 133 per cent of the amount advanced by the Corporation. The conferees adopt the House provision, changing 133 per cent to 125 per cent and providing that advances to railroads under Federal control for the purpose of making additions, betterments, or road extensions shall be secured by security deemed adequate by the directors of the Corporation.

SECTION 10.—SINGLE ADVANCES TO THE CORPORATION.

The House bill provides that in no case shall the aggregate amount of advances made under this act to any person, firm, corporation, or association exceed at any one time 10 per cent of the authorized capital stock of the Corporation, or $50,000,000. The Senate bill contains no such limitation. The conferees adopt the House provision, but except from its operation advances to railroads under Federal control for the purpose of making additions, betterments, or road extensions.

SECTION 11.—PURCHASE AND SALE OF GOVERNMENT BONDS AND OBLIGATIONS.

The Senate bill authorizes the Corporation to subscribe for, acquire, and own, buy, sell, and deal in bonds and obligations of the United States to such extent as the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time determine. The House bill limits the power of the Corporation in that it only authorizes it to subscribe for, acquire, and own, buy, sell, and deal in bonds and obligations of the United States issued or converted since September 24, 1917, and only to such extent as the board of directors, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may from time to time determine. While the Senate bill would permit the Corporation to deal in Government bonds and obligations of all issues, the House bill would only authorize it to deal in such bonds and obligations issued or converted since September 24, 1917, the date the last bond act became a law. The conferees adopt the House provision.

SECTION 12.—CORPORATE AUTHORITY TO ISSUE BONDS.

The House bill authorizes the Corporation to issue $2,000,000,000 worth of bonds. The Senate bill authorizes it to issue $4,000,000,000 worth of bonds. The conferees authorize it to issue $3,000,000,000 worth of bonds.

The House bill provides that these bonds can not be offered for sale at less than par. Under the Senate bill the bonds could be offered for sale at less than par if the board of directors, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, should so determine. The conferees adopt the Senate provision.

The House bill requires the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury only as to the rate of interest, whereas the Senate bill requires such approval as to every corporate act in relation to the issue of its bonds. The conferees adopt the House provision.

Both bills authorize the issuance of bonds payable in foreign money; but the House bill contained fuller provisions therefor. The conferees adopt the House provision, with verbal changes.

SECTION 13.—FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS AUTHORIZED TO DISCOUNT PAPER SECURED BY WAR FINANCE CORPORATION BONDS.

Both bills authorize the Federal reserve banks to discount the direct obligations of the member banks secured by bonds of the Corporation and to rediscount eligible paper secured by such bonds and indorsed by a member bank.

The Senate bill provides that in the case of discount and rediscount of the obligations of member banks of the Federal Reserve System secured by bonds of the Corporation that the Federal Reserve Board may fix the rates at the same rates, or higher rates, than it provides for the purchase or rediscount of paper secured by bonds or notes of the United States. The House bill provides that no discount or rediscount under this section shall be granted at a less interest charge than 1 per cent per annum above the prevailing rates for eligible commercial paper of corresponding maturity. The conferees adopt the House provision.

The House bill contains another limitation, namely, that no discount or rediscount shall be granted of paper secured by the bonds of the Corporation unless the member bank satisfies the Federal reserve bank that it has in its possession for the purpose of the transaction insufficient commercial paper eligible for discount or rediscount under the regulations of the Federal Reserve Board, made under authority of the Federal reserve act. The Senate bill contains no similar provision. The conferees omit this provision.

SECTION 14.—PRESIDENT TO AUTHORIZE CORPORATION TO COMMENCE BUSINESS.

This section prohibits the Corporation from doing any business, except such as is incidental and preliminary to its organization, until it is authorized by the President to commence business. The Senate bill contains no similar provision. The conferees adopt the House section.

SECTION 15.—EARNINGS OF THE CORPORATION NOT REQUIRED FOR ITS OPERATION.

The Senate bill specifies certain uses that may be made of the net earnings of the Corporation not required for its operations upon the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. The House bill provides for similar disposition of such net earnings of the Corporation upon direction of the board of directors, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. The conferees adopt the House provision.

The Senate bill provides that the net earnings of the Corporation not required for its operations may be invested in any bonds, notes, or certificates of indebtedness of the United States. The House bill provides that such net earnings may be invested only in bonds and obligations of the United States issued or converted since September 24, 1917, the date of the passage of the last bond act. The conferees adopt the House provision.

The House bill provides that such net earnings or any other funds of the Corporation may be used in the purchase or redemption of any bonds issued by the Corporation. The Senate bill does not contain a similar provision. The conferees adopt the House provision.

The House bill provides that the directors of the Corporation may from time to time sell and dispose of any securities or other property acquired by the Corporation. The Senate bill does not contain a similar provision. The conferees adopt the House provision.

The Senate bill provides that any balance remaining after the payment of the debts of the Corporation shall be paid to and become the property of the United States. The House bill provides that such payment shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts. The conferees adopt the House provision.

SECTION 16.—BONDS OF THE CORPORATION TAX EXEMPT TO THE SAME EXTENT AS LIBERTY FOURS ARE EXEMPT.

The substance of the tax-exempt bond provisions of the two bills is identical. The House bill makes certain changes in the interest of clearness. The conferees adopt the House section.

SECTION 17.—THE UNITED STATES NOT TO BE LIABLE FOR OBLIGATIONS OF THE CORPORATION.

This section provides that the United States shall not be liable for the payment of any bond or other obligations or the interest thereon issued or incurred by the Corporation, nor shall it incur any liability in respect of any act or omission of the Corporation. The Senate bill contains no similar provision. The conferees adopt the House section.

SECTION 18.—PENALTY FOR PERJURY, FORGERY, AND EMBEZZLEMENT.

The substance of the penalty provision of the two bills is identical. Certain clerical changes have been made in the House bill in the interest of clearness. The House bill increases the penalty for false statements and willful overvaluation of securities from a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both, to "a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both." The House bill increases the forgery and embezzlement fine from $5,000, provided in the Senate bill, to $10,000. The conferees adopt the House provision, reducing the penalty for willful overvaluation of securities to fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

SECTION 19.—QUARTERLY REPORTS OF THE CORPORATION.

The Senate bill requires only reports with reference to direct advances made by the Corporation. The Senate bill requires a report of the name and place of business of each person, firm, corporation, or association receiving direct advances from the Corporation, the amount advanced, the terms and the securities accepted therefor. The House bill provides that the Corporation shall file quarterly reports with the Secretary of the Senate and with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, stating as of the 1st day of each month of the quarter just ended, (1) the total amount of capital paid in, (2) the total amount of bonds issued, (3) the total amount of bonds outstanding, (4) the total amount of advances made under each of sections 7, 8, and 9, (5) a list of the classes and amount of securities taken under each of such sections, (6) the total amount of advances outstanding under each of sections 7, 8, and 9, (7) the amount of bonds and obligations of the United States bought or sold under section 11, and (8) such other information as may be hereafter required by either House of Congress. The conferees adopt the House provision, omitting item (7).

The House bill also requires the Corporation to make a report to Congress on the first day of each regular session, including a detailed statement of receipts and expenditures. The conferees adopt this provision.

SECTION 20.—INDEBTEDNESS OF A NATIONAL BANKING ASSOCIATION.

This section provides that section 5202 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the indebtedness of a national banking association shall not apply in the case of any liability incurred by such association under the provisions of the War Finance Corporation act. This provision does not appear in the Senate bill. The conferees adopt the House section.

TITLE II.—CAPITAL ISSUES COMMITTEE.

SECTION 200.—CREATION OF CAPITAL ISSUES COMMITTEE.

The Senate bill provides that the capital issues committee shall be composed of five members. The House bill increases the membership to seven members. The Senate bill provides that three of the members shall be members of the Federal Reserve Board. The House bill provides that at least three of the members shall be members of the Federal Reserve Board. The conferees adopt the House provisions as to these matters.

The House bill provides that not more than four of the members of the committee shall be members of the same political party. The Senate bill contains no similar provision. The conferees omit this provision.

The House bill provides that no member or officer of the committee shall in any manner, directly or indirectly, participate in the determination of any question affecting his personal interest, or the interest of any corporation, partnership, or association in which he is directly or indirectly interested. Before entering upon his duties each member and officer shall certify under oath to the Secretary of the Treasury that he will comply with the provisions aforesaid, and he shall also take an oath faithfully to discharge the duties of his office. Nothing contained in this or in any other act shall be construed to prevent the appointment as a member of the committee of any officer or employee under the United States, or of a director of a Federal reserve bank. The Senate bill contains no similar provision. The conferees adopt the House provision, omitting the requirement of an oath to comply with the prohibition of participation by a member in any action affecting his personal interests.

Both bills fix the salary of the members of the committee who are not members of the Federal Reserve Board at $7,500 per annum. The House bill also provides that if any member receives any other compensation from any office or employment under the United States, the amount so received shall be deducted from such salary, and if such other compensation is $7,500 or more, that such member shall receive no salary as a member of the committee. The Senate bill contains no similar provision. The conferees adopt the House provision.

The Senate bill provides that the salary of the members of the committee shall be paid by the Corporation. The House bill provides that the salaries shall be paid by the Federal Government. The conferees adopt the House provision.

The House bill provides that any member of the committee shall be subject to removal by the President of the United States. The Senate bill contains no similar provision. The conferees adopt the House provision.

The House bill provides that the President shall designate one of the members of the committee as chairman, and that four members of the committee shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. The Senate bill contains no similar provision. The conferees adopt the House provisions, but add a clause providing that any vacancy in the chairmanship shall be filled by the committee.

SECTION 201.—OFFICERS, ATTORNEYS, AGENTS, AND OTHER EMPLOYEES OF THE COMMITTEE.

This section provides that the committee may employ and fix the compensation of such officers, attorneys, agents, and other employees as may be deemed necessary to conduct its business, who shall be appointed without regard to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883 (vol. 22, U. S. Stat. L., p. 403), and amendments thereto or any rules or regulations made in pursuance thereof. No such officer, attorney, agent, or employee shall receive more compensation than persons performing services of like or similar character under the Federal Reserve Board. The Senate bill contains no similar provision. The conferees adopt the House section.

SECTION 202.—TRANSACTION OF THE COMMITTEE BUSINESS.

This section provides that all the expenses of the committee, including all necessary expenses for transportation incurred by the members or by its officers, attorneys, agents, or employees under its order in making an investigation or upon official business in any other place than at their respective headquarters, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman. The committee may rent suitable offices for its use, and purchase such furniture, equipment, and supplies as may be necessary, but shall not expend more than $10,000 annually for offices in the District of Columbia. The principal office of the committee shall be in the District of Columbia, but it may meet and exercise all its powers at any other place. The committee may, by one or more of its members, or by such agents as it may designate, prosecute any inquiry necessary to its duties in any part of the United States. The Senate bill contains no similar provisions. The conferees adopt the House section.

SECTION 203.—COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE ISSUANCE OF SECURITIES.

This section authorizes the committee to investigate, pass upon, and determine whether it is compatible with the national interest that there should be sold or offered for sale or for subscription any issue, or any part of any issue, of securities hereafter issued by any person, firm, corporation, or association, the total or aggregate par or face value of which issue and any other securities issued by the same person, firm, corporation, or association since the passage of this act is in excess of $100,000. The Senate bill authorizes the committee to investigate, pass upon, and determine whether or not the sale or offering for sale or for subscription of any issue or any part of any issue of securities hereafter issued, the par or face value of which issue shall be in excess of $100,000, is compatible with the public interest. The House bill changes the expression "compatible with the public interest" to "compatible with the national interest." The conferees adopt the House provisions.

The Senate bill authorizes the committee to make rules and regulations, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, with reference to passing upon such issues of securities. The House bill leaves the making of rules and regulations to the discretion of the committee. The conferees adopt the House provision.

The Senate bill provides that the issues of shares or securities heretofore made, only a part of which have been sold or disposed of prior to the passage of the bill, shall not be affected by the provisions of the bill. The House bill provides that any securities which upon the date of the passage of this act are in the possession or control of, or are in hypothecation by, the corporation, association, or obligor issuing the same shall be deemed to have been issued after the passage of this act. The conferees adopt the House provision, omitting the words "or are in hypothecation by."

The House bill provides that nothing in this bill shall be construed to authorize the committee to pass upon (1) any borrowing by any person, firm, corporation, or association in the ordinary course of business as distinguished from borrowing for capital purposes, (2) the sale or offering for sale or subscription of securities the issue of which the committee has determined to be necessary to the renewing or refunding of indebtedness existing at the time of the passage of this act, (3) the resale of any securities the sale or offering of which the committee has determined to be compatible with the national interest, (4) any securities issued by any railroad corporation the property of which may be in the possession and control of the President of the United States, or (5) any bonds issued by the War Finance Corporation. The provision is substantially the same as the provisions of the Senate bill, except that items (3) and (5) are not included in the Senate provision, and that the Senate bill in place of item (2) provided that the act should not apply to "borrowing to renew or refund indebtedness existing at the time of the approval of this act." The conferees adopt the House provision, amending item (2) so that nothing in the bill shall be construed to authorize the committee to pass upon "the renewing or refunding of indebtedness existing at the time of the passage of this act."

SECTION 204.—APPROPRIATION OF $200,000 FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT AND MAINTENANCE OF THE COMMITTEE.

This section provides that there is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the remainder of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the sum of $200,000 for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the establishment and maintenance of the committee, including the payment of the salaries and rents herein authorized. The Senate bill contains no similar provision. The conferees adopt the House section.

SECTION 205.—ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

This section provides that the committee shall make a report to Congress on the first day of each regular session, including a detailed statement of receipts and expenditures, and also including the names of officers and employees and the salary paid to each. The Senate bill contains no similar provision. The conferees adopt the House section.

SECTION 206.—TERMINATION OF THE WORK OF THE CAPITAL-ISSUES COMMITTEE.

This section of the House bill provides that the capital-issues committee title shall continue in effect until, but not after, the expiration of six months after the termination of the war, the date of such termination to be determined by a proclamation of the President of the United States, but that the President may at any time by proclamation declare that this title is no longer necessary, and thereupon it shall cease to be in effect. The Senate bill contains no similar provision. The conferees adopt the House section.

TITLE III.—MISCELLANEOUS.

SECTION 300.—PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS OF ACT NOT COVERED BY SECTION 18.

This section provides that whoever willfully violates any of the provisions of this act, except where a different penalty is provided in this act, shall, upon conviction in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than five years, or both; and whoever knowingly participates in any such violation, except where a different penalty is provided in this act, shall be punished by a like fine or imprisonment, or both. The similar Senate penalty provision is substantially the same, except that the penalty provided in the Senate bill is a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both, and except that the clause "except where a different penalty is provided in this act" does not appear in the Senate bill. The conferees adopt the House section, reducing the maximum term of imprisonment from five years to one year.

SECTION 301.—STAMP TAX TO APPLY TO PROMISSORY NOTES SECURED BY LIBERTY FOURS

This section provides that no stamp tax shall be required or imposed upon a promissory note secured by the pledge of bonds or obligations of the United States issued since April 24, 1917, or secured by the pledge of a promissory note which itself is secured by the pledge of such bonds or obligations: Provided, That in either case the par value of such bonds or obligations shall equal the amount of such note. The Senate bill does not contain a similar provision. The conferees adopt the House section.

SECTION 302.— THE SAVINGS CLAUSE.

The savings-clause provisions of the two bills are identical.

SECTION 303.—DEFINITION OF THE TERM "SECURITIES."

The definition of the term "securities" is the same in the two bills, except the House bill specifically provides that the term "securities" includes "shares of stock" and "debentures." The conferees adopt the House section.

SECTION 304.—RIGHT TO AMEND, ALTER, OR REPEAL ACT RESERVED.

This provision is exactly the same in the two bills.

SECTION 305.—SHORT TITLE OF THE ACT.

This section provides that the short title of the act shall be the "War Finance Corporation Act." The Senate bill does not contain a similar provision. The conferees adopt the House section.

SECTION 306.—REPEALING PROVISION.

This section provides that all provisions of any act or acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed. The Senate bill does not contain a similar provision. The conferees adopt the House section.

TITLE.

The conferees amend the title to read as follows:

"An act to provide further for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and to supervise the issuance of securities, and for other purposes."

CLAUDE KITCHIN,
HENRY T. RAINEY,
LINCOLN DIXON,
J. HAMPTON MOORE,
WILLIAM R. GREEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of order on the report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, in section 7 of the bill, and in section 7 of the bill as set forth in the House report, the conferees have stricken out the term "market value" as applied to securities which are required to be given in addition to the collateral securities, the market value of which is to be determined by the board of directors; and this market value, it was required in the bill, should be equal to a certain per cent of the amount advanced by the corporation.

The SPEAKER. What section is that?

Mr. WALSH. Section 7, page 9 of the bill, and also on page 23 of the bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would state to the gentleman that the word "market" is taken out all through the bill before the word "value."

The SPEAKER. Section 7 does not come on page 9.

Mr. WALSH. Page 23. Is the Chair referring to the report? It is on page 3 of the report of the conferees. The part to which I am making the point of order is the last proviso, at the bottom of page 3:

Provided, That every such advance shall be secured in the manner described in the preceding part of this section, and in addition thereto by collateral security, to be furnished by the bank, banker, or trust company, of such character as shall be prescribed by the board of directors, of a value, at the time of such advance (as estimated and determined by the board of directors of the Corporation), equal to at least 33 per cent of the amount advanced by the Corporation. The Corporation shall retain power to require additional security at any time.

The SPEAKER. What is the objection that the gentleman is urging?

Mr. WALSH. The objection that I urge is that the conferees have, by striking out the word "market" before "value," changed the value, which must be estimated by the board of directors. In other words, as the bill left the House these securities must have been of a market value equal to a certain per cent. Now, the conferees have stricken out the word "market," and they could estimate the face value or the book value or the nominal value as being the certain per cent as required by the act.

Now, I submit in support of the point of order that the value of these securities in the legislation was to be the market value. That has a certain fixed and definite meaning. The conferees had no authority to change the character of the value or the requirements as attached to the value, notwithstanding the fact that the value was to be estimated by the board of directors.

Now, the words "market value" were included in the measure as reported and adopted by the House. The term "market value" was included in the measure as it came to the House from another body, so that this particular value, which was to be estimated, which was to be applied to these securities, was not in dispute. There was no question whatever about the value, and by striking out the term "market," as the conferees did in this respect and as they also did in section 8, and, I think, in one or possibly two other portions of the bill, they have widened or broadened the discretion of this board of directors so that they could estimate the face value of these securities to be 33 per cent of the amount advanced by the Corporation, or they could estimate simply the book value, or it might be some fanciful value, to be 33 per cent of the amount advanced by the Corporation, whereas the House, by adopting the language which was in the measure confined the value to be estimated by the board of directors to the market value, which has a plain acceptation in commercial and legal usage.

I submit that the conferees were not authorized to change that value by striking out the term "market" before the word "value" and throwing this estimate of value open to an interpretation which might not require the same value or the same worth of securities, as would be required if they were compelled to estimate the market value.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I really think there is very little merit in the proposition propounded by the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to ask a question. This is a Senate bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. I was going to make that point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was going to inquire further. It is a Senate bill passed by the House. The question is, Were these changes that the gentleman complains of made in the conference committee after the House and Senate had agreed upon certain language?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; but I was going to answer that the merit of the proposition suggested by the gentleman has nothing to do with it, because as the bill passed the House, where the term "market value" was used, the parantheses shows that it did not mean the market value, but such value as the board of directors estimated. It says "as estimated and determined by the board of directors of the Corporation."

The SPEAKER. Where is that?

Mr. KITCHIN. On page 7.

Mr. WALSH. Page 23 of the bill. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman would not pretend to say that to provide that the board of directors should estimate the market value of a security would be equivalent to saying that they should estimate the value of a security?

Mr. KITCHIN. If there is a market value, there is no estimation whatever by the board. There is no estimation. But the very fact that we said it was to be estimated by them showed that it was not market value in the sense in which the gentleman refers to it.

Mr. WALSH. It might be a character of security, as I think the gentleman pointed out in the discussion of this measure in the House. It might be a character of security that would not be quoted in the market, upon which there would be no quotation in the stock list, as published in the commercial publications, as to which it might be necessary for somebody to estimate its market value; that it might not have the well-known market value in commercial circles, but it might be necessary for somebody to estimate what its market value was, and I think the gentleman will recall that he cited such instances as that in discussing this measure on the floor in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KITCHIN. I cited this: I made the motion to put in "if no market value, then the actual value." I said to the House there was no use in doing that, because the words in parentheses would allow them to do that anyway. It would not be confined to the market value.

But, Mr. Speaker, regardless of whether the distinction is proper or not, under rulings of the Chair that have been unbroken for years, this is clearly not subject to a point of order. This is a Senate bill. It came over here, and the House wrote a new bill, by striking out all after the enacting clause and putting its new bill in one amendment, which is substituted for the Senate bill, and the rulings of Speakers have been unbroken for 20 years or more, that when you strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, or when you strike out all of a section of a bill and insert a new one, the whole subject matter is in conference. The conferees can write a new bill or a new section, and under the rulings of the Chair and the rules of the House, the conferees could have stricken out the "market value" and that whole section, and their action would not have been subject to a point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take issue with the contention just made by the gentleman from North Carolina. I understand that under the precedents, when a measure comes to this body and a motion is made to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a new measure, the conferees have in general broad discretion, and the present Speaker has made such a ruling. But when a measure comes to this House from the other branch, and a motion is made to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a new measure, and when that new bill contains language which is identical with the bill as it first came here, and that language is retained, and then the bill goes to conference, it is not within the province of the conferees, when neither House has disagreed to the particular language or to the identical language, to get into a dispute about that language, because both Houses have agreed upon the language and there is no disagreement concerning it. If the gentleman's contention was correct, the conferees, under the conditions he has stated, could strike out the language of both these measures and bring in a bond bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. They certainly could, and the Chair has held, a dozen times or more, that they could do that, that they could strike out, and write an entirely new bill on the same subject matter. So long as the measure which they reported related to the War Finance Corporation, they could have created it differently, they could have appointed different officers, who had different powers, just so it referred to the subject matter and was within the scope of the subject matter. The Chair has held that a dozen times. Has the gentleman any precedent there to the contrary?

Mr. WALSH. I should like to cite one precedent in Volume V of Hinds' Precedents, section 6421, where the Speaker said:

> The Chair understands that the Senate adopted a substitute for the House bill. If the two Houses had agreed upon any particular language, or any part of a section, the committee of conference could not change that; but the Senate having stricken out the bill of the House and inserted another one, the committee of conference have the right to strike out that and report a substitute in its stead.

Mr. KITCHIN. Surely.

Mr. WALSH. The Speaker further said:

> Two separate bills have been referred to the committee, and they can take either one of them, or a new bill entirely, or a bill embracing parts of either.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is the authority I cite.

Mr. WALSH. That is the authority the gentleman is relying on.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am relying on all of them.

The SPEAKER. What Speaker rendered that decision?

Mr. WALSH. Speaker CANNON.

Mr. KITCHIN. Speaker Henderson held that, and Speaker CANNON held that, and the present Speaker has held that, as to the tariff bill; and in the amendment to the Federal reserve act that very point came up in a case just like this.

Mr. WALSH. That is the authority I rely upon, that the Senate and the House having agreed upon identical language, the conferees are not empowered to take any action with reference to language which is not in dispute. The sole purpose of sending a bill to conference is to adjust differences, to compromise differences between the two Houses. Now, when the House struck out all after the enacting clause and inserted the bill which was sent to conference, it adopted the very language that the Senate had put into the measure, providing that the market value of these securities should be estimated. I submit that it would not be within the province of the conferees to change that "market value" by saying "face value," nor would it be within the province of the conferees to eliminate that provision entirely, because there was no dispute about that. There was no controversy over it, and the matter was not referred to the conferees to adjust any differences between the two branches with reference to that, but only to adjust differences between the two measures where they clashed, as it were, where it was necessary for some compromise to be reached, or for some of the provisions to be adjusted, so as to meet the views of the two branches, and harmonize the different opinions that might exist between the two bodies. I submit that it is going far afield, when a measure comes to the House, and the expedient is adopted of striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting another measure which may differ in some of its provisions, to say that you can write an entirely new measure. It would be different if the House had written a bill which differed in every word or every line or every paragraph from that of the Senate, but where there were certain portions of it which agreed and where the language of it was identical, and where the House used the same phraseology, I submit that even under the authority which I have cited and the long line of precedents which have followed, and under the broad, general language which the Speaker has used, the action of the conferees in this case is subject to the point of order.

Mr. SNYDER. If the gentleman will yield, I should like to make a suggestion. If this argument is predicated upon the value of corporate shares, I should like to say that the Government of the United States, through the Internal-Revenue Department, has practically fixed the amount at which corporate shares shall be estimated. I has fixed the ratio on corporate stock, as anyone here who owns any well knows.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman knows that the Internal-Revenue Department has nothing to do with this estimate.

Mr. SNYDER. I thought the gentleman's argument was based on somebody having the right to estimate the value of corporate shares.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; and they do not have to do what the Internal-Revenue Department prescribes.

Mr. SNYDER. But they do.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is not familiar with the provisions of the bill; it has no relation to what he is speaking of.

Mr. SNYDER. The Internal-Revenue Department has ruled that corporation shares that earn 10 per cent shall be valued at par.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman knows that this has nothing to do with taxation.

Mr. SNYDER. I did not know that.

Mr. WALSH. It has not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman from Massachusetts familiar with the decision rendered by the present Speaker in the Sixty-second Congress, in which he held——

Mr. WALSH. I was about to refer to it when interrupted by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In which he held that where everything was stricken out after the enacting clause an entirely new bill might be written?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; and he states that the conferees have the whole subject before them, but that does not go to the extent of saying that the conferees have any authority to inject new matter not in dispute. They have the whole subject before them and can adjust the differences which have arisen and which exist by virtue of the two separate bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina how much time he thinks this will occupy.

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not think it will take 10 minutes. The statement on the part of the House conferees covers every single point of difference and every single change in the bill as it was passed by the House. Gentlemen must observe that there have been very few changes made in conference.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.
Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I think it must be evident to the House that the House is under deep obligation to the committee of conference. No conference committee of the House during my experience has secured as many confirmations of its own judgment as the conferees in this case have done. In every case, too, I think, where there has been a disagreement the action of the conferees has secured concurrence in the language used by the House as against the language used in the Senate, and it has been clearly the correct one, so that the bill that was finally reported is more nearly the bill of the House than any important bill that ever went to conference within my knowledge.
Mr. KITCHIN. I thank the gentleman on behalf of the managers on the part of the House.
Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.
Mr. LONGWORTH. May I ask the gentleman the meaning of the language in section 8——
Mr. KITCHIN. With reference to the interest required of savings banks? That was an amendment that we suggested. We required the savings banks to pay a differential of not less than 1 per cent in excess of the prevailing rate of interest on commercial paper to the Federal reserve bank in the district where the savings bank is located. In some cases, in looking over the rate charged, we found that it was really larger than the rate that the savings banks were getting from their customers, and in some cases smaller. We did not wish to impose a burden on the savings banks, and therefore we qualified the 1 per cent differential in this way.
It declares that if the rate charged by the savings bank to its customers prevailing for six months before the advance is made was less than the prevailing rate at the Federal Reserve Bank plus the 1 per cent, then the rate charged by the corporation to the savings bank should not exceed the average rate that the bank had been receiving for six months previous to the advance. Otherwise no savings bank could be helped at all. We did not want the corporation to charge the savings bank a larger rate of interest than the savings bank was getting, and, on the other hand, we did not want the savings bank to make any profit out of the corporation.
Mr. LONGWORTH. That was the adjustment between the one-half per cent proposed by the Senate and the 1 per cent by the House.
Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. The House insisted on 1 per cent and the Senate on one-half of 1 per cent. We compromised so that the savings banks would not pay any more interest to the corporation than is received from its loans. If the bank received on its loans 6 per cent and the prevailing rate was 5, then it must pay 5 plus 1, or 6 per cent; and if it got from its loans 5 per cent and the prevailing rate was 5 per cent, then the corporation can not charge the savings bank but 5 per cent. If the prevailing rate was 4½ per cent in the Federal bank and the savings bank was only receiving 5 per cent the corporation would still charge only 5 per cent.
Mr. MADDEN. This is an adjustment of the differential as proposed by the Senate and the House.
Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think, speaking of the merits of the change from market value to value, I can say that that was the point upon which the conferees were absolutely unanimous on both sides.
Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I think one of the House conferees moved to strike out the word "market" because it was confusing.
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; it was confusing. In the legal sense there is no difference between the value and market value. Where there is a market value it is the value, and so construed by the courts. One of the definitions of value given in the dictionary is "market value." We thought if it stood as it was originally it was simply confusing and would give rise to some difference of opinion, where there might be contention, because there was no definite market value, and therefore the conferees were unanimous in striking out the word "market."
Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.
Mr. McFADDEN. I want to ask the gentleman a question in regard to the language in section 9 of the statement of the conferees, page 16, where the House conferees say:

The conferees adopt the House provision, changing 133 per cent to 125 per cent and providing that advances to railroads under Federal control for the purpose of making additions, betterments, or road extensions shall be secured by security deemed adequate by the directors of the corporation.

I want to ask the gentleman why he separates railroads from the other industries which are to be benefited under the provisions of this bill?
Mr. KITCHIN. I am going to answer the gentleman in the general statement I am about to make to the House. There are only three material changes made in the House bill by the conferees. There are some minor changes, but they are not material. The first change that is material is with respect to the power of the corporation to issue its bonds and the limit of the amount. The Senate bill gave the corporation the power to issue $4,000,000,000 of bonds. The House bill cuts that down to $2,000,000,000 and the conferees agreed on $3,000,000,000. That is one of the material changes. The other material changes are in section 9, known as the direct-loan section. That was the big bone of contention, and we wrangled over it for three or four days. We finally came to the compromise settlement which appears in the report and the statement. The differences between the House bill and the conference agreement are, first, the House bill provided that under that direct-loan provision the corporation could not make advances in an amount in excess of 16⅔ per cent of the paid-in capital stock and bonds authorized to be issued and outstanding at the time of the advance. This would make a total amount which the corporation could advance under that direct-loan provision, when the total capital of $500,000,000 is paid in and the $2,000,000,000 had been issued, of $416,666,666.
Under this provision, through the conferees raising the limit of the amount of issue from $2,000,000,000 to $3,000,000,000, we cut down the per cent that could be loaned under this section 9 to 12½ per cent, which will give the corporation, on the basis of the total amount of capital stock authorized—$500,000,000—and the amount of the bonds authorized to be issued—$3,000,000,000—a direct loan advancing power of $437,500,000, so that in the grand total, after everything is issued and the money paid in there is a difference between the original House bill of $416,000,000 and the conference report of $437,000,000—not enough for us to wrangle all the year about. Under the bill as it was originally submitted to the Committee on Ways and Means, it provided that the advance made under this section should be secured by adequate security, and under the bill as it passed the House it required a security equal to 133 per cent of the advance, as additional security, and in the conference report that is reduced to 125 per cent, but we excepted railroads from that limitation. In the House bill the railroads were not excepted from any of the limitations of the bill, or any of the limitations in section 9.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is, only such as are under the control of the President?
Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.
Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.
Mr. MADDEN. So that you increased the aggregate amount that could be obtained by a corporation and reduced the value of the security that it would have to supply for the loan?
Mr. KITCHIN. Only 5 per cent.
Mr. MADDEN. Eight per cent.
Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. The bill as it was originally sent to the House and as it passed the Senate required only additional security to the extent of adequate security. The Ways and Means Committee required that it must be not less than 133 per cent of the advance and the House adopted that provision.
The Senate bill required no additional security over adequate security, and out of the contest we agreed that instead of having an adequate security unlimited it should be 125 per cent, instead of 133 per cent, and in the case of railroads under the control of the President that they should be excepted from the limitations only, however, to the extent of the advance which should be made for betterments, additions, and extensions. In other words, they could not lend any of that money for refunding, which was what we thought the original scheme was.
Mr. LONGWORTH. Not to finance the road at all.
Mr. KITCHIN. Personally I think it is a better protection to the corporation and to the Government to have that exception made to the railroad, limiting the advance to betterments, additions, and extensions, than it would have been to have it open, as we had it where it could be used for refunding purposes.
Mr. McFADDEN. Might that not also mean that if, in the judgment of the directors, they see fit to take a plain railroad note, without collateral, that that might be considered "adequate security"?
Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman must understand that the Senate bill and the original bill used only the words "adequate security," and that we changed it to require additional security equal to 133 per cent of the advance. As to advances made to railroads in the hands of the President for betterments, extensions, and additions, we accept the Senate proposition that it should be only adequate security.

Mr. McFADDEN. I was asking for information, not criticizing. I want to know whether advances could be made to railroad companies on their plain note, face value, without other security?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; just as they could have done under the original bill sent to the Committee on Ways and Means and under the Senate bill, if the directors under their oaths and in their business judgment should decide that the plain note of a railroad company for advances for betterments, extensions, and additions is adequate security.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The real security being the fact that the physical property of the railroads is in the hands of the Government.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And likely to stay there long after this war is over?
